Loulie bought a paper of candies at the counter, poured half of them into Hugh's basket, and away she ran. And the boy, greatly cheered and comforted, finished his pretty work, and then followed her as she had bidden him.

Poor fellow! He almost wished he had not ventured, as he hobbled up the broad walk, and timidly pulled the bell at the door of that imposing building.

'She told me to, "thought he, „but what will they say to me?'

But Loulie was not the girl to do things by the halves. She had sought out the principal, and coaxingly told him of her protege; and, when Hugh's ring was heard, the door was quickly opened, and Loulie smilingly bade him enter.

It was Saturday morning; and therefore the young ladies were not a little astonished to hear the triangle sounded long before dinner.

"What's the matter?" said one and another, as they gathered from their rooms to obey the sommons.

"Miss Royce is calling the classes in an absent-minded fit, I suspect," said one merry girl.

But down they all flocked, and when they saw the pale-faced cripple in the hall with his basket, they took it all in at once.

"Oh, what beauties!"

"I must have a bunch!"

"And I!"

"Oh, dear, I've spent my last dime. You'll lend me one till Monday, won't you, Helen, that's a dear?"

And so, in a very few minutes all the bunches were sold. Hugh's eyes shone with grateful happiness, as he glanced slyly up at Miss Loulie.

"I'm much obliged to you all," he said, simply.

"And we are much obliged to you for bringing us the arbutus," said one gentle little girl.

"Yes, indeed," exclaimed several. "We haven't had any so sweet as this."

Hugh was too happy to feel tired as his crutches tapped along the sidewalk on the way home.

"Mother, Jenny, oh, see!" he cried. "I've sold all my flowers, and here's all this money—a dollar and a half—oh, mother!"

Mother understood fully now from the tone in which this was uttered, what had so troubled her boy.

She stroked his hair very lovingly, as she said:

"You've done bravely, sonney, and the money will be a great help. But, Hugh, dear, if you shouldn't have another such chance for a long time, you mustn't fret about it again. Give up your lame feet and your willing hands, and a loving heart with them, to serve the Lord just as He wants you to, and he can make use of you, Hughie, as Jenny's hymn says, and He will. Yes, and He will make you a help and a comfort to father and mother, too. You are that now, dear, most days."

"Only when I fret, mother," said Hugh, smiling through his tears. "I'll try not to feel that way again."

Not long after, Jenny was heard singing again:

Thou usest tree and flower,
The river vast and small,
The eagle great, the little bird
That sings upon the wall!

"Yes, and even poor, good-for-nothing me," whispered Hugh to himself.—The Pacific.

An Interrupted Prayer.

Some seventy years ago, when a menagerie was almost a thing unknown, and a solitary wild beast was now and then carried about the country for exhibition, says the Wide Awake, a certain New England village was thrown into great commotion by the news that an elephant was to be exhibited in a neighboring town. The village which is the scene of my story was not large enough to induce his exhibitors to make any stay there, but his road lay through it. Now an elephant could not be packed away or in any manner be kept out of sight. His journey must be made in full view, and everybody could get a look at him, and everybody was excited accordingly. Day after day passed—no elephant. The exhibition had been advertised for a Monday, and Saturday night had come, with no tidings of the famous traveler. Sunday morning! The "sound of the church-going bell" summoned the people. Parson Adams had begun "the long prayer" and the congregation stood, devoutly attentive, to all appearance. But there was at least one exception, for Dr. Dobson's pew, near an open window, commanded a view of the highway, and Dr. Dobson's eyes, wide open, were fixed upon the prospect. A cloud of dust arose—then—slowly above the hill opposite the window the head of the huge beast came into sight. The eager doctor forgot time and place, and, shouting, "The elephant's coming! there he is!" he was out of the window like a dart. Off rushed the congregation, and whether Parson Adams finished his prayer tradition has not told.

She Kept Her Vow.

A singular person has just died at Ofen, in Hungary. Fraulein Lina,—had not for thirty years gone outside her house. The fraulein was the daughter of well-to-do parents. Thirty years ago she was a pretty girl, and was about to be married. Her lover one day, "to test her obedience and love," desired her on a certain feast day not to go into the streets. She promised she would not, but did not keep her promise, and went into the town. The next day her lover came to see her and straightway released her from her engagement, saying that a lady who could not make so small a sacrifice was not suitable to be his wife. Miss Lina, by way of "castigation and exercise devout," thereupon made a vow that never again during her lifetime would she leave her house—and she kept her word!—London Daily News.

A Ghastly Watch Charm.

I have known men to carry about unmeaning relics in my time, but Joe Gasper, a member of the Indianapolis council, has a watch charm which is enough to give some people the horrors. Several years ago he had two of his toes amputated, and he preserved them in alcohol. The bottle was accidently broken, and Joe threw the toes into a box in his garret. Not long since he ran across the toes and found that they were mummified completely. Though greatly shrunken, their forms were still perfect. He had them mounted in gold in unique designs, and now wears them as pendants to his watch chain, and claims that the strange charm has brought him good luck.—Palliator.

AMMONIA BAKING POWDERS MUST GO.

Baking Powder Bill Passed by the Minnesota Senate.

The recent newspaper discussion of the dangerous qualities of ammonia comes from the alarming increase of its use in baking powders. People who absorb it in small quantities from day to day suffer from slow ammonia poisoning. Taken internally in sufficient quantities it eats away the coatings of the stomach and intestines and causes death. Slow ammonia poisoning produces various forms of stomach trouble.

Not one woman in ten thousand would use an Ammonia Baking Powder if she knew it. Such Powders not only undermine the health, but Ammonia imparts a sallow and blotched complexion.

Following is the bill recently passed by the Minnesota Senate. It's the danger signal which the law throws out for the protection of the people:

A BILL FOR AN ACT TO REGULATE THE TRAFFIC IN BAKING POWDER.

Section 1.—Any person who shall knowingly sell or procure the sale, or offer for sale any package or can of Baking Powder, containing any Ammonia in it, not distinctly, legible and durably branded, stamped or marked in a conspicuous place with the words in the English language. "This Baking Powder contains Ammonia" in letters of great pica or any letters equivalent thereto in length, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by a fine not less than $20 nor more than $50; shall be confined in the County Jail not less than ten or more than twenty days or by both fine and imprisonment, in the direction of the court.

Section 2.—The Sale or offer for sale of the substance mentioned in the foregoing section in packages not stamped, marked, branded or labelled as therein required, shall be prima-facie evidence of knowledge of the character of said substance, on the part of the person so selling or offering for sale and his employer.

Section 3.—This Act shall be in force on and after its passage.

NOTE.—An incident occurred in the House when the Senate bill came up for passage, in reference to an amendment proposed by Mr. Diment. This was opposed by several members. Mr. Feig said that if the bill as it came from the Senate was all right then the amendment was all wrong. The amendment compelling the printing of the word "Ammonia" on the label only effected the Royal Baking Powder, and no wonder they felt the Senate bill was a blow at them.

Absence of Mind.

Some people find it hard, in using the telephone, to realize that they are not face to face with the person they are addressing.

A prominent merchant in the capital city of a State sat at his desk one hot day in July. In order to secure some degree of comfort he had taken off his coat and his collar and necktie.

A clerk came into the room.

"His excellency, the governor, wishes to speak with you through the telephone," said the clerk.

"The governor! Dear me!" said the merchant.

He rose, hastily put on his collar, his necktie, and his coat, gave his hair a stroke; and went, to the telephone to answer the governor's call.

Where parents should send their sons to college next year is a question it is about time to decide. Many things must be considered, economy is a very important one, there is a great difference among colleges in this respect. We know of one college (Macalaster, between the twin cities) where several students boarded themselves on $1.25 a week and lived well. They were among the best students in the college. This is mighty cheap and Macalaster is a fine institution.

"German Syrup"

A Cough and Croup Medicine.

For children a medicine should be absolutely reliable. A mother must be able to pin her faith to it as to her Bible. It must contain nothing violent, uncertain, or dangerous. It must be standard in material and manufacture. It must be plain and simple to administer; easy and pleasant to take. The child must like it. It must be prompt in action, giving immediate relief, as childrens' troubles come quick, grow fast, and end fatally or otherwise in a very short time. It must not only relieve quick but bring them around quick, as children chafe and fret and spoil their constitutions under long confinement. It must do its work in moderate doses. A large quantity of medicine in a child is not desirable. It must not interfere with the child's spirits, appetite or general health. These things suit old as well as young folks, and make Boschee's German Syrup the favorite family medicine. ®

Tommy Fay, aged 5 years, is dying at St. Francis Hospital, Pittsburg, from the effect of liquor alleged to have been poured down his throat by his parents. The parents were arrested and sent to the workhouse.

In San Francisco Richard Kentzel and Anthony Scragge exchanged shots during a saloon quarrel. Scragge was fatally wounded through the abdomen. Kentzel had the bone of his right leg shattered, and it is thought probably his wound will also prove fatal.

A sensation is brewing in civic circles in Chicago, Ald. McDonald having made affidavits which he has laid before the mayor that seven aldermen accepted boodle from a railroad now endeavoring to get entrance into the city. Two of the suspected aldermen have left the city.

At Pueblo, Col., W. C. Barker shot Bruce Venus three times. One bullet passed through Venus's body and struck Barker's wife, making a dangerous wound in the thigh. Mrs. Baker is a teacher in the Indian school at Albuquerque, and Barker was jealous of Venus's attentions to her.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The largest grain fleet of the season arrived at Buffalo. The receipts were 1,500,000 bushels of wheat and 400,000 bushels of corn.

A New York Herald Philadelphia special says that the books of the Keystone bank show that the $945,000 represented by the due bills actually went into the bank.

At the armor plate mill of Carnegie, Phipps & Co., Pittsburg, an armor ingot 80 inches wide and 23 inches thick, weighing 32,000 pounds, the largest armor plate ingot rolled in this country, has just been cast.

The agents representing companies controlling the interior and Western anthracite coal markets held their monthly meeting at New York and decided not to reduce prices.

A crop of forced peaches from Hunterdon and Warren counties, N. J., is being put upon the market. The good peaches will be a large crop, many of the orchards yielding an average of 1,000 baskets.

At San Francisco, a run began on the Peoples Home Savings Bank, and several thousand dollars was paid back to depositors. The bank commissioners have begun an investigation of the bank's affairs. The bank's officers state that the institution is perfectly solvent.

At San Francisco in the United States circuit court Judge Hawley dissolved an injunction restraining Chief Engineer Scannell from complying with an order of the San Francisco board of supervisors requiring him to remove all over head electric wires.

The Missouri is rapidly eating away a narrow neck of land near St. Joseph, Mo. If this occurs the course will be changed, the railroad bridge rendered useless and the city cut off from railroad communication.

The lead trust is in progress of reorganization. The plan provides for the scaling down of the capital from $87,000,000 to 30,000,000, of which half will be 7 per cent preferred stock and the other half common stock, and also authorizes the issue of $3,000,000 in bonds. The reorganized corporation is subject to the New Jersey laws.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

MINNESOTA.

Joseph L. Meyer was appointed county treasurer of Morrison county in place of S. Stoll, deceased. The appointment gives universal satisfaction.

William Donaldson died at the residence of his son, C. W. Donaldson, at Plainview, aged eighty-six years. Mr. Donaldson was a prominent Odd Fellow.

The North Dakota Elevator company commenced to erect a 30,000 bushels capacity elevator at Hector, making an elevator capacity at this place of 160,000 bushels.

Fourteen acres of wheat on the Philbrick farm near Waterville, yielded 451 bushels, an average of 32 3-14 bushels per acre of No. 1 wheat. Two acres on another farm yielded 90 bushels.

A Kerkhoven special says wheat, oats and flax a first class crop. The present dry weather insures the wheat crop to ripen with full kernel and unusually large acreage this season. Harvesting will begin in about a week.

Messrs. P. M. and E. D. Graff, of Duluth, are endeavoring to induce several of the New York capitalists who were there recently to join them in opening a large bank in Duluth. The Graffs would put in at least $100,000.

The nude man discovered at River Falls has recovered so he can write in German, but cannot talk. He says his name is Hoffman, and that he has friends in New Frier, Minn., but refuses to give their names. He is evidently insane.

The last bids for Dakota county bonds were opened at the session of the county commissoners and the award made to the St. Paul Title Insurance and Trust company at par and accrued interest and a premium of three-eights of 1 per cent.

The violation of the fish laws in Lake Pepin below Red Wing, is now attracting general attention. Tons of fish are being taken out of the lake with seine and net in violation of all law and usage and the lake is being rapidly depleted of all live fish.

Mrs. P. R. Hanson, of Albert Lea, arrested on a charge of keeping a house of ill-fame, was arraigned before Justice Hall in Alden on a change of venue and waived examination, giving bonds in the sum of $250 to appear before the grand jury in December.

Dr. Frank E. Heath, of Campbell, was shot and killed by a companion with whom he was hunting. The shooting was purely accidental. Dr. Heath was a single man and had lived at Campbell a number of years, where he has been a physician with a large practice.

Burglars set fire to the barn of James Thomas, a farmer living in Wynette, Isanti county, six miles from Princeton. While the attention of the family was called to the barn, the house was entered, a chest containing $200 dragged from the house to a marsh some distance away and the money extracted.

Jacob Campbell, a member of the Salvation Army, a while since arrested and jailed with others for parading the streets, at Northfield brought suit against the city, in the sum of $3,000, for illegal imprisonment. Warrants were served on Mayor Norton, Chief of Police Frank White and Special C. Bullock.

The Mankato board of trade selected Senator Bar and ex-Senator Pope delegates to the state convention Aug. 13. These gentlemen are in full sympathy with the commission for additional money for world's fair purposes, and are backed by strong public sentiment here. Mankato is the first city in the state to take action in this important movement.

Swen Nelson a patient at the St. Peter hospital, was drowned in the Minnesota river. He was committed from Jackson county about two years ago, and had been working about the dining room for some time. When he was missed search was immediately instituted, but he was not seen again until his body was found in the river. His death was accidental. He was 51 years old.

The state board of examiners in law have been holding their first law examination at Mankato as required under the new law. Messrs. Snow, Ozmun, Knox, Williams and Southworth are the examiners. The candidates are W. S. Hammond, Frank Clague and W. R. Geddes of Mankato, Messrs. McMahon and Collins of Duluth, and Mr. Wilson of Faribault. The examination is very thorough as well as technical, and will last three days.

The Y. M. C. A. of the two Dakotas and Minnesota have taken possession of the 20 acres of land on the shore of Lake Minnewaska, that the citizens of this place donated them, and are now preparing the grounds to hold their first Northwestern Institute, which will occur from Aug. 4 to 14. There are now five carloads of lumber upon the ground, and one car load of boats. Some of the most prominent instructors in the Northwest will be here to take charge of the institute.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Joseph Amstett, 10 years old, son of N. Amstett, was seriously wounded at Grand Forks by a shot from a repeating rifle.

Harvest hands are very scarce and it is feared that some of the grain around Forman will suffer from lack of help to properly care for it.

Advices from Ardock state that a hailstorm, extending over about six hundred acres, passed a half mile north of Ardock, totally destroying the crops.

Work is in progress at Forman on a county jail which is being built at the expense of the town in compliance with a pledge made during the county seat fight last fall.

E. B. Rollins, a druggist at Hunter, a small town west of Grandin, is missing on account of information made by the W. C. T. U., charging him with selling liquor without a druggist permit.

Bishop John Shanley, of Jamestown, administered confirmation to 57 at St. Joseph's Catholic church Devil's Lake, and lectured to a large audience at the court house in the evening. He spent a week visiting missions in this district and confirmed over 200.

An Oakes special says the crop is simply wonderful. Many good judges place the average yield at not less than thirty bushels per acre, while some fields will yield forty bushels. There is a great dearth of harvest hands. It is safe to say that not half enough harvest help is now in sight, and many farmers are seriously alarmed over the situation.

W. H. Dewey and Charles F. Baker, of Minneapolis, arrived at Grand Forks in a birch bark canoe. They left Minneapolis June 1, went down the Mississippi to the mouth of the Minnesota, up the Minnesota to Big Stone lake, through the Big Stone and Traverse lakes. Their canoe and camping outfit was conveyed by wagon 25 miles to Wahpeton, where they took the Red river and rowed to Grand Forks. They traveled about 1,200 miles.

It is a known fact among a few that three or four leading capitalists of the state have for some time looked upon the clay deposits in the vicinity of Dickinson with much favor, and Prof. E. J. Babcock, of the State university, has been getting samples of clay for chemical analysis, some of which he will send to the New Jersey potteries for a test of what it will make in the way of terra cotta, etc. He states that some of the most promising deposits of fine clay west of the Mississippi river are located about here.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

It is reported at Watertown that Judge Andrews, of the Third judicial circuit, is about to resign on account of ill health.

The South Dakota Teacher's association has chosen Mitchell as the next place of meeting. The dates are Dec. 29, 30 and 31, 1891.

Mrs. Minnie C. Barrows, of Aberdeen received the appointment recently as matron of the Indian school at Kewaunee, Wis., and departed at once for that place.

Fire completely destroyed the freight depot of the Chicago, & Northwestern Railroad at Huron. Loss on building and contents $10,000. Some freight cars were also damaged.

It is reliably reported at Aberdeen that the Northwestern has secured control of the Gettysburg & Forest City and will operate it in connection with their line to Gettysburg.

Theodore Reder, a saw mill man and rancher, living fifteen miles back in the hills, came to Rapid City recently and reported that early one morning his stable was broken open and two horses and two saddles stolen. Reder started in pursuit, but lost the trail. He thinks that Reddy Lightfoot, a burglar, and Nell McDougall, a forger, who broke jail at Deadwood a few days ago, are the thieves. By this time they have probably got across the state line into Wyoming or Montana.

WISCONSIN.

N. Bowton, the Bayfield lumberman, sold five million feet of lumber to Z. B. Barker, of Chicago. It involves the sum of $60,000.

Henry Emder, proprietor of the Emder house of Portage for more than thirty years, died recently after a long illness. He sold his house.

Deputy Sheriff Knight's father, H. Knight, aged eighty-five, died from concussion of the brain at Durand. He was thrown from a wagon while on his way home.

During a rain storm the smokestack of the Chippewa Falls Manufacturing company blew down, doing considerable damage and shutting down the works for one week.

The first raft of logs that was ever brought across Lake Superior arrived at Ashland recently. There were 2,000,000 feet from Beaver bay in the raft, to be cut. It is thought this experiment will result in bringing a large amount of Canadian lumber here to manufacture. Six million more will follow.

Col. John C. Spooner has been secured by the regents of the State University of Wisconsin to deliver a series of lectures before the law department. This will identify him regularly with the law faculty to deliver about one lecture a month during the progress of the collegiate year. It is now pretty well understood that Mr. Spooner will continue his home at Hudson.

The board of education of Chippewa Falls let a contract for the erection of a $12,000 school building, to be completed about September. This will make the seventh school building in this city and does not include the three large parochial schools owned and maintained by several Catholic congregations here.

While Elisha Kinney, a farmer living near West Salem, and family, were on a visit, Fred Myers, the hired man, entered the house and went through bureau drawers and a private desk, securing about $400 in money, several certificates of deposit on the Batavian bank, of this city, a note for $400 due next fall and valuable papers. The robber was traced to La Crosse, where he purchased a ticket for Chicago and left on the midnight Burlington.

IOWA.

Nicholas was thrown from an electric car at Dubuque, and killed.

Otto Beymer, a young man residing at Afton, climbed a bee tree and began sawing off a large limb. The limb split and pinioned Bymer into the forks of the tree, causing his death.

Grasshoppers are damaging the oats crop in the vicinity of Waterloo. It is estimated that they will lessen the yield by 10 bushels per acre. They are of the common native species.

A fatal contagious disease has broken out among the cattle in Palo Alto, Emmet and Kossuth counties, and many are dying off. The state veterinarian, Prof. M. Stalker, and Assistant E. E. Sawyer are making a thorough examination.

Newton E. Carlton, aged 19, committed suicide at the home of his sister, Mrs. Gibson, on West Thirteenth street Des Moines. He had been unsuccessful in obtaining employment and was very despondent. He left a note saying he was tired of living and would end his life. He took poison.

A. Y. McDonald, founder of the pump factory in Dubuque, which bears his name, died of paralysis, with which he was attacked two years ago. His disease was the result of a pistol shot received from a burglar about ten years ago. He served during the war in the 1st and 21st Iowa infantry.

A mysterious disease has broken out among cattle west of Lyons in Lyon county. The joints swell at the knees, death soon follows and after death blood and matter flow as the swellings burst. Local veterinary surgeons term it the blackleg. Seven or eight cattle are already dead and others are believed to be affected.

SLAIN BY ITALIANS.

Afterward They Set the House on Fire and the Bodies are Consumed.

Catlettsburg, Ky., Aug. 3.—Wayne county, W. Va., was the scene of a series of murders Friday night. Mr. Brumfield, his wife and five children were murdered in a most horrible manner and their bodies consumed by fire.

About midnight fifty Italian laborers became drunk and started on a tour of devastation. The Brumfield family were thought to have considerable of money. The Italians went to Brumfield's residence and were refused admittance. Doors and windows were then forced open. Mr. Brumfield, with his two half-grown sons, fought with desperation, but were finally murdered, their throats being cut from ear to ear and the bodies repeatedly stabbed. Mrs. Brumfield and her three little children were next killed by the drunken Italians, who then searched the house for money and set it on fire.

Mr. Brumfield was influential and wealthy. Two or three years ago, while county commissioner, he opposed the building of a new court house, and thus made many enemies. The court house was built, and it is thought that Friday night's work was the result of the old feud, and that Brumfield's enemies plied the Italians with liquor and then pointed out the path to the residence.

A MOUNTAIN TRAGEDY.

Two Persons Killed During a Row at a Dance in Colorado.

Durango, Colo., Aug. 3.—News has been received here of a terrible tragedy which occurred at a ball in the Blue mountains Friday night. While the dancing was going on, a tough character by the name of Tom Roach insisted upon dancing. He was drunk, and armed with a knife and pistol. He was not allowed to dance, and raised a row.

Frank H. Hyde tried to quell the disturbance, and was stabbed by Roach in several places. A cow-boy by the name of William McCord tried to pacify Roach. It seemed to enrage Roach more than ever, and, drawing his gun, he killed McCord on the spot.

A boy slipped away to a house near by, and, securing a Winchester, returned to the ballroom and took aim and fired at Roach, killing Mrs. Walton, an estimable lady living in the community. In the excitement Roach escaped and is still at large.

TOOK A SERIOUS ASPECT.

Omaha, Aug. 3.—Trouble at the Omaha & Grant Smelting works over the eight-hour day took a more serious aspect to-day. The men had been working eleven and twelve-hour shifts and have many times agitated the question of the shifts of eight hours each.

A MYSTERIOUS MURDER.

One More Added to Long Island's Long List of Crimes.

Glendale, L. I., Aug. 3.—To add to Long Island's already long list of crimes, another mysterious murder was revealed in this village to-day that will probably, like many more, never be solved. The victim this time is a pretty young woman, about twenty years of age, with dark hair and eyes and a petite figure. The horrible crime was discovered this morning by a man who was picking blackberries in the swamps near the village.

The body was found near a new dwelling in course of construction. A more lonely spot could not be found along Long Island. The marks of finger and thumb nails on the throat of the girl left no doubt but that she had been murdered by being choked to death. The skin of the neck bore five abrasions, and on the left side of the throat the nails of four fingers had cut into it, and the thumb nail had penetrated the skin on the right side. The vital organs were in a normal condition. The clothing of the girl was in perfect order when the body was discovered, and there was nothing to indicate that a struggle had taken place. Hundreds have seen the dead girl to-day, but none know her.

A Railroad Official Drowned.

Winnipeg, Man., Special Telegram, Aug. 3.—William A. Thompson, a Canadian Pacific official, was drowned in the Red river while bathing this evening.

GORED TO DEATH.

Four People Reported Killed in Indian Territory by Texas Cattle.

Arkansas City, Kan., Aug. 3.—A report has reached here from the Cherokee country that near the Neosho river four people were gored to death by Texas cattle. A woman and two little girls were first attacked and literally torn to pieces. A cowboy who attempted to rescue them was thrown from his horse and instantly killed.

MUST SERVE HIS SENTENCE.

Memphis, Tenn., Aug. 3.—E. S. Hammond, United States district judge, yesterday handed down his decision in the now famous case of R. M. King, the Seventh Day Adventist. King was convicted a year ago of Sabbath breaking by plowing on Sunday in Obion county. He appealed to the supreme court and the sentence was affirmed.

Then the Adventists and the National Secular association took up the case. Don M. Dickinson was engaged as counsel, and the case was taken to the federal court last November on a writ of habeas corpus, the contention being that the conviction was contrary to the bill of rights of Tennessee and the constitution of the United States, and that the defendant was held prisoner by the sheriff without due process of law. The application was argued several months ago and Judge Hammond has had it under advisement ever since.

The opinion dwells exhaustively on every phase of the arguments advanced in favor of the religious prisoner. The defendant, however, is remanded back to the custody of the sheriff, to pay the fine or serve the time in lieu, according to the sentence. The decision is based not so much on the constitutionality of the Sabbath laws as upon the fact that King was convicted under due process of the Tennessee law, and it is not in the province of the federal court to review the case.

THE BOYS IN GRAY.

Letter Carriers to Meet in Annual Convention in Detroit.

New York, Aug. 3.—The second annual convention of the National Association of Letter Carriers will be held in Detroit Aug. 5, 6 and 7. There are 253 branches attached to the organization, representing a membership of 8,000. Each branch is entitled to at least one delegate. The larger branches are entitled to one delegate for every fifty members. This city will be represented by twelve delegates. The association was formed in 1880 at Milwaukee.

The officers are: President, John J. Goodwin of Providence; vice president, R. R. Sampson of Chicago; secretary, John F. Victory of New York; treasurer, T. H. Lorch of Milwaukee; sergeant-at-arms, B. W. Washington of Memphis; executive board, John J. Goodwin, John F. Victory, Harry Cummer of Buffalo, F. W. Campbell of Minneapolis, George Sweeney of Cincinnati; legislative committee, Theodore C. Dennis of Boston, Wilmot Dunn of Nashville, George J. Kleffer of Omaha, C. W. Morton of Brooklyn and H. M. Day of St. Louis.

The objects of the association are to establish a reliable and economical branch for the members and to effect reforms by legislation in their behalf. The members of the New York delegation will start to-morrow.

THE FRANCO-RUSSIAN TREATY.

London, Aug. 3.—The Times' St. Petersburg correspondent records a rumor that the czar has already approved and that the ministers have signed the draft of a treaty brought to Russia by Admiral Gervais, of the French squadron.

The Standard's Vienna correspondent scouts the idea of a regular alliance between Russia and France, but thinks Admiral Gervais discussed with the Russians the details of a possible co-operation on the part of the Russian and French fleets. The correspondent points out that it would be impossible for ironclads to pass through the sound into the Baltic. Admiral Gervais found that he had to take the route to the great belt and to pass the Gulf of Mecklenburg. This, in the time of war, would expose a fleet desiring to assist Russia or Russian vessels waiting to attack the German coast to an encounter with the German fleet in Kiel bay.

Another Labor War On.

Pittsburg, Aug. 3.—A bitter struggle between the window glass manufacturers and their employes seems inevitable. The annual joint wage congress has been held, but no settlement reached. Five hours were spent in discussing and the conference finally adjourned without fixing a date for another meeting. The workers' scale demands an increase of 8 per cent in the wages of the gatherers and that no cutter shall carry out glass, while the manufacturers ask for an all round reduction of 10 per cent to equalize wages with the Northern district. Both sides were firm and refused to make any concessions. A shut down will affect about 6,000 employes.

GOOD LUCK.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is often called the Good-Luck Baking Powder.

Owing to the fact that good luck always attends the use of Dr. Price's, it is not essential to use it the moment it is mixed nor is it required to have the oven always just so as in the case with ammonia or alum powders. It is not luck after all, but the exact accuracy and care exercised in the preparation and combination of all the ingredients of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. Competent chemists are employed to test the strength and purity of each ingredient. Nothing is trusted to chance. Hence; it is always uniform in its work.

House wives never fail to have "good luck" in making most delicious bread, biscuit, pastry and cakes that remain moist and sweet. Only Baking Powder that contains the white of eggs.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, or any other adulterant. In fact, the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

TELL-TALE MARKS.

They Gave Away His Calling to His Best Girl.

"I never saw such funny writing as George's is," said the beautiful young girl as she held an envelope up for the inspection of a married friend.

"It is rather illegible," was the reply.

"O, I don't mean that," was the quick response. "He puts such funny marks in it. You know he's only written me three or four letters since we've been engaged because he's been in the city all the time, but when he does write one it looks so funny. It's all filled with marks like this—'ℨ'—and then he makes character 'ands' like this—'&'—and puts a ring around them. And at the end of his sentences he puts a cross like this—'x.' Then, when he makes a figure he puts a ring around it and always draws two lines under his signature. And sometimes he draws a line down through capital letters, and once he crossed a word out and then drew a ring around it and marked it 'stet.' It's awfully funny. I can't make anything out of it."

"My dear," said the married woman, as quickly as her excitement would allow, "have you no suspicions?"

"Suspicions!" exclaimed the beautiful young girl in alarm. "No, no! Of what?"

"Has he never confessed?" persisted the married woman, with Spartan firmness.

"George confess!" cried the fair maiden. "Martha, you alarm me. Are they counterfeiter's marks?"

"Worse," was the solemn answer. "Ethel, your husband will be out nights. He will come home in all hours. Most of his work will be done under cover of darkness. He will miss his dinner, and be constantly changing the hours. He cannot be depended on to be at home at any certain time or to leave at any certain time. Ethel, the man you are engaged to is a newspaper man."

"No, no; it cannot be!" cried the dark-eyed beauty. "I will not believe it."

"Ethel!" She was impressive. "Did he ever draw a straight line through all the pages of a letter?"

"Yes, and it was one of the best he ever wrote."

"Alas, Ethel, it is too true. He is a newspaper man and he has absent-mindedly put in the marks for the printer. Poor girl! Try as he might he couldn't conceal his identity."

Then the young girl cried "Horrible!" and burst into tears and refused to be comforted.—Chicago Tribune.

THE OPEN AIR METHOD.

Dr. Wilson, a former officer in the navy, who served with Admiral Farragut during the war, is in Washington for the winter, says the Chicago Tribune. Dr. Wilson found soon after the war that he was troubled with consumption. He sought medical advice, and he was told that he could not at best live more than six months if he should remain in this country. Dr. Wilson, who is to-day tall, broad-shouldered, with the ruddy appearance of a man who has never known a day of sickness, says that he cured himself absolutely by what is known as the out-of-doors treatment. He went first to the Cape of Good Hope and wandered about through the south of Africa. He engaged in agriculture and hunting. He spent a good many years in the Transvaal. He would not live in a house until his lungs became thoroughly healed. He now owns the half of the island of Johanna, one of the Camore group. It is an island perhaps twenty-five miles in circumference. He has a large sugar plantation on the island, which is 900 feet above the level of the sea. The only other white man on the island is an Englishman, also a sugar planter. Dr. Wilson is a bachelor. He has built up a comfortable place for himself on this island. The climate is perfect and his business good. There is no place in the world so enchanting to him as this island in the South Atlantic. The climate is equable and not subject to sudden changes. His pleasure and recreation are found in hunting in the Transvaal.

Celestial Advertising.

The heathen Chinee sometimes advertises in a way as peculiar as everything else he does. Here is a translation of a Chinese ink-maker's bill:—

"At the shop Tae-shing (prosperous in the extreme)—very good ink; fine! fine! ancient shop; great grandfather, grandfather, father, and self made this ink; fine and hard, very hard; picked with care, selected with attention. This ink is heavy, so is gold. The eye of the dragon glitters and dazels; so does this ink. No one make like it. Others who make ink make it for the sake of accumulating base coin and cheat while I make it only for the name. Plenty of A-kwantsaes—'gentleman know my ink—my family never cheated—they have always borne a good name.' I make my ink for the 'Son of Heaven' and all the mandarins in the empire. As the roar of the tiger extends to every place, so does the fame of the 'dragon's jewel.'"

Apple Pudding.—One pint of flour, one egg, one-half teaspoonful of salt, three-quarters of a cupful of milk, water may be used instead, butter size of an egg, one teaspoonful of baking powder, three large apples quartered. Cut the butter up in the flour and add salt and baking powder. Beat the egg well and stir into the milk and add to flour. Spread the mixture about half an inch thick in a well-buttered pudding dish. Stick the apples in and sprinkle well with sugar. Bake three-quarters of an hour in a moderate oven. To be eaten warm with milk and sugar.

The dance given by the string band in Hoff's Hall last Friday evening was not very largely attended owing to the wet weather, but those who attended report an enjoyable time. The boys are giving us some first class music and deserve a liberal patronage. It is to be hoped that they will repeat the experiment in a short time.

C. A. Wilkinson, the Great Northern, right-of-way agent, was in town today. Mr. Wilkinson was authority for the statement that the G. N. did not care whether the bonds carried or not and that he had bet that they would carry. He is here principally for his health but may build a few branches of road. but work against the bonds? Never!

We will have a daily mail but no thanks are due the Great Northern who have opposed the matter at every turn. They could give us a daily train at an additional expense of fifty dollars a week which would be more than made up by the extra passenger traffic, but accommodation don't seem to be in their line. A little good healthy opposition is what is needed badly.

The Spanish government has come to terms and reciprocal trade relations between the United States and Cuba will begin a month hence. Mr. W. S. McGinniss Ass't. Supt. of the Railway mail Service, was here last Friday in response to the petition for a daily mail circulated here some time ago. Mr. McGinnis spent some time looking up the business done by the post office here and decided that we were entitled to a daily service. He informed us that he would recommend that a stage line be put on between here and Crookston to carry the mail Tuesdays Thursdays and Saturdays: the contract with the railroad company for carrying the mail three days a week to remain the same as heretofore. The post office department will advertise for bids for doing the work as soon as it can be properly arranged. The stage will leave here for Crookston at 10 a. m. arriving there at 4 p. m. and it will leave Crookston at 8.30 a. m. arriving here at 2 p. m. three times a week

Mr. McGinniss is a very pleasant and courteous gentleman and our people are under many obligations to him for this prompt action in the matter. We also owe a debt of gratitude to Postmaster General Wannamaker for his promptness in replying to our petition as Mr. McGinniss was ordered here by telegraph, and also to Senator C. K. Davis our thanks are due for endorsing our petition which undoubtedly advanced matters rapidly. We learn that the same service will also be put on for Fosston and McIntosh,

This week we publish the proposition and agreement of the Duluth & Dakota R. R. Co. asking for $220,000 worth of Polk County's bonds in exchange for the same amount of their stock. They have filed a special agreement with the county to reduce the cost of carrying grain to Duluth to 12½ cents per hundred and also make a similar reduction on freight coming this way. Although the amount asked for is a good deal of money we think it would pay us. There is no doubt that all other roads in the county would be compelled to meet the reduction of rates providing the bonds carry and the road is built. This would save the county fully $200,000 annually in freight rates. It would add three cents to the value of every bushel of wheat raised in the county and greatly decrease freight rates coming in. We think this alone sufficient inducement for our people to vote the bonds. We need a good independent opposition road and no railroad will ever be built into the county which will make such a sweeping reduction in freight rates unless it receives aid from the county. A road of this kind leading by the most direct line to Duluth would add to the wealth of the county in every way and would surely add greatly to the price of our lands. Look into the question thoroughly and see if you don't think it would be to your benefit to vote in favor of the bonds.

Mrs. Lucian Mayberry, of Little Rock Ark., is the mother of ten boys, all born within a married life of thirty-nine months. There are two sets of triplets and two pairs of twins. They are all well formed, bright and healthy in body and mind. Mr. Mayberry is a prosperous merchant, and says he feels like the head of an infant asylum. Mrs. Mayberry is a pretty blonde plump and hearty, of barely twenty four years of age.—Globe.

If there should be any cool nights and danger of frost before the wheat is ripe, all farmers who can, should kindle big fires around their fields for in that manner they might save their grain. Old straw piles might be utilized and anything else that will burn. Weeds could be mowed, dried and raked together and set on fire. It is claimed that the burning of an elevator in Grand Forks on a cold night the other year prevented the wheat from getting frost bitten for 20 miles around.—Warren Sheaf.

Red Lake Falls Gazette: On Tuesday afternoon, Fred Kreuger accompanied by his sons Albert and Carl, started for a load of hay on the north side of the Red Lake River, Upon reaching the north side of the river, when returning home with the load, Mr. Krueger got off to lock the hind wheel of the wagon with a chain. After the wheel was locked, Albert, aged eleven years, took the reins and started the team down the hill but in some way he fell from the load to the ground in front of the wheels and before Mr. Krueger knew what had happened both front and hind wheels of the heavily loaded wagon had passed over and crushed his son. Mr. Krueger picked him up thinking he was dead but the little fellow came to and, and lived until ten o'clock Wednesday morning, at which time death relieved him of his sufferings. The funeral service was held at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Rev. Mr. McCormick officiating, Mr. Krueger and family have the heartfelt sympathy of the community.

We clip the following from the Red Lake Falls News to show that the philantrophic agent of the Great Northern is again in our midst with good promises, which will never be heard of after the election on the bond question. The Great Northern is the most obliging railroad corporation on earth these days, and will so continue—until after August 25th. They have set out to defeat the proposition to bond the county for the Duluth & Dakota Railroad and will promise most anything. They are now deriving a revenue of about $800,000 yearly from this county and will fight hard before they allow the new road to compete with them. As long as they can keep up a monopoly of the carrying trade just so long, may we expect poor service and high freight rates and our only salvation is opposition from an independent road.

R. A, Wilkinson, in company with Hon. Marcus Johnson is in the city today interviewing citizens and looking up the most feasible crossings of the Clearwater and Red Lake Rivers. Mr. Wilkinson is right-of-way agent for the Great Northern and whatever statement he makes can be relied upon. He says it is the intention of the company to connect the new line now being built through to Fosston with a line running to the east side of the Red River of the North. The line will therefore necessarily strike Thief River Falls St. Hilaire and Red Lake Falls. The people should take the building of the building of this road into consideration before voting bonds in aid of a road which will guarantee nothing save building within the city limits of Crookston. The Great Northern had in contemplation the construction of this line for over a year but have been awaiting developments in the manufacturing interests of Red Lake Falls. Now that these are assured the company intend to soon commence the construction of the road. Connections will this fall be made with the line running to St. Pilaire and a market be made here for this fall's crop.

MORTGAGE SALE

Whereas default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage bearing date August 16th 1880 made by Cornelius C Lawton and Ina M. Lawton, his wife, mortgagors, to The Dakota Investment Company of Grand Forks Dakota, mortgagee, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county of Polk in the state of Minnesota on the 17th day of August 1880 in Book 43 of mortgages page 68.

And whereas it was stipulated in said mortgage that in case of default in any of the conditions thereof, then the said mortgagee was empowered to declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable; and default having been made in the said mortgagors failing and neglecting to pay the sum of One hundred twenty dollars interest due on said mortgage debt on the First day of December 1880; and the said mortgagee has elected to and has declared the whole sum so secured due and payable; and whereas there is claimed to be due and is due on the debt so secured at the date of this notice the sum of seventeen hundred thirty dollars and that no proceedings at law or in equity have been instituted to recover the said debt or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given that said mortgage will be foreclosed pursuant to the statute and to the power of sale in said mortgage contained and the lands described in and secured by said mortgage to-wit: The south half of the north east quarter and the south east quarter of section nineteen, and the north half of the north east quarter of section thirty township one hundred forty-nine north of range forty three west situate in the county of Polk in the state of Minnesota will be sold by the sheriff of said Polk county at public auction on Saturday the 8th day of August 1891 at 10 o'clock a. m. at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston in said county and state to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage with expenses of sale together with an attorneys fee of fifty dollars stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in case of foreclosure of the same.

HOW WILL YOU VOTE.

Fellow Citizens, Voters of Polk County:

We present herewith for your consideration and determination the most important question which you have ever been called upon to consider at the polls; and ask before you decide to either accept or reject the proposition, that you study its character and provisions carefully and candidly, regarding it simply from the standpoint of a business basis.

The question for each one of you to consider is: "Will it prove a paying investment for the people of Polk County,—for myself individually, to make the sacrifice which is asked in this request for county aid in order to secure the benefits of a competing outlet from our farms to that great water-way which an infinate creator has stretched from the eastern boundary of our state to the mills and markets of the old world?"

The Polk County Journal of July 9th contained a very interesting article taken from the Duluth News, describing the running of the rapids of the St. Lawrence River by one of the new style or "whaleback" vessels (since followed by others of the same class.) But how few of those who read tha short article, realize the tremendous significance of that fact to the wheat producing interests of the Northwest! It means the shortening of the distance which our wheat must be carried by rail transportation more than one thousand miles' and if taken in connection with a direct and independent outlet from here to the head of the lake, will result in breaking up the elevator monopoly which has been the cause of so much dissatisfaction with the existing lines of railways, and an entire revolution in the method and expense of placing our grain in the hands of consumers in foreign lands.

Farmers, you are here offered that direct, independent, competing outlet to the Great Lakes. You are offered a perpetual reduction of freight rates from the prices which you are now paying, a reduction which amounts to nearly one-sixth on all classes; and of three cents per bushel on wheat (for while this particular line of railroad cannot reach all of your farms, yet if one road reduces its rate of freight, all the others will be compelled to do the same or lose their traffic, so that from every point in Polk County there will be a proportionate reduction from present rates of freight. You are offered emancipation and freedom from the elevator monopoly, which has been shown during the recent wheat investigation by the sworn testimony of reliable witnesses, has placed in the power of one man to dictate what price every farmer in Polk county shall receive for each bushel of his wheat, and by which the Millers of Minneapolis are enabled to depress the price and lower the grade of your wheat in the fall, when you have it to sell, and to advance the price and raise the grade in the spring when the bulk of it has passed from your hands into theirs.

It means to the land owner, an increase in the value of his land: to the producer better prices for his crops; to the laborer, better wages: to the merchant, an increased number of customers with more money to expend; and to the tax-payer, the settlement of vast tracts of land which now bear no part of the public burdens, thereby lessening his taxes at the same increasing his ability to pay it.

Supposing all parts of the county to be equally affected by the promised reduction in freight, the benefit from this one item alone would be fully $200,000.00 annually, while the interest on the bonds asked for is but $11,000.00 per annum. The benefits are perpetual. The tax is but for a few years. Can there be any doubt as to what your decision will be?

The enterprise which is seeking to co-operate with you in securing these desirable results is really the Duluth & Winnipeg Railway, but as under their charter it was found impracticable to do this work, they are seeking to do it through their offspring, "the Duluth & Dakota Railway," but when built the line will be found to be the shortest possible to Lake Superior which engineering difficulties will permit, of low grade, and with the most substantial equipment. In every respect a first-class road, and well deserving your patronage and approval.

Again it is a fact that the richest iron deposits in the state are located on or near the Duluth & Winnipeg Railway about one hundred miles west of Duluth and one hundred and forty miles east of Crookston. The building of the Duluth & Winnipeg is causing these mines to be developed, and the building of this railway into Polk County will give us this new and profitable market to supply with the products of our farms. This means a better price for every dozen of eggs, for every pound of butter, or bushel of potatoes, or oats or barley or other coarse grains, we have to sell. It means the thousands of tons of hay which now go to waste on our prairies for want of a market near at hand can be profitably handled and shipped. Again, much of our straw, of which we burn hundreds of thousands of tons each year, will, because of cheaper transportation, find a profitable market at the mines and at the head of the lake.

In addition to all these advantages the county will receive in return for the bonds, capital stock of the railway company to an equal amount. This stock will be full paid and non-assessable and when the road is in operation and on a paying basis, will be worth and can be sold for a very material portion of, if not for their full face value; thereby reducing the amount the county will eventually have to pay in a sum far below the expressed value of the bonds, and perhaps enable their extinguishment without expense to the county.

SPECIAL ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given that whereas the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company have filed in the office of the County Auditor of Polk County Minnesota, a proposition in writing as follows, viz:

PROPOSITION.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: Take notice that the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company, a corporation duly formed, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Minnesota hereby make application to the county of Polk, in said state, for aid in the construction of that portion of its line of railroad extending from a point within the city of Crookston, in said county of Polk to its point of intersection with the line of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad in the county of Itasca, in said state: and to that end the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company hereby makes the following proposition:

1. Said county of Polk shall make and issue negotiable cupon bonds thereof to the amount of two hundred and twenty thousand dollars, in the denomination of one thousand dollars each, all to bear date the first day of January A. D. 1892, and be payable to the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company or bearer twenty years after date thereof, and not before maturity thereof at the option of said county, and to bear interest from date thereof payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year, and at the rate of five per cent per year.

2. Said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company, in consideration of said aid and bonds shall and will, at the election of said county of Polk, issue thereto such number of the shares of its capital stock as will; at the par value of said stock, correspond with the principal sum of such bonds.

3. All said bonds shall be deposited in escrow prior to any delivery thereof to said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company and such deposits shall be made with the first National Bank of Crookston, a corporation duly formed organized and existing under and by virtue of the National Banking act of the United States of America, and having its principal place of business, office and residence at the city of Crookston, county of Polk, and state of Minnesota, and all the stock certificates for said shares of stock shall likewise be deposited and placed with the same depository and at the same time with said bonds; and all said bonds and stock certificates shall be and remain in the possession and custody of the said First National Bank of Crookston until all said portion of the line of railroad of the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company, extending from a point within the said city of Crookston to the point of intersection or Junction thereof, with the said Duluth & Winnipeg railroad, in the said county of Itasca, shall have been located, constructed and completed according to the ordinary standard gague and in actual operation with cars running thereon.

4. The said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company in consideration of said aid and bonds, shall and will, prior to the first day of December A. D. 1892, well and truly locate construct and complete according to the ordinary standard gague and put in actual operation with cars running thereon, all that portion of its said line of railroad extending from a point within said city of Crookston to the point of intersection or Junction thereof with the Duluth & Winnipeg Railroad in said county of Itasca.

5. Within thirty days from and after (and under no circumstances until after) completion and actual operation as aforesaid by the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company of all said portion of its said line of railroad the said First National Bank of Crookston shall deliver all said stock certificates to said county of Polk and all said bonds to the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company upon production of the certificate, in writing of the Railway Commissioners of the state of Minnesota, or one of them, to the effect that upon examination and inspection actually made and had, the said portion of said line of railroad has been duly and properly constructed, completed and put in operation as aforesaid.

6. It is mutually understood that the construction, maintainance and operation of said portion of the line of railroad of the said Duluth and Dakota Railway Company will furnish to the farmers, merchants and other inhabitants of said county of Polk a competing line of railway transportation from the several stations thereof in said county to the head of Lake Superior, and that such competing line will be shorter than any now existing line or lines of transportation between any point within said county and the head of Lake Superior by an estimated distance of not less than fifty miles; and in order to permanently secure and insure to all the inhabitants of said county the advantages now contemplated and which ought to accrue to them from the construction, maintainance and operation of said competing line, and the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company in consideration of said aid and bonds, hereby guarantees, on behalf of itself and its successors and assigns, to said county and to each and all the inhabitants thereof that the rate for transportation of grain, merchandise or other commodity to any station on the line of the said Duluth & Dakota Railway within said county of Polk from the head of Lake Superior or from any such station to the head of Lake Superior shall never exceed the rate per bushel or per ton per mile now being charged by any or either of the now existing line or lines of railway extending between any station in said county and the head of said Lake Superior.

It testimony whereof the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company has caused this instrument to be signed by its President and Secretary and to be duly sealed with its corporate seal.

Dated July 14th A. D. 1891.

AGREEMENT.

In addition to the above proposition the following contract has been entered into between the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company and the county of Polk:

This agreement, made and entered into this 21st day of July A. D. 1891 by and between the board of County Commissioners of Polk County in the State of Minnesota, party of the first and the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Minnesota, party of the second part; witnesseth:—

Whereas the said party of the second part is about to make and is making its application or proposition for county bonds in said Polk County, for the purpose of aiding in the building of the railway of the said party of the second part; and

Whereas, in order to secure said bonds said party of the second part is desirous of entering into an agreement with said party of the first part in behalf of the people of said Polk county, whereby the rate on wheat shipped from any point in the County of Polk, on the line of railway of said party of the second part to the head of Lake Superior, shall not exceed the rate of twelve and one-half (12½) cents per hundred (100) pounds from said point of shipment to said destination,

Now, therefore, said party of the second part hereby agrees that it will at all times and seasons carry or procure to be carried all wheat delivered to it at stations along the line of its railway in said Polk county, at a rate not to exceed twelve and one-half (12½) cents per hundred (100) pounds for the carrying of said wheat to the head of Lake Superior, provided, however, that said Polk county shall vote favorably upon the proposition of said party of the second part for bonds to aid in the building of its said railway, and that said bonds to the amount, not to exceed two hundred and twenty thousand ($220,000) dollars shall be voted and delivered to said railway company when its line of railway shall have been completed from a connection with the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad in Itasca county, Minnesota to a point in the city of Crookston, in said Polk county and state of Minnesota'

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused these presents to be signed and sealed as respective officers and seals, the day and year first above written.

Twenty miles a day is a pretty good foot journey, but one would have to make even better time than that in order to walk through the streets and lanes of London and complete his trip before the expiration of four years.

His Call Answered.

Mr. Balfour's predecessors as lord rectors of Glasgow university have all been distinguished men. Lord Beaconsfield (when Mr. Disraeli) held the office for two terms. On the Sunday after the day on which the rectorial address was delivered he attended the university chapel. It was a gloomy November day, and the chapel was becoming very dark, when the principal (Dr. Caird), the most famous preacher in Scotland, came to a passage where he called out in the most impassioned tones:

"Light! more light! was the cry of the dying teacher"— when, lo! the whole building burst into splendor. The bedellus had, just previously, gone out to turn up the gas. Even Disraeli's usually impassive countenance bore its smile.—London Tit-Bits.

He Was Selfish.

An Arabic anecdote, illustrative of the subtileness of selfishness, which enables it to glide into the heart of a saint, is told of the holy Mohammedan, Sakati.

He said that for twenty years he had never ceased imploring divine pardon for having once exclaimed, "Praise be to God!" On being asked the reason for such persistent praying he answered:

"A fire broke out in Baghdad, and a person came to me and told me that my shop had escaped, on which I uttered those words, and even to this moment I repent of having said so, because it showed that I wished better to myself than to others."

The Leading Sects.

To what sects do Yale and Princeton colleges belong? What is the leading sect in the United States?

Yale is Congregationalist and Princeton non-sectarian. The Protestant sect which stands first in point of numbers in this country is the Methodist, which, according to the latest figures, has about 4,700,000 members. Of course the Roman Catholic denomination is much larger than the Methodist, being credited with from 9,000,000 to 10,000,000 communicants in this country.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Wash Your New Socks.

A pair of new socks, fresh from the store, feels very comfortable to the feet, but the man who wears them before they are washed makes a mistake. Hosiery should always be washed before being worn, as the washing shrinks the threads and makes the socks wear as long again, besides preventing the feet from being injured by the coloring. When put on before washing they stretch out of shape, and can never be restored to the original form.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"August Flower"

Mrs. Sarah M. Black of Seneca, Mo., during the past two years has been affected with Neuralgia of the Head, Stomach and Womb, and writes: "My food did not seem to strengthen me at all and my appetite was very variable. My face was yellow, my head dull, and I had such pains in my left side. In the morning when I got up I would have a flow of mucus in the mouth, and a bad, bitter taste. Sometimes my breath became short, and I had such queer, tumbling, palpitating sensations around the heart. I ached all day under the shoulder blades, in the left side, and down the back of my limbs. It seemed to be worse in the wet, cold weather of Winter and Spring; and whenever the spells came on, my feet and hands would turn cold, and I could get no sleep at all. I tried everywhere, and got no relief before using August Flower Then the change came. It has done me a wonderful deal of good during the time I have taken it and is working a complete cure." ④

A BILL TO MUZZLE.

What the San Francisco "Examiner" Thinks of a Recently Enacted Law—Question of State Rights.

The United States Supreme Court Will Be Asked to Pass Upon the Constitutionality of the Measure—A Careful Review of the Matter.

The supreme court of the United States will, during its fall term, hand down a decision in the case of George W. Dupre, one of the publishers of the New Orleans States, a leading daily newspaper of that city, which probably involves a greater number of important legal propositions than were ever presented for the consideration of that tribunal.

The San Francisco Examiner regrets that these questions should come up on what many may carelessly view as a side issue. Mr. Dupre, relying upon the unconstitutionality of what is known as the lottery act and having chosen to ignore its provisions, for which he was duly—and, as he thinks unlawfully—called to account, is now seeking the relief guaranteed by the constitution in such a case.

To Mr. Dupre, therefore, it is not a side issue, but all important, as indeed must be such an issue to every citizen which involves individual freedom, the rights of a sovereign state and the liberty of the press.

The most cursory examination of the provisions of this act, entitled "An act to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to lotteries and for other purposes," demonstrates the appropriateness of its title. It is an act "for other purposes," and very many other purposes indeed. The avowed object of the statute is to break up the business of the Louisiana State Lottery company, and if the framers of this new and certainly unprecedented legislation had sought to do this directly, honestly and fairly, there could not be any reasonable objection to the character of the attempt. The worst that could have been said of such legislation is that it was nugatory. "You shan't run a lottery," Uncle Sam would cry, to which Louisiana would not unnaturally reply, "I shall." And here the matter would rest until Louisiana was ready, of her own accord, to agree with her sister states.

For there is no principle of law better established than that the general government has no power to declare any acts committed within the borders of a sovereign state other than those which are committed in direct contravention of the special powers lodged by the constitution in the general government.

It is for the state exclusively, to declare what is lawful or unlawful in the way of lotteries just as it is its prerogative to establish high license or prohibition or to enforce, as the case may be, a Sunday law.

The framers of the statute knew this perfectly well, and they have attempted to do by indirection what they have no right to do at all. They have sought to lodge in the postoffice department, powers wholly superior to the constitution, the law of the land and the proper tribunals for its enforcement. But the statute goes even further; it expressly authorizes the pettiest postmaster, nay, eggs him on, to commit acts which would, without the protection of the statute, constitute offenses of the gravest and most inexcusable character.

These acts he is not only encouraged, but commanded to commit on all occasions which may seem fit to his own good pleasure. It confers, chief, therefore, upon this mere sorter of letters and deliverer of mails more authority than that claimed by the supreme court of his own state, the president of the United States and his entire cabinet—always excepting, of course, his superior, the postmaster general. It puts him wholly outside the law, makes him totally irresponsible, even to his own conscience and common sense, and, to cap the climax of absurdities, places the liberty of the press, without which our present form of government might as well be abandoned, completely at his mercy.

These propositions are startling, but true, and, being true, they are worth the careful attention of every citizen who observes the signs of the times. Fortunately, it is not conceivable that the supreme court will or can give effect to them. However desirable may be the end in view, it surely cannot be worth attaining at the expense of liberty and justice. Yet this is, in exact terms, the issue involved.

It requires no special knowledge or legal training to detect the vice of such legislation. Like all arbitrary and despotic enactments, it puts might above right, and justifies the unlawful means it is compelled to employ by the conceived desirability of the end it seeks to attain.

Take section 3894 of the statute: "Any person violating the provisions of this section" (which makes the mere mailing of a letter, or, in fact, any mail matter having the remotest connection with the business of the lottery company a misdemeanor) "may be proceeded against by information or indictment."

This section has at least one merit—it recognizes the forms of laws, if, at the same time, it does trample upon the constitution. It presupposes a regular proceeding of some kind, a trial by jury with all the regular incidents of such a trial. However, it is wholly unconstitutional, and, upon analysis, absurd. The State of Louisana, and indeed any individual or company, is debarred by law from maintaining a mail service of her own, yet the general government, not only a common carrier, but an exclusive common carrier, declines to accept the mail matter of one state because in other states it is declared contraband. Instead of being neutral in the matter, and permitting the states to settle their own differences, the government seeks to imprison or terrorize those who attempt to make it do its plain duty, which is to do for all the states (and not for any chosen number of them) what severally they cannot do so well for themselves, provide a safe, speedy and trustworthy service unimpaired by such star chamber restrictions as those now being enforced.

But if the denial of mail facilities to the press and the public because of differences of opinion with regard to new distinctions in morality arising between the several states be a deprivation of the rights of the states as declared by the law and the constitution, what shall we say of section 3929, which authorizes the postmaster general "upon evidence satisfactory to himself!" we quote and italicise the clause to instruct his postmasters to stamp with the word "Fraudulent" letters which he thinks fall within the provisions of this very act.

Whatever has been said of the Louisiana State Lottery company, its worst enemies have never claimed it to be "fraudulent." The good faith of the company has never been called in question. Even those newspapers which have taken exception to its existence have never denied the honesty of its methods nor of the gentlemen—such men as Generals Beauregard and Early are among them—who have superintended the drawings.

The framers of the statute knew this—it was a fact of common notoriety—but this is just why they got up the rubber stamp scheme. Repeat the word "Fraudulent" enough, they reasoned, and perhaps after a while the idea will sink in—the public will in time, perhaps, come to believe the very opposite of what they had always believed before.

For this enormous power is exercised by the postmaster "upon evidence satisfactory to himself." Yet this evidence cannot be obtained, so the statute is careful to say, by opening the letter. Oh, no; that would be a breach of confidence; and, besides, it is expressly prohibited by law. Then how is the postmaster to "obtain evidence which is satisfactory to himself?" He is to GUESS, just guess? A private citizen who libels another cannot set up in justification of his slander evidence of the truth of his statement which is merely "satisfactory to himself." If this were so, it would vastly simplify many a libel case. This evidence must be satisfactory also to a jury of 12 men, but it is different with the postmaster. He can brand the correspondence of the most upright business man in the land on the mere suspicion and be held not in the least accountable. The proprietor of a newspaper who fails, perhaps through the death of witnesses or through some other accident, to establish the truth of charges made in the interest of the public, from good motives and for justifiable ends, is none the less mulcted in damages, but your postmaster, no indeed. He can libel anybody from any motive or for any end, and when he is called to account he is sure to have "evidence satisfactory to himself."

Again, the provisions of the statute are not restricted to the mailing of lottery tickets, remittances or letters of inquiry; they cover a much wider category of any "scheme," in fact, or "device, for obtaining money of any kind through the mails, by means of false or fraudulent pretenses or promises" is equally prohibited, and all the subterfuges and devices of the statutes are equally applicable in this as in the case of the lottery.

Now, at first blush, there seems to be a well meaning provision. Lottery companies are not necessarily fraudulent, whereas all such "schemes," such as described in the section, undoubtedly are—but who is to be the judge of whether or not they are fraudulent? The court and jury? Not a bit of it. The postmaster, again. He can put his little stamp on the printed envelope of an insurance company or bank if he is not satisfied with the "pretenses or promises" upon which they are doing business. But he will not? Why not? He has the power. What guaranty have we that he will not abuse it?

Postmasters are not always obliging or just. Newspapers have found that out to their cost long ago. But to what proportions will the petty exactions of consequential officials and their employes rise when these added powers are in full operation?

Suppose the case—every newspaper man knows how possible such a case is—of the business manager of a newspaper who, in entire good faith, accepts the advertisement or prospectus of some land improvement company, which turns out, as a matter of fact, to be mythical. He is liable to arrest. But of course he may succeed in proving his good faith and the absence of any intent to commit the crime. This we will concede. Though why he should be put to this inconvenience by the postoffice department we cannot imagine. But how about the edition of his paper in which the unfortunate advertisement appears? It will not be delivered. It may contain news of the greatest importance to its subscribers, the sentiments of the greatest thinkers and moralists of the day, but because of this one advertisement—the true character of which the publishers of the paper could not possibly be expected to know any more than the public it was designed to deceive—it is excluded from the mails.

However, if one class of advertisement is to be excluded, why not any other? Could not, indeed, will not the law be extended to take in medical advertisements, those of wine and liquor houses, in fact all advertisements of any character except those of church or lodge meetings? It is easy to see that the tendency of such legislation is to seriously abridge the liberty of the press, besides depriving it of its legitimate revenues without due process of law.

The mail service, we repeat, is the exclusive franchise of the general government, and yet it is to be administered under these restrictions and conditions. What, then, becomes of the liberty of the press? Evidently the men who framed this bill thought little, or cared less about the liberty of a press in the habit of criticising their acts. But the public has an interest in the press, and newspaper men have a right to carry on their business without interference except by the due process of law. The constitution expressly declares not only that this liberty shall not be destroyed, but also that it shall not be abridged.

And why is the liberty of the press abridged? Simply to suppress a lottery company incorporated under the laws of the State of Louisiana. These laws have never been declared unconstitutional. The right of the State of Louisiana to authorize or maintain a lottery company has never been questioned. The supreme court of the state has in fact declared that the question of the extension of the company's charter is properly before the people, and no one doubts but that this extension will be ratified by as large a vote as cast at the last election for that purpose. The State of Louisiana, its charities and its works of improvement receive large sums yearly from the revenue of the lottery, and it is absurd to say in this land of raffles and church fairs that the State of Louisiana has no moral right to maintain a lottery. Any number of governments and states have approved of lotteries whether conducted for private gain or for the public benefit. It is rather late in the day to import such new distinctions into the practical business of carrying on a government.

Besides, who can tell where this proselytism through the postoffice will stop? Shall Maine impose her prohibition laws upon wine growing California? Shall the Sunday laws of Connecticut be saddled upon those states, whose history, the very character of their populations, lead them to regard Sunday a day to be differently observed? All these questions are matters of opinion, often of theological opinion, questions which are at least open to debate, and yet it might be sought, through the postoffice department, to make them the rule for all.

Nothing could be more monstrous, nor, in the light of history, so absurd. In 1836, a law similar to the present one was introduced in congress, forbidding the delivery of seditious documents relative to slavery. Senator, afterwards President Buchanan, supported the law; Daniel Webster opposed it. But what were these seditious documents? They were the criticisms of the Abolitionists upon slavery as it then existed in the Southern states.

The bill proposed to muzzle these expressions of public opinion was undoubtedly a blow at the liberty of the press. It failed of enactment. Does anyone doubt, if the same measure had come up later, say in 1862, that what would have been considered "seditious documents" would be reflections upon the right of the North to deprive the South of their property in slaves, without their consent and without compensation? Few now question that the abolition of slavery has been a blessing to this country, and was dictated by the best sentiment of humanity. But how was this sentiment aroused but through the press? And how was it proposed to nullify this sentiment but by just such means as we are now invoked to enforce the opinions of a dominant party, which, even if they do not vary with regard to this matter, are certain to do so with regard to a great many questions which fall within the same rule?

It is impossible, however, that the supreme court of the United States can uphold such a statute, however much it may care to do so. Such a decision would not only be contrary to all its precedents, and contrary to the organic law of the land, but, were it lived up to, would make life in the republic well nigh intolerable. Indeed, legislation, such as betrays itself in this statute, saps the very foundation of liberty in substituting for the despotism of the absolute monarch, the oppression and tyranny of partisan power entrenched behind the irresponsible authority of its officers.

During the Mexican war, communication between the troops under General Scott and the government at Washington was very imperfect. Months on months elapsed before dispatches and reports could be transmitted to and from the seat of war.

It so happened that, although the then dominant party who opposed Gen. Scott succeeded in securing his removal from the command of the army, the order to that effect did not reach him until after the City of Mexico had capitulated.

It is needless to state that the hero of this brilliant campaign was immediately reinstated, and as little as possible said about the injustice done him. Gen. Scott made, however, this one remark:

"The long arm of power," he said, "has taken me away from the head of my troops."

The epithet as applied to the general government is certainly expressive. "The long arm of power" is not always accompanied with vision, foresight or self-control. It sometimes ignores local needs and differences, and, in its impatience to act, overrides liberty and justice.

Hereditary Feature.

Mrs. A.: "What black eyes that baby has!"

Mrs. B.: "Yes; his father is a pugilist."

They Met at Last.

That there should be two men looking alike is not extraordinary; but here is an instance of two men, conspicuous for their size, who without the other's knowledge, and even without having seen each other, dress so nearly alike, wear beards so nearly alike, and altogether resemble each other so entirely as to deceive their intimate friends. One is Prof. Thomas J. Charlton of the Plainfield Reform school (already called "governor" by some of his friends); the other is Mr. Frank Miller of Marshall, Ill. Until a few days ago these two gentlemen never saw each other, but each has had frequent occasion to hear of the other. For instance, Prof. Charlton was in Terre Haute the other day. He carried a cane under his arm and was walking toward the railroad station. Somebody came up behind him, slipped the cane from him and with mock bravado walked on past him. He was a total stranger to Charlton, and the latter knew that he had been mistaken again for the big man from the neighboring town of Marshall.

"Hold on there, I'm not Frank Miller," he called on to the merrymaker.

"Then you must be Prof. Charlton, for everbody says you and he are like two peas, except in size. But I beg your pardon for what must have seemed like impertinence. I really took you for Frank Miller, who has been my personal friend for twenty years.

Some days after that the Plainfield superintendent was on a railroad train. The train stopped at a station, and as he looked through the window he imagined it turned into a looking-glass. Before him was his own image. The Plainfield man and his Marshall likeness at last stood face to face.

"Come in here, sir; you must be Frank Miller of Marshall," said the Plainfielder.

"I'm glad to see you at last," replied Miller. "You need no introduction, for I've been mistaken for you a score of times." He came in and sat down in an adjoining seat—much to the entertainment of the passengers, and to the delight of himself and companion at having come together.—Indianapolis News.

Collecting Stamps.

A story is told in the Boston Herald of an elderly uncle who left to his nephew the entire contents of his house, which was very nearly all he had to leave. In the uncle's desk was found an enormous accumulation of papers, for he had much correspondence with many corners of the world, and had carefully preserved every letter he had received. And, what is more, inside the fold of every letter was the envelope in which it had come.

The nephew, who was an ingenious young gentleman, saw a small fortune in this seeming triviality. Many of the foreign and colonial stamps on the envelopes were of great value, and he sold them en bloc to a dealer in foreign stamps for several hundred pounds. Some of these very stamps may, perhaps, have found a place in the exhibition which lately opened in Vienna, says a London journal.

It clearly will not do to laugh at the stamp maniacs any more. Stamp collecting is no longer confined to schoolboys, but has become the amusement and often the passion, of millionaires.

For to make a collection with any approach to completeness is only possible to a millionaire—or his son-in-law. It is, we believe, a member of a French branch of the house of Rothschild who possesses the most complete collection. It seems rather a crazy thing to give £50 to £100 for a postage stamp, but the man who does that is no worse than the book collecter who gives a handful of sovereigns for an edition which is half an inch taller than one for which he would not give half a crown. We are all mad on some point, so by all means let us have free trade in manias.

Why He Lost a Tooth.

Philadelphia Times.

The other day a gentleman came to a well-known dentist, suffering from a front tooth. Although it showed no decay it had to be pulled. Around the root was found firmly coiled a little rubber band such as are used to fasten papers. Then the gentleman remembered the explanation of his sleepless nights and long period of agony. A month or more ago his little daughter was playing on his lap and had a rubber band which she playfully fastened in his teeth. It had been allowed to remain without his knowing it and worked down to the roots, causing the loss of the tooth.

Put His Foot in His Mouth.

At Rome, Ga., while a horse was loose in the stable one of his hind feet got caught in his mouth. It is supposed that the animal was rubbing the flies from his nose with his hind foot, when by accident the foot passed into the mouth. The hoof was shod with a heavy iron shoe, and the sharp corners of the shoe and hoof cut very painful wounds in the mouth. The animal fell to the ground and continued to struggle without relief. When he was discovered he was covered with foam, and showed every sign of a fearful struggle. His master came and succeeded in extracting the foot.

Serenading an Absent Couple.

A most disgusted crowd in Saco, the other evening, was one that, after making itself hoarse and tired by an hour and a half spent in serenading a newly married couple and in vainly trying to get the groom to respond, was at last thanked for its music by the groom's father, who volunteered the further information that his son and wife were in a neighboring village.—Lewiston Journal.

A FIGHT FOR LIFE.

Shall We Drive Slow Poison From Our Breakfast Table?

ALUM AND AMMONIA IN OUR BREAD.

A nuisance that troubled England fifty years ago is now rapidly spreading in this country, that is putting Alum in the bread we eat. This question is causing a great deal of discussion at the present moment, as it is revealed that alum is being used as a substitute for cream of tartar in baking powders. A story is told that a very large percentage of the baking powders sold on the market contain either alum or ammonia, and many of them contain both these pernicious drugs. Much timely alarm is felt at the wholesale use of alum in bread, biscuit and pastry. To young children, growing girls, persons of weakly frame alum bread eaten morning noon and evening is the most harmful. It is the small quantities taken at every meal that do the mischief. Alum is cheap, costing but two or three cents a pound while cream of tartar costs 30c, and the high price of cream of tartar has led cheap baking powder to be made of alum. If the reader wants to know something of the corrosive qualities of alum let him touch a piece to his tongue then reflect how it acts on the tender delicate coats of the stomach.

Following is a list compiled by the Scientific American, of the alum and ammonia baking powders that have already been tested.

WRITING IN THE BLUES.

One Author Finds Mental Depression Conducive to Good Work.

"It is curious," says a writer of long experience, "but my best work has been done in periods of great mental depression. Do I get 'blue' and 'low spirited' the product of my pen, accompanied, perhaps, with difficulty, invariably stands a higher test than my normal efforts. A corresponding elation acts precisely opposite with me. When I am excited and enthusiastic and can talk fluently, the words tangle on paper and my thoughts refuse to be held in the bondage of pen and ink."

It must be said this is certainly not the average experience of writers. Most "copy" producers will testify that ups and downs are not reliable agents upon which to depend. There is nothing after all like the condition involved by the commonplaces—sound sleep, good digestion, a light breakfast and a stub pen.—New York Times.

Toys That Were Once Postage Stamps.

Seven little red Indians and five blue Quakers were exposed for sale recently among other curiosities on a stand near the city Post Office. There were also three green Africans, whose nationality was proclaimed by the banjos they held. No explanation was given as to why this trio was of the color mentioned, though their complexion was supposed to have been affected by overindulgence in the surreptitious moonlight watermelon. One could buy any one of the small statuettes for 10 cents, notwithstanding the paper plasters they bore stating their "estimated value" at from $50 to $200 each." The secret of it was that they were made out of macerated postage stamps. The Quakers were of 1-cent stamps, the Indians 2-cent ones, and the colored persons of 10-cent denomination. It was learned by the Star writer, upon investigation, that the material of which they were composed had been purchased at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Postmaster-General Wanamaker has the use of a macerator at the establishment one day in each week to destroy his spoiled but unused stamps.—Washington Star.

CARLETON COLLEGE located at Northfield, Minn., easily accessible to the cities and all parts of the state, with a record of over 20 years of educational work, with ever advancing standard and increasing facilities, has won its way into the respect and confidence of the people of the state. The recent separation of the Academy from the College, the setting up of the sixth largest telescope in America in its observatory, the employment of several new instructors are among the latest advance steps. Expenses are kept at a minimum. All departments are open to students of either sex. For full particulars address J. W. STRONG, President.

Among Unhappy Wretches

The nervous individual fills a leading role. Digestion overthrown, sleep restless and unrefreshing, appetite capricious, constant irritability, morbid apprehension, these make the earthly career of the nervous the reverse of jolly. Strengthen the system, improve digestion with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and the zest of existence will return. Banish, with it liver complaint, malaria and rheumatism.

Wants White Beaver to Return.

The La Crosse Chronicle, the leading newspaper in western Wisconsin, deeply deplores (editorially) the removal of White Beaver (Dr. Frank Powell) to St. Paul, and hopes that he will 'ere long, return to the "Gate-way City" where he has "so successfully treated multitudes of sick women and thousands of nervous men."

We may owe it to our enemies to forgive; we owe it to ourselves not to forget.

Making Glad the Waste (Waist) Places.

"That's what I call making glad the waist places," said Smithson, as he put his arm around a lady's waist. But Lilly won't care much for this show of affection if Smithson doesn't get rid of that disagreeable catarrh of his. Won't somebody tell him that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure him.

By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleansing and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh in the Head, as thousands can testify. "Cold in the Head" is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal Headache is relieved and cured as if by magic.

In perfect faith, the makers of Dr Sage's Catarrh Remedy—the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., offer to pay $500 to any one suffering from Chronic Catarrh in the Head whom they cannot cure.

Now, if the conditions were reversed—if they asked you to pay $500 for a positive cure you might hesitate. Here are reputable men, with years of honorable dealing; thousands of dollars and a great name back of them.

They believe in themselves. Isn't it worth a trial? Isn't any trial preferable to catarrh?

Real Estate is the Basis of all Wealth.

AN INVESTMENT THAT WILL NET

20% to 30%

99 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money. 87 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center; has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now pre-eminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland.

"A Modern Instance"

Is sometimes more satisfactory than any number of "Wise Laws." There are thousands and thousands of modern instances in which Swift's Specific, S.S.S. has justified all the claims made for it as the greatest of vegetable remedies for diseases that have in their origin impure blood and a debilitated condition of the system. Mr. John H. Lyles, of Sorento, Ill., writes: "I suffered for five years with mercurial rheumatism, which was the result of potash and mercurial treatment by physicians for constitutional blood poison. They not only failed to cure me, but made me a physical wreck and my life a burden. I then commenced taking Swift's Specific, S.S.S. and after using a few bottles was entirely cured of the rheumatism which the doctors brought on by their remedies, and of the blood poison which they had failed to cure."

DIGEST OF THE NEWS

Interesting Digest of the Happenings of the Past Week Culled From the Associated Press.

Washington, Criminal, Foreign, Personal, Casualty, and Other Important News.

ROUND WASHINGTON.

President Harrison has signed the commission of J. Sloate Fasset as collector of the port of New York.

The United States treasurer continues the daily shipment of small notes to the West for use in moving the crops. The total amount sent so far is $2,800,000.

The twenty civilians designated by the secretary of war for examinations for positions as second lieutenants in the army will be examined in Washington some time this month.

Pension payments aggregating $750,000,000 have been made by the United States treasurer since the 1st instant, and have reduced the cash balance from $55,783,715 to $48,277,443.

The retirement of Lieut. J. F. Meigs, on account of color blindness, will cause the promotion of Lieut. Chas. A. Grove to a lieutenant and Ensign W. J. Sears to a lieutenant junior grand.

The president has issued an order transfering to the interior department for disposition under the law so much of the abandoned military reservation at Ft. Buford, N. D., as lies south of the line between townships 154 and 155 north and east of the line between ranges 101 and 102 west.

Secretary Foster said that he had nothing to do with the discharge of the G. A. R. men of the New York custom house. He had director Erhardt to reduce expenses $86,000 and the collector forwarded to him the names of a number of employes recommending, in order that the reduction could be made, their discharge. He approved the list of names submitted. There was nothing to show that they were G. A. R. veterans, or white or colored men.

CASUALTIES.

On the West Virginia Central railroad, near a point called Switchback, a locomotive, on which were nineteen persons, struck a piece of timber and overturned. Two were killed and five injured.

The steamer Alameda, which arrived at San Francisco from Australia, brings particulars of the overflow of its banks by the river Parra at Melbourne. Over a thousand families were rendered homeless and there is much sickness and fever among them. The damage caused by the flood amounted to $2,000,000.

CRIMINAL.

In Pickens county, South Carolina, a negro who recently committed rape on Mrs. Rowland, a respectable woman of the country, who is a helpless cripple, was captured and killed.

James Beach, of Rosendale, Ulster county N. Y., was flogged by White Caps, for beating his wife and children. He has brought suit for $15,000 against several people suspected of doing the whipping.

Antonio Jentles and Marento Kieto fought a duel with knives in East St. Louis. Jentle's body now lies in the morgue. Both the killed and the slayer were Italians. Kieto escaped.

John Grayson, who died at La Grange, Ark., a few days ago, confessed to having murdered three men during his life time. On returning from the war he killed a neighbor who had made indecent proposals to his wife. He afterwards killed a detective and a book agent.

Carrier Henry E. Barlow, of Chicago, after robbing the mails for over a year, during which time his stealings must have amounted to several thousand dollars, was arrested by Capt. Stuart.

Herman Guiterback, city editor of the New York Staats Zeitung, was indicted by the grand jury for publishing an account of the electrocution at Sing Sing. Mr. Guiterback will be called on in a few days to give bail.

OTHER SHORES.

Dillon and O'brien received an ovation when they appeared in parliament.

Russian crops are very deficient and Russia will have no wheat for export this year.

The army stores at Rathenow, Germany, were struck by lightning and burned. Loss, $375,000.

Vera Cruz has been partially flooded by rain, and the American consul there is sick with yellow fever.

Heavy rains have fallen in Mexico since July 15 in the producing districti, and all crops are a total loss.

The Earl of Dartmouth (William Legge) is dead. He was born in 1823 and has never been distinguished,

The British consul at Foo Chow telegraphs the information that there is no truth in the report that riots are imminent there.

It is reported that Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria will marry Archduchess Stephanie, the widow of Crown Prince Rudolph, of Austria.

The Delagia Bay arbitrators met at Brunnen, arranged the method of procedure and allowed council to plead. The case will probably last a year.

The commission which is to undertake the preparation of the exhibits of the government of Salvador for the Chicago Exposition has already been organized, and is actively at work.

The losses sustained through the suspension of the Bank of Van Dieman's Land amount to between £200,000 and £300,000. The effect of the suspension is entirely local.

A motion practically approving of the government's trade policy was voted on in the Canadian house of commons. The government was sustained by a majority of 22.

The excitement over the coming election in Guatemala is very intense, but no open rupture has yet occurred. President Darrills will undoubtedly leave for Europe as soon as his term expires.

The annual report of the president of the Dominion Millers' association estimates the wheat crop of the dominion at 55,160,000 bushels—a reckoning which allows 22,160,000 bushels for export.

Carefully prepared statistics of the sugar industry of Cuba show that in five years, from 1886 to 1890, inclusive, the production of sugar and molasses was 3,087,128 tons. The exports for 10 years from 1880 to 1890 was 6,351,139 tons, of which about 9½ per cent was sent to the United States.

Herman Celman, the South American millionaire, who is soon expected in New York with his $1,000,000 yatch, the Southern Cross is only 23 years of age and has an income of $500,000 a year. He is the only son of ex-president Celman, of the Argentine Republic.

Mrs. Hopkins-Searles was a sort of regal personage in the eyes of the people of Great Barrington, and the simple villager had an idea that though the White House or Windsor Castle might be more historic homes they could not in any way compare with the great house which Mark Hopkins' wealth had put up.

Lord Charles Beresford is one of the most useful men in the British service. He divides his time between parliament and the sea, and having a practical knowledge of the navy and its wants, is prepared to push intelligent reforms without regard to the big-wigs and red tape mandate from the admirality department. He is 45 years old, and has been a sailor ever since he was a boy, his bravery winning him such rapid promotion that his next advance will make him an admiral.

PERSONAL.

Commodore Ramsey, who succeeded Admiral John Walker as chief of the bureau of navigation, is a picturesque figure in the navy department. He looks more like a popular New York preacher than a naval officer. He is one of the best sailors of the navy, however, and is a man of fine physique, tall, straight as an Indian, with close-cropped silvery hair and a trim little gray moustache. His manners are elegant, and in striking contrast to those of "King John Walker, as his predecessor was called.

SPORTING TRIFLES

Hall and Fitzsimmons agree to fight in San Francisco for $6,000.

RAILROADS.

The Northern Pacific has reduced westbound freight rates to Burke, Wallace and Mullan 15 to 40 cents per hundred. This is on account of the new branch to these towns.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad company sues the Pullman Palace Car company. It demands an accounting, accusing the Pullman company of making excessive and fradulent charges in its dealings with the railroad company.

The board of directors of the Citizen's Street Railroad Combany of Indianapolis, a company owned almost entirely by Chicago citizens, have accepted the resignation of E. M. Fowler, who has been president of the company since last May, and elected John P. Frenzel, of Indianapolis, to fill the vacancy.

The board of commissioners of the Western Traffic Association gave out a decision which authorizes the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha and the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley roads to apply Chicago rates on all classes and commodities, except lumber, from Duluth stations on the last mentioned line.

Duncan McIntyre, a director of the Grand Trunk, has returned from England. He declares that all the rumors about the alleged amalgamation of the Canadian Pacific and the grand Trunk are entirely without foundation. It is learned, however, that important charges are likely in the management of the Grand Trunk.

LABOR CIRCLES

Five hundred slaters in the Bangor and Pennsylvania Argyle slate region at Bethlehem went on a strike for an advance of 10 per cent and eight hours. This only represents three quarrys. It is expected others will follow shortly.

The Omaha labor troubles continue to spread. Eight hundred brickmakers will be rendered idle by the closing of the yards. The smelter has closed for ninety days, and the white lead works will soon be obliged to shut down for lack of material.

A Kansas City dispatch says the engineers on the "L" road who were discharged, are on their engines running regularly on the road. They are working at a rate of $2.70 a day and not by the hour. The settlement is exactly on the terms proposed by Chief Arthur, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

IN GENERAL.

Capt. James Chester, of the 3rd artillery, who inspected Pennsylvania milita, speaks very highly of the discipline, uniforms, and the perfection of the men in drills, movements, etc.

Atty. S. N. Taylor, of St. Louis, appeared before Judge Phillips in Kansas City and asked for the appointment of a receiver for the Jasper County Electrical Power Company, of Webb City, Mo.

The wheat crop of California this year will equal 3,000,000 centals, which at an average selling price of $1.60 per cental, would give $40,000,000 for the cereal year, of exactly double the value of the last year's yield.

The statement that Claus Speckles, the sugar refiner of Philadelphia had commenced a rigorous war in cut rates against the American Refining company was contradicted among the sugar men.

Protest was made in New York by delegates of the Musical Protective Union against the admission to this country of a ballet troupe now about leaving Europe under the management of Walter Damrosch.

A decision was made in the United States court in Cincinnati, affecting the title to 160 acres of land on Prince hill in that city, so that the owners who have built on it will have to pay on the aggregate $1,600,000 to become owners of the land they occupy.

A statue of Leo XIII, for the Catholic university near Washington has arrived at the Georgetown custom house. It will be unveiled with appropriate ceremonies Sept. 28. The statue cost $50,000 and is twenty-four feet high. It will be presented to the university by Joseph F. Deloubae, a wealthy New York gentleman.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Pacific Postal Telegraph and Cable Company in New York the following were elected directors for the ensuing year: John W. Mackay, William C. Van Horn, George Stephen, Charles R. Hosmer, Richard D. Gay, Albert B. Chandler, Edward B. Platt, George G. Ward and William H. Baker. The election for officers will be held on the first Tuesday in September.

Dr. E. N. Case, a well known physician, of Chicago, was secretly arrested charged with a violation of the laws in regard to the manufacture of opium. In his rooms were found jars containing a liquid known as aqueous opium. It is learned that he sent some of it to San Francisco for sale among the Chinese there, but it is not known that he sold any. The doctor claims he has violated no law, and the authorities have asked for instructions from Washington.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell,

MINNESOTA.

Dave Buskirk, a citizen of Hubbard, was instantly killed at Wadena while attempting to board a train.

Harvesting is going on in the vicinity of Winthrop. Oats and rye nearly all cut. Wheat a little green in places, but in fine condition.

Ed Mullane, a saloon keeper, who assaulted his wife with a chair, at Sauk Rapids, was fined $50 and costs and put under bonds to keep the peace.

Vessel tonnage for July at Duluth was 550,892, tons, 79,000 in excess of the same month last year, and the heaviest month here so far this season.

A very heavy rain accompanied by hard wind passed over the vicinity of Luverne doing considerable damage to uncut grain, which went down badly.

The Thomas-Houston Electric Company, of St. Paul, has taken an option on the St. Cloud street railway until Oct. 1. It is expected that the sale will be completed soon.

Charles Hess fell from a scaffold on the new Union Depot at Duluth and died from his injuries. He has a wife and family at Madison, Wis.

A farmer named L. C. Shatto, of Prior township near Graceville, committed suicide with a revolver. Despondency is thought to have been the cause. He leaves a family in destitute circumstances.

John Witt and son, living in Summit Lake township, 10 miles Northwest of Worthington, were seriously and perhaps fatally injured. They had just hitched a team to a binder when they took fright and ran over them.

The assessors of Freeborn county return 38,625 acres sown to wheat, 37,606 to oats, 31,565 to corn, 9,150 to barley, 2,924 to potatoes, 182 to rye, 118 to buckwheat, 78 to beans and 67 to sugar cane.

The Indians living on Prairie island near Hastings held a war dance in honor of the new self-binder just presented them by the government. They are as yet quite undecided whether to use it as a clotheshorse or as a cover in shooting ducks.

A shovel-nosed sturgeon was caught in Lake Pepin recently whose head weighed sixteen pounds, and the estimate weight of the fish is eighty-five pounds. The head will be preserved as the largest ever seen here.

At the city election at Duluth the vote upon the issuing of bonds to the amount of $500,000 for construction of a public water work system about Fourth street, the result was in favor of the bonds by a vote of 508 to 122. No interest was taken in the matter, hence the small vote.

After a delay of about one month all saloons which had prior to July 1 been running have again opened up at Waseca, with two exceptions, those being Schmidt & Schocht and Joseph D. Young, who were refused license by the common council.

A misunderstanding between the employes in Thomas Breen's quarry at St. Cloud has caused a strike. The granite cutters and the men were idle. A defective stone shed is the cause, but the men will probably return to work soon.

Between 85,000 and 90,000 pounds of binding twine have already been sold by local dealers at Hastings and the season is not yet over. This is a considerable increase as compared with last year. None of the state prison's manufacture is handled here, it being sold direct to consumers.

The Hersey & Blair shingle mill at Stillwater has been shut down for the season. The cut this year falls far below that of last season. The condition of the log market still remains critical and if logs are not obtained several of the mills will be forced to shut down.

R. M. Hunter and A. R. McFarlane have donated five acres of land in Glen Avon division and Hunter's park, Duluth, on which a $25,000 Catholic orphans' home will be erected. Bishop McGolrick will return from Europe about Sept. 1 with ideas from the continent for an orphans' home and for a cathedral to be erected by Duluth Catholics.

E. D. Proctor, the brakeman an the Wisconsin Central road who assaulted a farmer named William Volker at Stillwater, was brought into court and placed under $250 bail. He struck Volker on the side of the head with a piece of broomstick, producing a wound which may prove serious if not fatal. Proctor claims that the blow was given in self-defense.

NORTH DAKOTA.

At Dickinson the hardest rain ever known fell the other day inundating all the low lands and laying the grain flat. The damage is great.

Imposing ceremonies attended the laying of the corner stone of the new Lutheran college at Grand Forks. There were addresses from Reverends Roalkvim and Gesberding and a college banquet in the evening.

The remains of Mrs. Mary F. Duffy, wife of Editor Frank J. Duffy, who died from heart failure at Grand Forks, were taken to Watertown, Wis., where funeral services were held. She had been married three years and leaves two children, one an infant six weeks old.

The contract for building the new Great Northern passenger depot for Grand Forks has been let to Moore & Hackett, of Minneapolis. Work will be commenced at once and completed Dec. 1. It will be 137x60, two stories of Kettle river stone, fronting on Demers avenue.

A star chamber examination was carried on at Dickinson for the purpose of securing evidence on which to arrest saloon men. There has been nothing sufficient for a criminal charge so far. Witnesses will continue to be examined before the state's attorney.

Rickert Larson, the 10 year-old son of Tobias Larson, met death in a strange manner at Sims. The lad was leading a horse with picket rope, which he foolishly circled around his body. The horse shied at some object, upsetting the boy, and ran away, dragging him nearly a mile before captured. The boy's neck was broken and the body frightfully mangled.

Bids for building the school for deaf of North Dakota were opened the other day at Devils Lake, N. J. Sampson, Libby & Libby, Kilroe Bros., E. Siskron and Emil Bruce, all of Minneapolis, bid respectively $13,075, $12,100, $13,005, $11,800 and $15,600. Crandall Bros., of Ft. Totten, $11,489; Morland & Alsip, Grand Forks, $10,050, and H. C. Paul, of Devils Lake, $10.780. The contract has not yet been awarded, but Paul will undoubtedly get it.

For the past few days raids have been made on the blind pigs in Traill county. The sheriff dropped into Mayville a few days ago and in a short time had everything quiet. Mr. Decker, who has been one of the most persistent in inventing schemes by which he might carry on the illegal traffic, is now languishing in jail, being unable to furnish bonds for his appearance at court, as is William Krienke of Blanchard. William Kreeger left for parts unknown as soon as the sheriff appeared with a search warrant,

At Devils lake the Moline, Milburn & Stoddard company have commenced replevin against A. O. Whipple, assignee of Ed I. P. Staede, to recover possession of notes and machinery claimed as property of the plaintiff, but included as Staede's in the assignment. Marshal Price, of the United States court: Agent Judson and Attorney L. A. Reed are here in plaintiff's interest. The inventory of notes weighs several pounds. Marshal Price has not succeeded in getting the notes, the face value of which is over $60,000.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

All places in Huron where liquor was illegally sold were raided and the stocks on hand were gathered in.

The state railroad commission visited Pierpont by request of the farmers who desire a site on which to build an elevator. They afterwards went to Ferney on the same errand.

Chas. M. Brown, of Rapid City, was unanimously nominated by the Republicans for circuit judge of the Seventh district at a meeting of the bar held at Rapid City, and W. H. Frye, of Hot Springs, is the Democratic nominee.

A terrific hail storm laid waste a large share of the uncut grain in Miner county. The storm was confined principally to the extreme eastern part of the county, and as harvesting was largely finished it was not as damaging as it might have been.

Sam Smith was arrested by Sheriff Hoven, of Bangor, for raping a young Norwegian girl whom he was bringing to Bowdle to do housework. He had his examination at Bangor and was held in bail for $400, and, not securing the bail, he was ordered to be confined in the Ipswich jail for trial.

Some farmers report the appearance of unusually large numbers of grasshoppers, which resemble the hoppers of years ago, so destructive to vegetation in Iowa and Nebraska. While no damage will result from these grasshoppers this year, it is feared by many that next season may see them in such numbers as to destroy the crops.

It has been discovered that diptheria is prevalent in the South Dakota hospital for the insane, located near Yankton. There are 300 people in the institute, and great alarm is felt. Six well developed cases are being treated. It is feared that the scourge cannot be confined to these. The hospital has no sewerage connection save with a huge cess pool on the premises, and the accumulated refuse of two years is deposited there sweltering in the August sun. The hospital is under rigid quarantine, and attaches of it are forbidden to visit the city.

The interior department in the person of Special Agent Cooper is attempting to appraise the damage done by the hostiles to friendly Indians at Pine Ridge agency last winter during the disturbance. It was supposed that the total damages of this character would not exceed $25,000, but claims have so far been put in to the amount of $300,000, and the work is not yet completed. As to the manner in which the Indians are putting in their claims the matter of trunks may be taken as a criterion. Some Indians claim to have lost as many as sixteen trunks, with their contents, worth from $100 to $600 each. Special Agent Cooper, however, was on the ground last winter, and is in a position to know personally with reasonable accuracy the exact damage done. A wholesale paring of accounts will be certain to take place before the claims are finally allowed.

WISCONSIN.

The condition of J. L. Lenderman, of Osseo, who was hurt in a runaway accident recently, is not as serious as at first reported.

Dr. W. M. Beck, rearrested on a criminal charge, was discharged after full examination on the part of the state by Justice Averille.

Mary Carlson, a married woman, aged 24, was adjudged insane in the county court at Black River Falls, and will be taken to the state hospital for the insane at Mendota.

Charles Anderson and Mrs. Cora V. Graves, residents of Eau Claire, eloped the other night. Mrs. Graves has a husband and two children. The runaway couple were arrested in Augusta and placed in jail here.

The longshoreman's union at Ashland has given notice of an increase in the price of loading lumber vessels to 50 cents an hour after August 10. The raise applies to the whole Chequamegon district.

A young man, Wilmot Tisdale, has strangely disappeared from Ashland. His sister arrived from Canada, whom he wrote that he would meet. Nobody has seen him for several days, and it is feared that there has been foul play.

The transfer of the lease of the Hotel Cumberland was effected at Cumberland, whereby J. W. Slone, register of deeds of Barron county and one of the most popular men in this region, takes charge of this resort as landlord. The hotel will at once be greatly improved.

Charles D. Skillings, a local newspaper man, is heir to an estate in Portland, Me., worth $5,000,000. Miss Skillings, of the Boston Herald staff, is another heir. The property is land leased in 1792 by John Skillings to Hiram Illsly for a term of 96 years, the term expiring last April.

It is reported that negotiations are going on which may result in the sale of the Mississippi River Logging company, two saw mills and real estate here and pine on the Eau Claire river to the Northwestern Lumber of this city. The deal would cover property for which the Mississippi Logging company paid the Eau Claire Lumber company about $1,000,000 three or four years ago.

W. J. Spry, a well known mining man, on the range, has disappeared. He was last seen in Herley, July 24, having just returned from a visit to Ohio. He seemed to be in a dazed condition, and started for his home at the Superior mining location. He never reached there, and his family supposed he was still in Ohio until they learned by accident that he had been seen in Hurley. It is now believed that he was lost in the woods, and an organized search will be made for him, although it is scarcely hoped to find him alive.

IOWA.

Gus Rasmussen, aged 30, was killed by lighting near Spencer, on the Ryerson cattle ranch.

W. N. Johnson, a prominent horseman of Cedar Rapids and owner of "Uncle Josh" and "Skylight," was robbed of $270 in cash.

At Nashua, L. Treat, of Charles City, shot W. Noble. Both are young men. Treat called Noble a bad name, and the latter struck him and was then shot, dangerously. Treat is bailed.

Matt Wolfe, working in Fengler's stone quarry, at Dubuque was struck by a falling stone. He was knocked off the ledge where he was standing falling a distance of 80 feet killing him instantly,

While a traveling showman was exhibiting some bears at Ricevile, a few days ago, a small child of G. Russel's was seized by the bear, recieving injuries from which it died.

A special election was held in Waverly to levy a 2-mill tax for the purpose of buying real estate for a park, and resulted in a majority of 200 in favor of the tax.

At the close of the retreat of the sisters of St. Francis, at Dubuque, conducted at the German Catholic Orphan Asylum, 13 young ladies were received into the order as novices by Bishop Hennessy.

Edward Langworthy, one of the very first settlers of Dubuque, celebrated his 83d birthday. Among the presents received by him was a check for $25.50, the amount of a bill sold a woman 47 years ago when he was in business.

Bott Bros', shoe store was burgarlized. at Dubuque. Entrance was made from an adjoining store and thence through a skylight. The safe was pried open and $225 taken, together with other valuables.

Alonzo Nicholls, living about 16 miles from Waverly, while trying to dynamite the Wapsu river for fish, received serious injuries from the explosion of the bomb. His right eye was put out, a hand was severed and a large hole blown in his right side. He is not expected to live.

A farmer named David King, of Algona, was worked by sharpers for $2,000. They bought his farm and worked him for a loan of money until they could go to town and have some imaginary draft cashed. On the way to town they suddenly decamped, leaving King to attend to getting the drafts cashed. It is rumored that the men were caught in Eagle Grove.

Isaac Lambert, an old soldier and pensioner, was arrested at Keokuk for kidnapping his own child. He has been a divorced man some time, his wife having since married. It is charged that Lambert on July 28 last appeared in Louisiana, where his wife is now living, and kidnaped the child, bringing him to Keokuk. His whereabouts was subsequently learned and the arrest made by Louisiana officers and Lambert was taken to Louisiana.

NOT UP TO STANDARD.

An Urchin Teaches a Dude a Lesson He Will Not Forget.

Among the crowd watching the firemen at work on the burning Sixth-avenue carstables stood a young swell. "Why are those firemen taking it easy upon the roof instead of going to work he growled.

As his remark seemed to be addressed to no one in particular, a little boy, with bare feet and a very dirty face, volunteered the information that the firemen referred to were not "taking it easy," but had crawled out of the smoke for a breath of fresh air. "Day couldn't live, boss, if dey stayed in dere right 'long," he said.

"Wait until you are spoken to," said the dandified young man, at the same time tapping the boy on the shins with a cane he carried. The little fellow knew his brown fist was no match for the heavy-headed walking-stick and said nothing, but the light in his bright young eyes spoke volumes.

In a brief space of time the young man had forgotten all about the occurrence and again spoke aloud, this time addressing his remark to a pretty girl who stood at his side: "I'm glad I am not a fireman. I couldn't be one, don't you know; I really couldn't."

Immediately the thin voice of the small boy replied: "Naw, yer couldn't. They only have brave fellers in the Fire Department, an' a feller of yer size as would hit a little un like me ain't no good, See?" At this out-burst the pretty young lady turned a rosy red, and her escort evidently wished her many miles away as he fondled his cane and glared at the grinning face of the retreating boy.—N. Y. Advertiser.

Irish Puns.

Charles Lamb made some famous puns, and, according to the London Truth, his mantle seems to have fallen upon his namesake, Mr. Charles Lamb Kenny.

The popular journalist just mentioned was dining at the house of a friend; and by chance swallowed a bit of cork with his wine, which gave him a severe coughing fit.

"Take care, my friend," said his next neighbor, with a very brilliant attempt at witticism; "that's not the way for cork.

AN OFFICER SHOT.

A Policeman Comes Upon Burglars at New Richmond and Is Shot in the Arm.

New Richmond, Wis., Special Telegram, Aug. 10.—This morning between 4 and 5 o'clock a desperat attempt at burglary was made here. During the early morning two professional crooks forced an entrance to Todd's jewelry store and made an unsuccessful attempt to blow open the safe. Their charge of dynomite was too small. Then they sacked a large quantity of silverware and were making off when Officer Waltenqerg ordered them to halt.

They immediately opened fire upon him, one shot taking effect in his arm. They then started off for the Omaha depot, the morning express being then about due, the wounded officer still following them, although his own revolver would not go off. They fired several shots back at him to frighten him off.

By this time a general alarm had been sounded and it became so hot for the thieves that they dropped all their booty, and a valise containing a very valuable set of burglar's tools and a quantity of dynamite. They then got under cover. Scouts were immediately dispatched in every direction to alarm the country, and later a company was formed, commanded by Harvey Law, an old soldier, and still later several squads of horsemen, all armed with Winchesters and double-barreled shot guns, who are now scouring the adjacent country with orders from District Attorney Hawkins if the culprits are found and offer resistance to shoot to kill.

The man who did the shooting is about six feet tall, weight about 190 pounds, square build, large bones, dark complexion and thin black mustache. His companion is smaller, with heavier mustache, and lighter, though not sandy complexion.

A Cincinnati Parricide.

Cincinnati, Aug. 10.—George F. Nieman, a shoemaker, was shot and instantly killed to-day, by his son, Charles F. Nieman, aged twenty years, at their home, 18 Gorman street. The shooting resulted from a family quarrel which has been in progress for several years. About ten years ago Mrs. Nieman procured a divorce from her husband for cruelty but he was allowed to retain a room in the house which belongs to the wife. The quarreling among the members of the family and the old man has been been frequent, owing to his violent temper. To-day he began to abuse his wife and two daughters, Anna and Emma. The son was asleep up stairs, and hearing the noise, came out and saw his father with a pair of tongs in his hand upraised as if to strike his mother, who is a cripple. He rushed back and got a revolver. Just then the old man made a motion as if to strike his mother, when he leveled his revolver at his father and fired, the bullet passing through his right lung and heart, causing death instantaneously. The young man surrendered to the police and was locked up. He is assistant secretary of the Cincinnati Insurance company.

Shot by a Game Warden.

Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 10.—State Deputy Game Warden Morgan Buntain of Dayton fatally shot David McIlvain, who, with others, was caught seining in Mad river in violation of the state law. Buntain had heard of the seining party and in company with Ben Seitner, a member of the Fish and Game Protective society, went to the spot. They came upon the party in the act of drawing the seine and Buntain exclaimed, "Hello, boys, we got here just in time to see you make a haul." One fisherman hit Buntain in the eye with a stone and Buntain drew a revolver and shot McIlvain through the heart. The others were then captured. Buntain gave himself up, but was not held in confinement as he was the state officer, and according to McIlvain's own statement did the shooting in self defense and in discharge of his duty.

Five Pistol Shots.

Boyd's Station, Md., Aug. 10.—A shooting affray occurred to-day at Barnesville, near this place, where a camp meeting was going on, in which one man was killed and three others were seriously wounded. While waiting for a train a party of colored men became engaged in a dispute over some cigars, when Louis Brown of Richmond, Va., became incensed at what was said and struck one of his companions with a stone. This was the signal for a general fight and five pistol shots were fired. Brown was killed, shot through the body, and three others were wounded.

TOUCHING HIM UP.

Washington, Special Telegram, Aug. 10.—Another attack is being made upon Col. Fred Brackett. The following appears in a morning paper:

"A. T. Bissell is after the fresh scalp that is growing on Fred Brackett's official cranium. The other day he called on Secretary Foster and protested against Brackett's visit to Europe at government expense. He said that Brackett had worked the army racket successfully, and yet he had never smelt powder with a bullet in front of it. Mr. Brackett said he was bass horn blower in the regimental band in the Sixth Maine regiment and when the order was issued consolidating military bands every other fellow in the Sixth Maine band let go of his musical instrument and shouldered a musket except Brackett, who mustered out. He heard the guns across the Potomac. Bissell also charged Brackett with nepotism in the appointment of a son to office and said that a young man named Chase, a chum of Brackett's son, had received an appointment through Brackett's influence, and had given Brackett a part of his salary."

THE RIPENING CROPS.

Another Installment of Favorable Reports From the Fields.

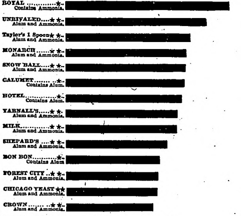
Huron, S. D., Special Telegram, Aug. 10.—The state weather bureau crop bulletin, just issued, for the past week, says that the temperature during the forepart of the week was below, while the later part was above the average. The rain was in local showers, poorly distributed, and in some localities attended by destructive hail. The absence of general rains, the abundant sunshine and the warm weather have combined to produce the most favorable harvest weather for South Dakota. Corn has made a marked improvement, but in some counties in the state now needs rain, as do also late potatoes and millet. The harvesting of small grain is nearly completed except in the northern counties, and considerable threshing of barley and oats has been done in the southern counties. The grass crop would be benefited by rain and in a few localities stands in need of it. Destructive hail storms are reported from portions of Miner and McCook counties.

Cincinnati, Aug. 10.—Mrs. Nellie Webb, an aged and wealthy widow of Louisville, Ky., committed suicide at College Hill sanitarium. Her family are prominent people of Louisville. She is a victim of drink and was placed in a sanitorium. Deprived of her stimulants she developed melancholy tendency. Last night she went into the bath room, locked the door, threw herself in the tub and turned on the water. Overflowing water attracted the attendants' attention, an entrance was forced into the room and she was found dead from drowning.

Testing the Baking Powders.

Comparative Worth Illustrated,

BY PROF. PETER COLLIER, LATE CHEMIST IN CHIEF OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WASHINGTON, D. C.



Above diagram was drawn and verified in all its details, by Prof. Peter Collier, who is pre-eminent as a Chemist, and Scientist. The illustration is made in accordance with his chemical tests of each brand enumerated.

The Carbonic acid gas was calculated to get the leavening strength and the quantative analysis to ascertain the comparative wholesomeness, purity, and general usefulness of the leading Powders. The result of Prof. Collier's examination and test, reveals the fact, that, with but one exception, every brand tested contained either Ammonia or Alum, and a number both.

Not one woman in ten thousand would use an Ammonia or Alum Baking Powder if she knew it. Such Powders not only undermine the health, but ammonia imparts a sallow or blotched complexion.

Note.—Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, as shown by Prof. Collier's examinations, is the only pure Cream Tartar Powder found free from adulteration and the highest in strength. All authorities report Dr. Price's free from Ammonia, Alum, Lime, or any other adulterant. The purity of this ideal Powder has never been questioned.

★ Indicates the Powder containing either Ammonia or Alum.
★★ Indicates the Powder containing both Ammonia and Alum.

While the diagram shows some of these Ammonia or Alum Powders to be of higher strength than others classed below them, it must not be taken that they possess any value. All Ammonia or Alum powders should be avoided as dangerous, no matter how high their strength.

Darwin S. Hall, chairman of the Chippewa Indian Commission, arrived here on Sunday, And it was confidently expected that the commission would begin the allotment of lands to the Indians but problems confronted Mr. Hall that he was not able to cope with until he had consulted the authorities at Washington and he proceeded there at once. He will return in three weeks and then business will hum. There will be no more "twisting in and twisting out and keeping the people still in doubt." —White Earth Cor., Thirteen Towns.

One of the thoughtless farmers up this way cut around the field in the usual way and finished up in the middle and was astonished to find himself walled in by the shocks so that he could not get out. The neighbors got up a bee and after a day and a half of hard work managed to make a roadway between the shocks wide enough to enable him by careful driving, to get out with the team and machine, To avoid this difficulty the other farmers find it necessary to cut lengthwise of the field and turn around on the ends. The awkward thing about it is that most of the grain will have to be threshed out of the shock as there is no room to stack it.—Sherburne Advance.

We think the people who are opposing the voting of the bonds to the Duluth & Dakota do so from not fully understanding the proposition. It is true that it will make our taxes higher but the excessive freight rates we are now paying are also a tax. There is no denying the fact that it would save this county from $150,000 to $200,000 annually besides opening up the best market in the state for farm products. We need not expect a reduction in rates from our present railroads, they have a monopoly and intend to keep it as long as possible. It may be that the proposition may be defeated but if it is we predict that the people will soon see the day that they will regret their action.

According to the figures of the census bureau, but two and a quarter million families of the United States occupy and own unincumbered homes and farms. The figures as applied to Iowa indicate that the average debt for a farm in that state is $1,283, and for a home $719, an average for farm and home of $1,140. Should these averages hold good for the Union, the incumbrance on the farms and homes of the United States occupied by owners is about $2,565,000,000.—Press News Association,

The Treaty gives to this country another installment of free sugar and coffee and opens another market for Northwest breadstuffs and American manufactures The Republican program of a cheap breakfast table for the American consumer, and widening market for the products of the American fields and factories, is being carried out chapter after chapter. Already one-half of the people of South America and the West Indies have consumated treaties which make them consumers of Uncle Sam's wares and provisions, and soon the American commercial zollverein will be complete.—Minneapolis Tribune.

A Duluth gentleman has suggested that Hall and Fitzsimmons go to "No Man's Land" and do their fighting, It is possible that the majority of people do not know that there exists in Minnesota a strip of country 72 miles long and 1½ miles wide which does not come within the jurisdiction of any county—a place where crime cannot be punished mortgages foreclosed or attachments issued. It is the fact nevertheless, and Judge Stearns has passed on that very question in an action brought to collect taxes. This is how it came about. When Polk County was organized its northern boundary was drawn from the point where the Turtle river empties into the Red River of the North. Marshall county was organized later its southern boundary being fixed at the township line a mile and a half above the Polk county line. This was done under the mistaken idea that the township line and not the place of confluence of the two rivers was the northern boundary of Polk county. As these counties extend east and west 72 this leaves a narrow strip all that distance between the two counties unorganized and out of all jurisdiction. The gentleman above referred to owns property within that space and has never yet paid any taxes upon it. He suggests that a prize fight could not be interfered with if the rings were placed half way between Polk and Marshall counties.—Duluth News.

Crookston Times: At 8 o'clock on Thursday morning one of the worst storms that has ever visited this section of the country, passed over the city and although the damage was not nearly so great as was expected, still considerable injury was done to the growing grain.

The storm started a few miles northwest of the city and traveled in a southeasterly direction following the line of the Nothern Pacific Railway as far as Marin station, The tract of country covered by it was only about seven miles long by about a mile and a half wide and the extent of the damage was comparitively light although the individual losses were very heavy and in many cases were total, The storm raged for two hours and the rain which was accompanied by considerable wind was the heaviest ever known in this section. In the city very little hail fell but it began to come down just beyond the city limits on the south east. and from there to Marin Station every field of grain in its pathway was ruined the windows broken in all the farm houses and the country devastated generally. The damage is estimated at about $50,000 and the greater part of the loss falls upon farmers who are far from being able to sustain it. The injury, however, as compared with the great crop which will be harvested in this county, will be as a drop in the bucket and aside from the individual losses, the storm was of very little consequence.

The wonderful solicitude for. Mr. Blaine's health is of the character of crocodile tears. It has two sources, both inspired by fear.

The Harrison element in Mr. Blaines own party has been the most persistent and, we might say, malignant, in the circulation of false reports concerning the great statesman's health.

Papers like the Minneapolis Tribune which seems to be under contract to boom Mr. Harrison, lose no opportunity to give reports adverse to Mr. Blaine. and couple them with moans of regret that so great a man should be in so painful a physical condition.

The Democrats, too, fear Mr. Blaine more than any other man, and they second the efforts of the Harrison Republicans to kill him off in detail. The fact is, Mr. Blaine has grown in political strength during the past two years, though he was strong before.

One feature which gives him especial strength is that several states which have heretofore been counted as certainly in the Republican column, now, owing to the Alliance vote, in the doubtful column. Mr, Blaine has always been strong in Republican states His weakness, so far as it existed, was in doubtful states and hence it was argued that though the most brilliant man in the Republican party, he must be cast aside to make room for mediocre talent, because anybody could carry the solid Republican states and the candidate should carry the doubtful states, owing to his negative qualities.

The Republicans can unquestionably come nearer electing Mr. Blaine president than any other man in their party, If there is an election before the people his chances are superior to those of any one named, and as against Mr. Cleveland, if the two were again antagonized, the chances would be decidedly in favor of Mr. Blaine.—St. Paul News.

Elsewhere in this issue will be seen the proposition to bond Polk county for $220,000 in exchange for a like amount of stock in the road. Now, the Journal does not pretend to be an advisor to the voters in this matter, but we feel that if this proposition was a request for an unconditional gift to this enterprise it would be well worth it, for the benefits conferred by such a road would be many times greater than the amount asked. No doubt there are those who will howl and rave against this project, and who will say that the farmers should not vote for it—just as though farmers were not as sensible as other men and do not know what is for their own interests as well as their self-appointed advisors—every one of whom has some selfish motive at stake, either he is employed by some opposition railroad, or he has some other iron in the fire. Farmers are not so big fools that they don't know that three cents per bushel more for their wheat is a big item—that a proportionate reduction on all in-coming and out-going freights is a big item—that the markets that this road will give for all kinds of farm produce—a market right at our very doors is a big thing and now the only thing for them to decide whether the small amount each will have to pay to secure it is worth the benefits conferred That's all there is to it and the editor of the Journal is perfectly willing to leave the result in the hands of the farmers—we never knew one yet who would not buy a $200 horse for $100 if he had a chance and in this case the per cent of gain is very much greater.

We believe that in this case they will consult their own best intereste regardless of what the roads already running into the county may wish them to do.—Polk County Journal,

HOW WILL YOU VOTE.

Fellow-Citizens, Voters of Polk County:

We present herewith for your consideration and determination the most important question which you have ever been called upon to consider at the polls; and ask before you decide to either accept or reject the proposition, that you study its character and provisons carefully and candidly, regarding it simply from the standpoint of a business basis.

The question for each one of you to consider is: "Will it prove a paying investment for the people of Polk County,—for myself individually, to make the sacrifice which is asked in this request for county aid in order to secure the benefits of a competing outlet from our farms to that great water-way which an infinate creator has stretched from the eastern boundary of our state to the mills and markets of the old world?"

The Polk County Journal of July 9th contained a very interesting article taken from the Duluth News, describing the running of the rapids of the St. Lawrence River by one of the new style or "whaleback" vessels (since followed by others of the same class.) But how few of those who read the short article, realize the tremendous significance of that fact to the wheat producing interests of the Northwest! It means the shortening of the distance which our wheat must be carried by rail transportation more than one thousand miles' and if taken in connection with a direct and independent outlet from here to the head of the lake, will result in breaking up the elevator monopoly which has been the cause of so much dissatisfaction with the existing lines of railways, and an entire revolution in the method and expense of placing our grain in the hands of consumers in foreign lands.

Farmers, you are here offered that direct, independent, competing outlet to the Great Lakes. You are offered a perpetual reduction of freight rates from the prices which you are now paying, a reduction which amounts to nearly one-sixth on all classes; and of three cents per bushel on wheat (for while this particular line of railroad cannot reach all of your farms, yet if one road reduces its rate of freight, all the others will be compelled to do the same or lose their traffic, so that from every point in Polk County there will be a proportionate reduction from present rates of freight. You are offered emancipation and freedom from the elevator monopoly, which has been shown during the recent wheat investigation by the sworn testimony of reliable witnesses, has placed in the power of one man to dictate what price every farmer in Polk county shall receive for each bushel of his wheat, and by which the Millers of Minneapolis are enabled to depress the price and lower the grade of your wheat in the fall, when you have it to sell, and to advance the price and raise the grade in the spring when the bulk of it has passed; from your hands into theirs.

It means to the land owner, an increase in the value of his land: to the producer better prices for his crops; to the laborer, better wages: to the merchant, an increased number of customers with more money to expend; and to the tax-payer, the settlement of vast tracts of land which now bear no part of the public burdens, thereby lessening his taxes at the same increasing his ability to pay it.

Supposing all parts of the county to be equally affected by the promised reduction in freight, the benefit from this one item alone would be fully $200,000.-00annually, while the interest on the bonds asked for is but $11,000.00 per annum. The benefits are perpetual. The tax is but for a few years. Can there be any doubt as to what your decision will be?

The enterprise which is seeking to co-operate with you in securing these desirable results is really the Duluth & Winnipeg Railway, but as under their charter it was found impracticable to do this work, they are seeking to do it through their offspring, "the Duluth & Dakota Railway," but when built the line will be found to be the shortest possible to Lake Superior which engineering difficulties will permit, of low grade, and with the most substantial equipment. In every respect a first-class road, and well deserving your patronage and approval.

Again it is a fact that the richest iron deposits in the state are located on or near the Duluth & Winnipeg Railway about one hundred miles west of Duluth and one hundred and forty miles east of Crookston. The building of the Duluth & Winnipeg is causing these mines to be developed, and the building of this railway into Polk County will give us this new and profitable market to supply with the products of our farms. This means a better price for every dozen of eggs, for every pound of butter or bushel of potatoes, or oats or barley or other coarse grains we have to sell. It means the thousands of tons of hay which now go to waste on our prairies for want of a market near at hand can be profitably handled and shipped. Again, much of our straw, of which we burn hundreds of thousands of tons each year, will, because of cheaper transportation, find a profitable market at the mines and at the head of the lake.

In addition to all these advantages the county will receive in return for the bonds, capital stock of the railway company to an equal amount. This stock will be full paid and non-assessable and when the road is in operation and on a paying basis, will be worth and can be sold for a very material portion of, if not for their full face value; thereby reducing the amount the county will eventually have to pay in a sum far below the expressed value of the bonds, and perhaps enable their extinguishment without expense to the county.

SPECIAL ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given that whereas the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company have filed in the office of the County Auditor of Polk County Minnesota, a proposition in writing as follows, viz:

PROPOSITION,

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: Take notice that the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company, a corporation duly formed, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Minnesota hereby make application to the county of Polk, in said state, for aid in the construction of that portion of its line of railroad extending from a point within the city of Crookston, in said county of Polk, to its point of intersection with the line of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad in the county of Itasca, in said state; and to that end the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company hereby makes the following proposition:

1. Said county of Polk shall make and issue negotiable cupon bonds thereof to the amount of two hundred and twenty thousand dollars, in the denomination of one thousand dollars each, all to bear date the first day of January A. D. 1892, and be payable to the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company or bearer twenty years after date thereof, and not before maturity thereof at the option of said county, and to bear interest from date thereof payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year, and at the rate of five per cent per year.

2. Said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company, in consideration of said aid and bonds shall and will, at the election of said county of Polk, issue thereto such number of the shares of its capital stock as will, at the par value of said stock, correspond with the principal sum of such bonds.

3. All said bonds shall be deposited in escrow prior to any delivery thereof to said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company and such deposite shall be made with the first National Bank of Crookston, a corporation duly formed organized and existing under and by virtue of the National Banking act of the United States of America, and having its principal place of business, office and residence at the city of Crookston, county of Polk, and state of Minnesota, and all the stock certificates for said shares of stock shall likewise be deposited and placed with the same depository and at the same time with said bonds; and all said bonds and stock certificates shall be and remain in the possession and custody of the said First National Bank of Crookston until all said portion of the line of railroad of the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company, extending from a point within the said city of Crookston to the point of intersection or junction thereof, with the said Duluth & Winnipeg railroad, in the said county of Itasca, shall have been located, constructed and completed according to the ordinary standard gague and in actual operation with cars running thereon.

4. The said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company in consideration of said aid and bonds, shall and will, prior to the first day of December A. D. 1892, well and truly locate construct and complete according to the ordinary standard gague and put in actual operation with cars running thereon, all that portion of its said line of railroad extending from a point within said city of Crookston to the point of intersection or junction thereof with the Duluth & Winnipeg Railroad in said county of Itasca.

5. Within thirty days from and after (and under no circumstances until after) completion and actual operation as aforesaid by the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company of all said portion of its said line of railroad the said First National Bank of Crookston shall deliver all said stock certificates to said county of Polk and all said bonds to the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company upon production of the certificate, in writing of the Railway Commissioners of the state of Minnesota, or one of them, to the effect that upon examination and inspection actually made and had, the said portion of said line of railroad has been duly and properly constructed, completed and put in operation as aforesaid.

6. It is mutually understood that the construction, maintainance and operation of said portion of the line of railroad of the said Duluth and Dakota Railway Company will furnish to the farmers, merchants and other inhabitants of said county of Polk a competing line of railway transportation from the several stations thereof in said county to the head of Lake Superior, and that such competing line will be shorter than any now existing line or lines of transportation between any point within said county and the head of Lake Superior by an estimated distance of not less than fifty miles; and in order to permanently secure and insure to all the inhabitants of said county the advantages now contemplated and which ought to accrue to them from the construction, maintainance and operation, of said competing line, and the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company in consideration of said aid and bonds, hereby guarantees, on behalf of itself and its successors and assigns, to said county and to each and all the inhabitants thereof that the rate for transportation of grain, merchandise or other commodity to any station on the line of the said Duluth & Dakota Railway within said county of Polk from the head of Lake Superior or from any such station to the head of Lake Superior shall never exceed the rate per bushel or per ton per mile now being charged by any or either of the now existing line or lines of railway extending between any station in said county and the head of said Lake Superior.

It testimony whereof the said Duluth & Dakota Railway Company has caused this instrument to be signed by its President and Secretary and to be duly sealed with its corporate seal.

Dated July 14th A. D. 1891.

[CORPORATE SEAL.]

Now therefore notice is hereby given that a special election will be held and had in and for said county for the purpose of voting upon the said proposition.

On The Twenty-Fifth Day Of August A. D. 1891.

and that the polls will be open in the various towns, wards and precints, from nine o'clock in the forenoon until five o'clock in the afternoon of said day.

Given under my hand and seal this 5th day of August, 1891.

C. U. Webster
County Auditor, Polk County Minn.
[Official Seal Polk County.]

AGREEMENT.

In addition to the above proposition the following contract has been entered into between the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company and the county of Polk:

This agreement, made and entered into this 21st day of July A. D. 1891 by and between the board of County Commissioners of Polk County in the State of Minnesota, party of the first and the Duluth & Dakota Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Minnesota, party of the second part; witnesseth:—

Whereas the said party of the second part is about to make and is making its application or proposition for county bonds in said Polk County, for the purpose of aiding in the building of the railway of the said party of the second part; and.

Whereas, in order to secure said bonds said party of the second part is desirous of entering into an agreement with said party of the first part in behalf of the people of said Polk county, whereby the rate on wheat shipped from any point in the County of Polk, on the line of railway of said party of the second part to the head of Lake Superior, shall not exceed the rate of twelve and one-half (12½) cents per hundred (100) pounds from said point of shipment to said destination,

Now therefore, said party of the second part hereby agrees that it will at all times and seasons carry or procure to be carried all wheat delivered to it at stations along the line of its railway in said Polk county, at a rate not to exceed twelve and one-half (12½) cents per hundred (100) pounds for the carrying of said wheat to the head of Lake Superior, provided, however, that said Polk county shall vote favorably upon the proposition of said party of the second part for bonds to aid in the building of its said railway, and that said bonds to the amount, not to exceed two hundred and twenty thousand ($220,000) dollars shall be voted and delivered to said railway company when its line of railway shall have been completed from a connection with the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad in Itasca county, Minnesota to a point in the city of Crookston, in said Polk county and state of Minnesota;

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused these presents to be signed and sealed as respective officers and seals, the day and year first above written.

Rustic Parishioners.

The Rev. Augustus Jessop, in his "Trials of a Country Parson," tells some amusing stories concerning his rustic English parishioners. The mistakes which hearers make in interpreting sermons, he says, are simply endless, and sometimes almost incredible. No invention of the most inveterate story teller could equal the facts which are matters of weekly exprience.

"As you was a-saying in your sarmon, 'tarnal mowing won't du wirout 'tarnal making—you mind that! yer ses, an' I did mind it tu, an' we've got up that hay surprising!"

Mr. Perry had just a little misconceived my words. I had quoted from Philip Van Artevelde, "He that lacks time to mourn, lacks time to mend. Eternity mourns that!"

Not many months ago I was visiting a good, simple old man, who was death stricken, and had been long lingering on the verge of the dark river. "I've been thinking, sir, of that little hymn as you said about the old devil when he was took bad. I should like to hear that again."

I was equal to the occasion:

The devil was sick—the devil a saint would be;
The devil was got well—not a bit of a saint was he.

"Is that what you mean?"

Yes! it was that. "Well, I've been a-thinkin, if the old devil had laid a bit longer and been afflicted same as some on 'em, as he'd 'a' been the better for it. Ain't there no more of that there little hymn, sir?"

Pennies in the Post Box.

"The postoffice department makes a small sum of money out of the people of this city every year in a way that is rather out of the ordinary," said Mr. L. M. Bergman, assistant superintendent of the city delivery division at the postoffice. "The collectors in their rounds, you know, frequently find in the letter boxes pennies, two or more.

"Where do they come from? Why, people put them there of course. Very often a person wants to mail a letter and has not a stamp ready, so what more simple, thinks he, than to drop the letter along with a couple of pennies into the nearest box, taking it for granted that the good natured postoffice officials will buy him a stamp and save him the trouble of sticking it on.

"Again, a person may mail a letter and remember afterward that he failed to stamp it, and, feeling a little doubtful about it, he goes back and drops a couple of coppers into the slot, thinking that it will be all right. So it would if there were only twice as many pennies collected as there are letters. But this is not the case. Lots of people forget to stamp their letters and then fail to drop two pennies into the box afterward, and it is impossible for us to tell to which letters the pennies belong. All the letters and money are brought to this office, and the pennies are carefully preserved and eventually transmitted to the department. In this way I have collected and turned in $6 within six months."—Washington Star.

JAPANESE ORATORS.

Their Methods of Speaking in Public.

Of the speakers it must be said, in general that the Japanese are born talkers, but seldom rise to what we call oratory. Of the means by which we obtain variety of expression they employ little outside of emphasis. Inflection is treated conventionally, and on a theory totally different from ours. Time is made little of as a means of emphasis or otherwise. Even if it were not so, the order of thought in a Japanese sentence would require a peculiar arrangement of rhythm and pauses. Gesture is almost wholly lacking. A certain formal or ceremonious bearing, natural to a native of this land of good breeding, gives the speaker a good presence.

But late years have changed the normal type, and in most speakers one sees the adoption of a number of Western ways. The old rule, for instance and it has only partly passed away), was a strict one that the audience should rise and respond in kind to the speaker's bow at the beginning and at the end of his address. I remember my first learning by experience of this custom at an informal talk on American elections to a roomful of officials at Chiba; for, as I bowed, they came to their feet in a body—unexpectedly to myself—with a unanimity which startled me and made me wonder for an instant what menace this signified. But today, in the National Assembly, one sees very little of this custom. In gestures, too, we discern a marked difference between men of Western education like Mr. Suyematsu, and native-bred speakers like Mr. Arai. In one sense, to be sure, it is hardly correct to write of a change from the normal type of public speaking. Until the seventies there had in fact been little public speaking—other than the Buddhist sermons—in our sense of the term—I mean monologues upon a stated subject. Mr. Fukuzawa, as famous an educator as he is editor, is said to have been the originator of public lectures, and from his example dates the real history of public addresses in Japan. It is the old cannons of expression in reading, story-telling, and conversation, which have been carried into the rostrum, and form the normal type of which I am speaking.—Scribner.

Summary Execution.

A despotic government has its advantages, and among them is the easy collection of a debt, provided the ruler is friendly to the creditor. Ahmed Vefyk Pasha, a Turkish statesman, was once Governor of Broussa, and this story is told of his paternal rule:

A rich man had judgment pronounced against him in favor of a poor man. The latter, owing to the bribes of the rich man, could not obtain execution, and complained to Ahmed Vefyk. After hearing the case, Ahmed saw the debtor riding up to the Konak upon a beautiful Arab horse. He ordered the creditor to sit down, called a messenger, and whispered to him.

The debtor entered the room, and was surprised at the exceptional cordiality of the pasha, who invited him to sit down, to take coffee, and to converse. Presently, when he rose to leave, the pasha pressed him to remain, and kept him more than an hour, until, indeed, a messenger entered the room and placed a small bag on the table before Ahmed.

When the debtor next rose, Ahmed took the bag from the table and gave it to him, stating, "This is yours. You owed so much to this poor man, I have sold your horse, paid him, and this is the balance belonging to you."

"German Syrup"

For Coughs & Colds.

John F. Jones, Edom, Tex., writes: I have used German Syrup for the past six years, for Sore Throat, Cough, Colds, Pains in the Chest and Lungs, and let me say to any-one wanting such a medicine—German Syrup is the best.

B. W. Baldwin, Carnesville, Tenn., writes: I have used your German Syrup in my family, and find it the best medicine I ever tried for coughs and colds. I recommend it to everyone for these troubles.

R. Schmalhausen, Druggist, of Charleston, Ill., writes: After trying scores of prescriptions and preparations I had on my files and shelves, without relief for a very severe cold, which had settled on my lungs, I tried your German Syrup. It gave me immediate relief and a permanent cure. ⓪

A TRIBUTE.

Roses red and white and gold,
Breathing balm from every fold,
Lily-of-the-vale,
Jessamine fair and violet blue,
Cowslip with your regal hue,
Drooping faint and pale.

Mosses green and ivy vine,
Dahlia blooms and eglantine,
Heart's-ease sighing low,
Royal tulips grand and gay,
Hyacinths that sportive play,
In the sunbeam's glow.

Daisy buds that nestled cool
By the forest's drowsy pool,
When the May flowers came,
Sweet arbutus pink and shy,
Pansies bluer than the sky,
Crocus cups of flame.

Snowy lilies, white and fair,
Bend above the golden hair,
Bright as sunlit skies,
Where the bending willows wave,
O'er that grass-grown, lowly grave,
There our loveliest lies.

SOME ODD PEOPLE.

I suppose that every neighborhood has its collection of cranks and other odd people. In ours, which is a country town adjacent to New York, are several worth mentioning.

One of our queerest is a maiden lady known as "Old Aunt Mary."

When she was of marriageable age her wealthy father "Old King Crane," died and left to her as her share of the estate, a fine, large and unfinished house.

This was twenty-five years ago, and strange to say, Aunt Mary, at that time young and goodlooking and in love, as the story goes, moved in the empty and unfinished house and, stranger to say, has lived there alone ever since with not even as much as a cat for company and without letting a single person of any kind or description stick as much as a nose in the door during those long years. Not a doctor, nor a minister, nor a relative, male or female, nor a servant nor workman ever crossed the threshold until one night when Aunt Mary was at prayer meeting and a fire broke out in the house in her absence.

Then the whole town, it seemed, poured in apparently to put out the fire, but really to explore the mystery which had troubled them so much.

For years previous to the fire the young people, particularly the young ladies, had tried by every artifice to gain admittance. Some disguised as Sisters of Charity had ventured to push through the doorway when Aunt Mary, ready for them, as quickly pushed them back again.

Once she had the chimneys repaired, but the masons had to reach the spot with long ladders from outside.

The house stood on an acre plot and about it were barrels of lime and timbers and bundles of lath which time and weather turned into grass covered mounds.

The house itself wasn't painted and the front door and some windows were of rough boards nailed on temporarily as was thought by the carpenters when the old man died.

But they never had a chance to finish their work, for Aunt Mary took immediate possession and held the fort against all intruders.

When the fire occurred Aunt Mary had changed a good deal since when she moved in.

They say she grew in that shape by continually crouching before the fire, for she used no chairs, though able to buy a factory full of them.

In spite of her hermit life at home, outside she took an active part, especially in the church, to which she had given a steeple bell.

She also did her own marketing, and was always an object of curiosity when she went to the stores, and carried her purchases away after paying the cash for them.

To recur to the fire. The flames were first seen about 8 o'clock on a summer's evening creeping through the closed window blinds of the downstairs room in which she lived. It was a very small fire, and quickly extinguished, but somehow the whole village had the news of it and were rushing through the house from cellar to attic before Mary Ann got an idea of the sacrilege going on. And what they discovered inside was dirt and confusion and neglect.

All the papers which Aunt Mary had carted home on bundles for over twenty years were piled in great heaps in the corners of the unfinished downstair rooms. Likewise all the twenty years' sweepings and scrapings were in the same piles, while spiders and cobwebs covered the ceilings. A marble mantel lay on the floor of the hall. Over this Aunt Mary had leaped or climbed for a quarter of a century. But one bedroom was furnished and that scantily indeed. A few pots and pans and dishes, black with smoke and rust, were in her dining room or kitchen.

While the mob in the house were exploring the mystery of it Aunt Mary made her appearance, escorted by her brother, the squire, and greatly incensed at the liberties being taken, ordered everyone, brother included, to leave the house. The crowd needed no second command, for as soon as they knew its ghostly owner was there they left almost as quickly as they had entered.

Then Aunt Mary, once more in sole possession of her haunted home, barricaded the broken doors and windows and hiring the town constable to guard the exterior, she watched over the inside till morning.

All the repairs of the fire damage were done by the workmen reaching in from outside ladders as before.

After this excitement and intrusion Aunt Mary wasn't as well as usual. Still she allowed none, not even her relatives, to cross her threshold and agreed, when they insisted on caring for her, to hang every morning from her bedroom window a sheet to show she was alive and to prevent a forcible entry.

One morning, however, the sheet was missing, and her brothers and sisters marched in and found her too sick to rise from her bed or make resistance.

They carried her out to their adjacent home, where the good, eccentric Aunt Mary soon passed away. Disappointment in love was the cause of her queer and lonely life.

Another curious character in our neighborhood was "Vagabond Jake." He owned a good house and twenty acres of land, but failing somehow to agree with his wife he gallantly left her the house and camped out in his barn, keeping house there for himself many years.

After awhile he found it pleasanter for all hands to leave the barn and take to the woods.

There summer and winter he managed to exist in a rude shanty he built, and in company with his faithful dog, his old horse and a young untrained and unshod colt he enjoyed freedom and comparative comfort.

He looked as much like Santa Claus as could be, and was always talkative and cheerful to those whom he met.

Being a fine stone-cutter he earned sufficient for his needs by digging out a suitable stone, dressing it for a horse block and selling it to his customers.

He was very bitter against European kings, and always advocated "popping them off" in short order.

He made a picture for an artist when he came along the road to sell his stepping blocks of stone.

Sitting on his old two-wheeled sulky wagon, with his short legs astraddle the block a piece of old carpet on his shoulders for a coat, his feet tied in bits of a buffalo robe, the fur outside, for shoes; under a delapidated slouch hat; with a short pipe sticking through his grizzly beard and bright eyes glittering beneath shaggy eye-brows; with his pet colt following the wagon and his dog following the colt, he was a circus for small boys and an object of wonder for men. Though living in the woods within sight of his home and wife and grown up children and often passing them on his farm he never spoke to them or they to him.

Independent he was, too and always spurned any offers of assistance from the neighbors who sympathized with poor old Jake.

His household effects of old boards and boxes only he carted about from one piece of woods to another, according to where he chose to squat.

Finally after years of that kind of living Santa Claus Jake got a severe cold and a kind hearted neighbor took him in and cared for him till he died, leaving his all—two horses and a dog—to his benefactor.

One more oddity in our road is a man born without legs and walking on his hands.

He keeps a country store and when his customers want anything from the shelves, up he climbs like a monkey and gets the article.

He, also, is married to a fine looking lady who thinks the world of him and is probably glad he can't run away.

These are but a few of the queer people in our neighborhood. The others are too numerous to mention.—H. O. Dodge in Chicago Sun.

CAUSES OF WAR.

Brought About by the Most Trifling Circumstances.

Among the curiosities of history is the oft-recurring fact that many of the great wars of the past have been indirectly brought about by trifling circumstances. One of the wars between the Turkish empire in the zenith of its splendor and the Venetian republic was brought about by the desire of the sultan's physician to marry a rich Spanish heiress. The lady and her mother escaped to Venice, and the sultan sent an official after them to bring them back to Constantinople. The Venetian republic was at first willing to comply with the sultan's request, but the ladies succeeded in making their escape to Ferrara, and from thence to Lyons, in France. The Porte complained that the Venetian republic had not used due diligence, and ultimately a terrible war broke out over this trivial circumstance. A contemporary historian says: "The agent of the Venetian government at Constantinople informed the council that the reason of the dispatch of the Turkish Envoy to Venice was, to require on the part of the Grand Seigneur that a Spanish lady, named Mendez, with her daughters, should be delivered up to the Envoy, and by him brought to Constantinople. The common rumor was, that the lady Mendez had promised to marry one of her daughters to the son of a man named Rodriguez, doctor to the Grand Seigneur. The lady, however, changed her mind, and fled with her daughters to Ferrara, where they remained under the protection of the duke for some time. It is now said that they have gone from Ferrara to Lyons in order to realize funds invested there by the late husband of Lady Mendez. The emissary of the grand seigneur was by no means content with the loss of his prey, and there was trouble in consequence." This information is contained in a letter written from Venice in July, 1549, by M. Morvillier to Henry II. of France, the object being to induce the king to use his authority for the purpose of sending the Lady Mendez and her daughter to Constantinople. The king sent to Lyons for this purpose, but found that the ladies had again taken flight, and were supposed to be at Antwerp.—American Register.

A Comparison.

Although Berlin is ahead of Chicago in the matter of taking care of the children of the poor, the old seat of German royalty and learning stands no show in a comparison with this young American city when it comes to the tastes of the masses for reading and the means for satisfying it. While Chicago spends about $150,000 for a public library Berlin spends only $6,250 for its popular libraries. While the circulation of the Chicago library amounted to 1,290,914 volumes last year, that of Berlin's libraries reached only 334,837. While Chicago's library was visited by nearly 600,000 people in 1890 those of Berlin were called upon by only 14,000. The statistics of popular libraries in other German cities are equally insignificant in comparison with those of the Chicago institution.—Chicago News.

We Have Syrians Also.

It is not generally known that there is a colony of Syrians in Macon, Ga., yet such is the fact. They are small tradesmen, dealers in fruit, etc. For some time they congregated at a little fruit stall on Fourth street, near Cherry, but are now scattered in various places around the city. When at home they wear the fez and some other parts of oriental costume, but when at business they don ordinary clothing and appear as American citizens.

A MILLION A YEAR.

Lottery and Prize Schemes Used to Sell Alum and Ammonia Baking Powders.

A New York concern, manufacturers of an ammonia baking powder boasts that its yearly profits are over a million dollars. While perhaps, none of the makers of alum powders individually can show so large earnings yet their profits are enormous.

A business so profitable, will always attract to itself those whose greed will cause them to utterly disregard the effect their traffic may have upon the health or life of others.

Alum baking powders are introduced largely by gifts, prizes and lottery schemes. A piece of glassware or china, a child's wagon, sled a pewter spoon or some other article of attractive appearance, but of small intrinsic value or cost is given with each purchase or a number is attached to the can which entitles the customer to a similarly numbered article or to a prize of some kind. It is in some such way as this that the trade in alum and ammonia baking powders, which has now attained such giant proportions and their consumption by the public which has reached an extent which is truly alarming.

The highest authorities of all countries condemn the use of alum in bread without reserve. In America the most distinguished physicians, chemists and hygienists have declared that the traffic in alum baking powders should be suppressed by law. In England and France where the subject of pure food, and its effects upon the system, has been more fully considered and made the subject of extended experiments by the scientists, so serious a matter is the use of alum in bread or other food considered to be, that most stringent laws have been enacted to prevent it. These laws are rigidly enforced, and the sale of alum baking powders would not be permitted for an hour. Any one who attempted to make them for use in food, or attempt to use them for raising bread, biscuit or cake would suffer severe penalties.

The ill effect upon the system of food raised by alum baking powders are the more dangerous because of their insidious character. It would be less dangerous to the community were it fatal at once, for then such food would be avoided; but their deleterious action because imperceptible at first is no less certain.

The puckering effect which alum has when taken in the mouth is familiar to everyone. Physicians say this same effect is produced by it upon the delicate coats of the stomach and intestines.

What housewife would take home to her family a can of alum or ammonia baking powder if she knew it. Such powders not only undermine the system, but it is pointed out that ammonia taken into the system in even infinetisimal doses day after day, imparts to the complexion a sallow and blotched appearance.

What a misnomer are the words "Absolutely Pure," as applied to baking powders two of the largest selling brands, one made from alum, the other containing ammonia and both of these drugged baking powders have stamped upon their labels and circulars these words absolutely pure, as a matter of fact they are "Absolutely Poor," as shown by official examinations.

AN AWKWARD HABIT.

A Distinguished Peer Makes a Bad Break.

The habit of thinking aloud was a peculiarity of one of the Earls of Dudley, and of this an amusing anecdote is told.

Lord Dudley being invited to the house of a friend, had ordered his carriage at an early hour, having some miles to travel before he could obtain his accustomed repose. To his great mortification, after repeated inquiries for Lord Dudley's carriage, it had not arrived.

One of the guests, seeing how much his lordship was disconcerted by the event, very politely offered him a seat in his. The gentlemen in question had to pass his lordship's house on his return home, and though he was almost a stranger to Lord Dudley, his rank and position in the country were of course well known to him. Nevertheless, they had not been seated in the carriage more than twenty minutes when the peer, who had up to that moment maintained a most perfect silence, observed in a low, but distinctly audible, tone of voice:

"I'm very sorry I accepted his offer. I don't know the man. It was civil, certainly; but the worst is I suppose I must ask him to dinner."

He then relapsed into his former state of taciturnity, when, after a few minutes, the gentleman, pretending to be afflicted with the same failing, and imitating his lordship's tone, observed:—

"Perhaps he'll think I did it to make his acquaintance. Why, I would have done the same to any farmer on his estate. I hope he won't think it necessary to ask me to dinner, for I shan't accept his invitation."

Lord Dudley listened to him with earnest interest, immediately comprehended the joke which he himself had provoked, offered his hand with much hearty good will to his companion, making every proper apology for his involuntary rudeness, and from that night the travelers became inseparable friends.

AN ANSWER.

Brother in pain! thou art not all alone;
Thousands share with thee thy sad, weary moan
Against "the wingless hours with feet of lead."
I, too, lie stretched forever on a bed
Which cannot move from the dark, grimy wall,
Where never freshened airs or sunbeams fall;
While all the weary night I must not dare
To turn, or groan in pity for the worn—
The weary sleepers, who, with toil o'erborne
And hunger pangs, this couch with me must share.
No, leave thy couch to me if Brother Death
Prefer thee first to Heaven; so may my breath,
Draw easier by the window, heave this sigh,
"The angels make the bed where thou dost lie!"

A Place To Grow Up.

Some years ago, Horace Greeley's advice to "Go West, and grow up with the country," was thought not only a smart saying, but good counsel. It is no doubt such still, but its age counts against it some, besides which, there is no longer any unsettled West. The West is new, to be sure, but it has more thriving cities with water-works, electric street cars, eight-story buildings, and town-lot boomers, to the acre, than any other part of the country. For the man who has his fortune to make, the "New South," or the great State of Texas, offer opportunities not to be surpassed. In development they are really newer country than the Northwest or the Pacific coast. To all points in the South, "The Burlington," with its own tracks to St. Louis and Kansas City, is the route beyond all others for the young or old man who is looking southward for a home. Truth.—One of the sublimest things in the world is plain truth.

It will be remembered that Mrs. P. H. Gribbins who was here recently visiting her sister, Mrs. Thomas Rafferty, was almost blind from some disease of the eyes. After returning to her home at 1211 First Avenue, North Minneapolis, she was unable to go out without some-one to lead her, notwithstanding she had been doctoring constantly for six months. About three weeks ago Mr. Rafferty was in Minneapolis and advised her to consult Dr. Frank Powell, (White Beaver) of St. Paul, which she did and in this short time the doctor has produced almost a complete cure.—Lanesboro Minn. Journal, July 31, 1891.

Minnie L. Armstrong, a lady well known in the newspaper field has produced a work on "The Modern Evil" which is liable to cause a greater furore than the Kruetzer Sonata or any other work of a like nature. The author endeavors to show the evils of the modern system of social relations between the sexes and advocates an universal law of divorce and a free and easy divorce at that. She does not think it necessary in order to find perfect happiness in this world, that two loving hearts must appear before a skirted minister or drunken justice to bind them together till death doth them part, but rather that the love which exists between them is a tie strong enough to bind, whatever trials or tribulations may beset them and when that love has lost its power to bind it is better for the unhappy couple to part and be separated.

The author makes her hero utter some very startling truths as for example "can you tell me what difference there is for a woman to sell herself to a man for the clothes she may wear, or the food she may eat, with or without the marriage ceremony? I verily believe that in the eyes of heaven the one who has perjured her soul by standing before the altar and taken upon herself those sacred vows before God, commits the greater sin."

Whilst the usages and traditions of society as it is may not agree with this and other sentiments of a like character still within the thinkers mind there must be a doubt as to whether with all our boasted civilization our social laws tend to increase the happiness of the great majority. It is a difficult question to solve and "The Modern-Evil" will in some measure tend to enlighten the masses by calling attention to the fallacies and corruptness of our present laws. We predict a great sale for the book.

PEOPLE IN PRINT.

REV. GILBERT ELLIOTT, D. D., the well-known English churchman is dead. He was born in 1800 and was appointed dean of Bristol in 1830 and held the office ever since.

KING ALEXANDER, the boy ruler of Servia, who succeeded to the throne upon the abdication of King Milan, is visiting in Vienna and will soon go to Paris.

MINISTER FREDERICK DOUGLASS denies the statement that his resignation as Haytien minister was requested. He resigned, he says, simply because the duties were onerous.

MRS. LELIA ROBINSON SAWTELLE, member of the Massachusetts bar and authoress, died at Amherst, N. H. She was the first woman in Massachusetts to be admitted to practice as a lawyer.

THE story that the king of Belgium has seized the property of ex-Empress Carlotta is ridiculed at the City of Mexico, as those who settled Maxmillian's estates there know that it did not reach 6,000,000 francs.

JUDGE OGDEN HOFFMAN died in San Francisco of paralysis of the heart. Judge Hoffman had been a United States judge for over forty years, longer than any other United States judge in the country.

THE Cologne Gazette asserts that Emperor William is in robust health. On the other hand, the Freisinnige Zeitung says that Prof. Esmarch, the distinguished surgeon, has been summoned to Kiel to attend the emperor. The Kreuz Zeitung declares that the emperor is suffering from a "dislocated knee bone, and that the greatest care is necessary in the treatment."

SPORTS.

PRESIDENT VON DER AHE, of the St Louis Base Ball club, returned from Louisville. He stated that Louisville will stick the season out, and the club will not sell out to Milwaukee or any other city.

A CABLE dispatch from London says that the National Sporting club has decided to hang up a $2,000 purse for a "go" between George Dixon (colored) of Boston and Fred Johnson, the featherweight champion of England. Dixon will be allowed $500 for expenses.

A LONDON cable says that Ted Pritchard accepts the offer of the Olympic club of New Orleans to put up a purse of £2,000 and allow him £1,000 for expenses. He will also fight Fitzsimmons for £1,000 a side and the best purse to be offered in England or America, give £1,000 or take £1,000 for expenses.

HANLAN and O'Connor will row three miles against any other double in the world for from $500 to $5,000 a side, giving or taking expenses, if the course is in America. If any two Australians will come to this continent they will guarantee them two single sculling races for $2,500 a side each and will allow $1,000 for expense if a double scull match is made for $3,000 or more a side.

RAILROADS.

THE Soo has announced an advance in flour rates to 30 cents to Boston and 25 cents to New York. Effective Aug. 20.

MAYOR NOONAN of St. Louis has granted the Pennsylvania a permit to erect a mammoth freight station in that city. This move will make the Pennsylvania the pioneer in directly entering the city and using its own depot.

G. H. KERRIDGE has been appointed soliciting freight agent of the Great Northern in Minneapolis in place of J. L. Westervelt, who resigned recently to accept a similar position with the Soo.

PRESIDENT MCLEOD, of the Philadelphia & Reading, has satisfactorily concluded negotiations for a settlement with the market companies at Twelfth and Market streets, Philadelphia, and will pay $1,000,000 for the same.

THE Great Northern has several special agents at work in Canada distributing emigration literature among the people. The Canadians form very desirable immigrants, and the Great Northern will induce as many of them as possible to settle along their lines.

FOREIGN.

THE notorious Cuban bandit, Santana, has been killed by soldiers.

THE Pacific Mail steamer City of Panama is reported seized at Libertad, San Salvador, or leaving port without properly clearing under the law.

SIR HECTOR LANGEVIN resigns from the Canadian cabinet on account of charges of corruption, but stoutly asserts that he is innocent.

THE members of the Canadian parliament, with three or four exceptions, have signed a round robin agreeing to increase their indemnity from $1,000 to $1,500 per annum.

THE states of Coquilha and Durango, Mexico, report water scarce, crops poor, and no money. A famine has been narrowly averted and the poor people are becoming desperate.

REPORTS from all parts of the Province of Ontario state that the crops are the best in many years. All grains are above the average. Hay is hardly up to the average. Roots and fruits are fair.

IT is stated that reports as to the relations between Chili and Bolivia growing out of the latter's recognition of the insurgents as belligerents, one of which reports was that Chili had declared war against Bolivia, are untrue.

THE Vienna Presse announces the failure of Morpugo & Co., of Frieste, owing to disastrous speculation on the part of the chief clerk. The Paris Rothschilds are creditors to the extent of $1,000,000, but they will not present their claims until the other creditors have been satisfied.

A "Chicago Fair Panorama" is preparing in Paris, in which the French fine arts commissioner is interested. The subject is the fall of Yorktown. Augusta Holmes, the composer of the music for the commemorative fete of the exposition of 1889, is writing a musical composition for the Chicago fair.

WILLIAM FULLERTON, a young American, a graduate of Harvard, replaces M. De Blowitz as the working head of the Paris office of the London Times. M. De Blowitz continues his special contributions. Mr. Fullerton has been connected with the Times staff and has done good editorial work for two years.

AMONG THE TOILERS.

AT Milford, Mass., all the quarrymen working for Darling Bros., numbering about 500, quit work because several delinquent members of the union, who had been suspended for non-payment of dues, were still employed by the superintendent.

AT the fifth annual convention of the International Association of Factory Inspectors at Cleveland, Ohio, the states of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Ohio Minnesota and the province of Ontario were represented.

GENERAL.

FOUR judgments, aggregating $18,250.90 were entered against the Claremont Knitting Company, limited, at Philadelphia.

AN election was held in Texas to vote upon amendments to the constitution providing for the Australian system, enforcing prohibition and other less important matters. The amendments probably carried.

PRESIDENT MCGRATH, of the Kansas Farmers' Alliance, says a large amount of wheat is being held by the farmers of that state for an advance in prices and they will not sell a bushel more than absolutely necessary to supply immediate wants.

UNDER a recent decision of Judge Bryant, of the United States court at Paris, Tex., that it is not a violation of the law to introduce or sell beer in Indian territory, several saloons have been opened in Ardmore. The decision means a thousand saloons in that country in less than three months.

MISS ALICE COOPER, formerly of New York, recently of Paris and now of London, has sued to annul her marriage with her cousin, Walter Beverly Crane. She declares that Crane threatened to shoot her if she did not marry him, and neglected her and lived openly with other women when he found that, contrary to expectation, his wife was not rich.

WORK on the Worlds Fair buildings at Chicago is being pushed rapidly forward at Jackson park. The woman's building will be ready for roofing by Sept. 1. The terraces for the fisheries building is completed, also the dredging of the lagoon. The canal is practically finished and the central basin is well under way. The preliminary work on the naval exhibit is also progressing satisfactorily and 5,870 feet of railway track have been laid during the week. The foundation of the electrical exhibit building is nearly completed and work commenced on the horticultural and administrative buildings has been commenced.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Gustave Johnson was declared insane by Probate Judge Ayer and sent to St. Peter. He has been in Duluth about two months working. His family are at St. Cloud.

The directors of the Riverside Milling Company of Little Falls have just held their annual meeting. The principal stock holders are from Cincinnati. They found things in a very satisfactory condition.

There is another strike among the workmen putting in the mains for waterworks at Albert Lea, this time a raise being wanted from $1.50 to $2 per pay, but some claim it was for back pay.

Oscar Davenport, Hank Driscoll and Fuller Mitchell were taken to jail at Faribault, being sentenced to 50, 40 and 10 days respectively under the Schaffer law.

Joseph Labo, of Buffalo while riding with Miss Evelyn Payne, of Minneapolis, was thrown out of the buggy by his horse running away. As he is 70 years old, the injuries may prove fatal.

J. D. Stout, principal of the Canton public school, mysteriously disappeared from the Park Hotel, at Preston the other morning. Neighbors are searching for him. He had only been married a few weeks.

Sheriff Quinn arrested Julius Schultzer at Sauk Rapids fiendishly punishing his 9-year-old son. He grasped the boy by the feet swinging him over his head on to the ground inflicting injuries which may prove fatal.

The new creamery building at Lake Crystal was totally destroyed by fire the other morning. It had only been running three months. The plant was considered to be worth between $3,000 and $4,000. There was $2,500 insurance.

The following instructors have been engaged at Red Wing Seminary for the coming year: Professors. G. O. Brohough, C. A. Hill, H. H. Elstad, and one yet to be engaged for the preparatory department; Professor H. H. Bergsland and Rev. O. S. Meland for the theological department.

John A. Anderson, of Madison, threshed out 658 bushels and 20 pounds of wheat from 15½ acres of ground. This shows a yield of 43½ bushels per acre. It weighed 61 pounds to the measured bushel at the Pacific elevator.

The first shipment of this year's wheat has just been made from Marshall. The wheat yielded a little over twenty-five bushels to the acre, graded No. 1, and tested, in the dirt, sixty-two pounds. We never had such crops before. Wheat will all grade No. 1.

What is supposed to be a skeleton was discovered 135 feet below the surface in a well being drilled at Hokah for J. J. Hohl. The bones were brought up in small pieces and seem to be well preserved. They were examined but it was impossible to determine the nature or to what species it belongs.

A 5-year-old boy of Ole Brown, of Christiana township, Jackson county, set fire to a lot of straw surrounding his father's barn. Discovering what he had done the little fellow crawled into the barn where the flames overtook and cremated him. Two horses, four head of cattle and a number of harnesses were also burned.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Two Children of Mrs. Ruthven died of diphtheria at Sioux Falls. They were by a former husband, Freeman Potter of Iowa, who came over and nursed them until they died.

At a joint meeting of the Knights of Labors and Miners' Unions of Lead City, Central City and Deadwood, it was decided to hold their celebration of Labor Day in this city, Sept. 1. About 2,000 members of the different unions will be in line.

C. K. Neff's warehouse, at Groton containing $600 worth of hardware burned. The stock is fully insured. The building was owned by L. Sanders; no insurance; value, $100. The fire originated by the proprietor stepping on a match.

A man supposed to be an escaped convict from the Wisconsin penitentiary was arrested at Yankton. He refuses to divulge his name, but his overhalls are marked "M. Dale. No. 1," and the authorities are satisfied they have the right man.

The annual encampment of the Knights of Pythias of the Black Hills, will be held in Custer, commencing Sept. 24, and continue for three days. It will be the largest encampment ever held in the Western part of the state. A large amount of money has been raised by the citizens for the occasion. A grand excursion upon Lake Custer will be one of the main features of the meeting.

J. M. Bailey, president of the Minnehaha National bank of Sioux Falls who has been ill for several months and who has just returned from Europe, where he went for his health, is now lying in a precarious condition at his father's home in Freeport Ills. Even if he recovers, his physicians say he will not be able to do any business for three months at least.

The cattle shipped from Minneola recently have been of a better quality than ever sent to the Eastern markets from the Northwestern ranges. The Continental Cattle Company shipped 1,200 head of four-year old steers that netted them $71.50 per head in Chicago. The Driskill Bros. shipped 40 carloads—840 head—of 3-year-old steers that brought $56 net per head in the same market. Cattle are fatter and better upon the western South Dakota ranges this season than they have ever been known to be before in the history of cattle raising in the Black Hills.

Hon. S. W. Bowman, deputy land commissioner, is at work in the Black Hills country. He is in the Western part of the state for the purpose of selecting and locating government lands which are due the state for school purposes. He found several thousand acres in Butte and Meade counties, and will visit Fall River counties, but does not expect to find any land either in Pennington, Custer or Fall River counties. The department has refused to allow any of the lately ceded Sioux lands to be entered by the state. Mr. Bowman has no expectation of finding anything near enough to cover the state's deficiency.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Col. Plummer and Deputy Olsgaard made arrangements for the opening of the Minot land office Oct. 1.

Bella, the 12-year-old daughter of Martin Rood, a prominent farmer of Manvel, while playing with her sister remarked she felt ill and immediately fell over, dying in a few moments. No cause can yet be assigned for her sudden death.

A peculiar case was filed with the clerk of the supreme court. It is the case of Gould vs. the Duluth & Dakota Elevator Company, and the peculiarity about it is that both parties appeal for the decision of the trial court.

About two thousand people attended a public reception to Bishop Shanley at Fargo on his taking possesion of his new residence here, which stands in beautiful grounds of seven and a half acres on the river bank, about three blocks from the heart of the city.

J. B. Wineman, chief grain inspector, will soon open his office at Fargo and complete arrangements for the inspection of all grain in the Eastern part of the state. The general opinion among farmers seems to be favorable to the measure. They believe it will insure an increased price for North Dakota product.

General Agent Sims of the M. & N. Elevator Company of Grand Forks states that when the wheat now ripening is ready for market he shall continue to take care of wheat for farmers just as he has in the past. Farmers will insist on the elevator companies handling it for them, notwithstanding the action of the elevator companies.

At a recent meeting of the pharmaceutical association of this state, resolutions were passed asking the attorney-general for his opinion in regard to the purchasing of affidavits or druggists permits for the sale of liquor. The law says that each druggist shall return to the county auditor each month all affidavits he has on hand whether used or not and this was the point objected to. Druggists, instead of buying a new supply of blanks each month, would like to utilize the unsold blanks of the previous month and return only those used. The attorney-general interprets the law as printed and say there is no other course for the druggists to pursue.

WISCONSIN.

August Ekshorn, 25 years old, was drowned while bathing in the Namekagon river at Hayward. The body was recovered.

News has reached Chippewa Falls of the death by drowning of the 12-year-old son of Mr. Preblein Drywood creek, 10 miles from this city.

A resident of Cadott, brings information of the suicide of John Rusk in that village. He blew his brains out. Domestic trouble is assigned as the cause.

Louis Nade has left for Alaska where he will bring suit against parties who it is alleged fraudulently secured an interest in his silver mine property at St. James Bay.

The eight year old son of Jame Donovan a prominent resident of Chippewa Falls received fatal injuries recently by being run over by a team of horses, hitched to a heavy load.

James O'Hara of Chippewa Falls nurses a badly broken leg the result of an encounter with James Haley, a business competitor. Money differences led to the trouble.

The new whaleback barge No. 115 will be launched at West Superior soon. No. 116 will be launched at a date in the near future. Work of preparation for a busy winter's work at the ship yard is now in progress.

Rev. T. D. Richey, for the past nine years senior canon of Fond du Lac Cathedral, has accepted a call from Christ Episcopal Church, of Chippewa Falls, and will assume the rectorship Sept. 1.

David Sideman, a Jewish peddler, has been arrested on instruction from the authorities at Darlington, this state, where he is wanted for larceny. Sideman claims to have rich friends in Chicago, to whom he has telegraphed for assistance.

The august term of the circuit court opened at West Superior with Judge Marshall on the bench. The calendar contains 230 civil cases but only 18 is criminal. It is expected the term will occupy about four weeks. The case of the State vs. Nels Lunding was commenced. The defendant is charged with highway robbery.

The new M. E. Church of Chetek was dedicated with imposing and impressive ceremonies. The following clergymen were present from abroad: Rev. Bushnell, of Bayfield, Wis.; the presiding elder, S. Shirin, of St. Paul; Rev. Pepper, of Barron; Rev. Brown, of Cadet River; Mr. Sanderson and Rev. Good, of Chetek.

It is reliably stated that the American Steel Barge Company, of West Superior is already outlining plans for employing the steel whalebacks on the Mississippi river. The river, cities and individual interests looking to a betterment of ocean and river commerce are co-operating to that end. The whaleback vessels, with the advantage they have over the ocean craft as respects less draught, combined with equal carrying capacity, can traverse the river from St. Louis to the gulf.

IOWA.

Mrs. Winfield W. Mossman, wife of a prominent farmer living near Urbana, suicided by hanging. No cause known.

The great packing house of Jas. Booge & Sons, Sioux City, was sold to the Union Stock Yards Company.

Clarence Risdon, a 6-year-old boy at Troy Mills, was kicked in the head by a horse, fracturing the skull. It is not thought he can live.

While "playing doctor" at Burlington the young son of James Moore poured carbolic acid down his little brother's ear, causing an agonizing death.

The retreat of the Dominick sisters, at Sinsinnawa Mound, closed with the reception of quite a number of novices and postulants. A large number of visitors were present.

During a storm that raged at Cedar Rapids the other night lighting struck the barn of Mr. Selick, a farmer living near Marcen, which together with four horses and contents burned. Loss over $1,000.

The two sharpers who swindled Dave King out of $2,000 at Algon were received upon payment of the $2,000 besides fines and costs amounting in all to $2,600. They left for Chicago.

The two children of Albert White of Moulton, had a thrilling experience while out picking berries. A pack of wolves got after them and chased them some distance, and but for the interference of a farmer with a gun might have overpowered them.

Robert R. Reynolds, of Anamosa, while bathing in the Wapsie river, gave out and drowned. Clyde Lamson, who was in the water with him attempted to save him but narrowly escaped himself, only breaking lose from Reynolds after both had gone down twice.

A Waterloo special says: A terrible electric storm visited this section doing much damage. A barn was struck by lightning and burned, together with a horse and several vehicles. Several stacks of hay and grain were burned and the electric lights were struck eight times.

The attendance at the annual meeting of the grand lodge, Knights of Pythias, at Sioux City is the greatest in the history of the order. There were 1,000 delegates in attendance. The Iowa brigade, uniform rank, held a meeting to exemplify the secret work of the order. There is a lively contest over the election of officers.

A man named Arlington and four others were taken before Squire Moon at Cresco, and fined for attempting to defraud Hotelkeeper W. Strother out of their board bill. These fellows have been going about the village and country taking pictures to enlarge, and collecting 50 cents in advance. It has been learned that there is no such company as the one they pretend to represent. They have collected several hundred dollars in this vicinity. They have been rearrested on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

A VERY SHREWD FOX.

He Managed to Escape From an Island by Simulating Death.

A recent writer tells an anecdote which, though taxing belief, he says is vouched for by an eyewitness of the affair. Some fishermen on the west coast of Ireland were in the habit of going to a small island a few hundred yards from the mainland, in quest of bait. The island was inhabited by large numbers of rabbits, and could be reached at low tide by wading, the water there being only a few inches deep. One morning they went in their boat quite early, it being high tide, and on landing saw a dead fox lying on the beach. The fur of the animal was all bedraggled, and he seemed to have been drowend. One of the men, remarking that his skin was worth something, pitched him into the boat.

Procuring their bait they returned to the mainland, and the man who had possessed himself of the fox seized him by the tail and flung him on the shore. As soon as the animal struck the beach he picked himself up with considerable agility for a dead fox, and shot off like a flash up among the cliffs, while the men stood staring at each other in mute astonishment. The men concluded that he had crossed over to the island during the night when the tide was low, in search of rabbits and finding in the morning he was cut off from the mainland, counterfeited death, with the expectation of thereby procuring a passage to the shore in a boat, an expectation which was fully realized.—Boston Courier.

He Wanted to Know.

The Trappist monastery situated in Kentucky is the home of those monks upon whom the injunction of perpetual silence is placed. The stories that sift through to the outside world, with more or less romantic detail, concerning the individual monks of La Trappe are many. There is one told of a brother at Gethsemane which is old but full of dramatic suggestion. He was a soldier of Napoleon, so it was said, and after the emperor's first abdication took the cowl of the "Brown brothers" and ultimately came to Gethsemane.

Forty years he lived in silence, hearing nothing of the world's history, but with one item of curiosity left unquenched. When he came to die and was lifted from his hard couch and laid upon the harder floor, strewn with straw, when all followers of the order must meet extremes, the abbot, as is customary, told him he was at liberty to ask any questions he desired. "What became of the emperor?" the old man asked promptly, and then for the first time learned Napoleon's fate, long years after that restless clay had become dust.—Richmond State.

WILLIAM WAS MAD.

A Story Published in a Paris Paper Concerning the Emperor's Sickness.

PARIS, Aug. 17.—The Paris Eclair, which is not given to sensationalism, prints the following story as confirmed by unquestioned authority: On the night following the departure of the imperial yacht Hohenzollern from England the crew was beaten to quarters and was surprised to find the quarter deck illuminated. An altar had been erected on the deck bearing the Old and New Testaments and the kaiser stood by wearing a white chasuble with a crozier in his hand and a black and white mitre on his head.

He read the most warlike passages from the Testaments, and invited the crew to respond. He then preached a long sermon on the duty of sovereigns to their people, the whole service lasting from 11 p. m. to 2 a. m. The crew was then piped below. At 5 a. m. the kaiser appered on the bridge in the uniform of a high admiral, looking baggard, and, addressing the commander, said: "Sir, retire to your cabin; I shall take charge."

The commander replied; "Sire, permit me to observe that we are in a dangerous passage, and that it is advisable for your majesty's safety as well as for that of the crew that a sailor remain in command."

The emperor responded: "Never mind; God will inspire me."

The commander bowed and retired.

The second officer remaining, the emperor angrily bade him retire, the officer respectfully protesting.

The emperor then said: "You resist, wretched creature; you trouble the spirit of God which is in me. This is the vengeance of God upon you," dealing the officer a heavy blow on the cheek. The officer turned crimson, but remained until the emperor seized him by the throat and tried to throw him overboard.

In the struggle that followed the emperor fell and broke his knee cap. The sailors watched the scene paralyzed with fear. The occurrence was one that cannot be forgotten. The emperor howled with pain; his eyes started from their sockets; he foamed at the mouth. He swore terribly, and, in fact, displayed all the symptoms of madness.

The officers, after a brief consultation, carried him into a cabin padded with mattresses. Nobody was admitted except the doctor and the empress. Men were necessary to help restrain him until his leg was bandaged and a straight jacket was put on him. The crisis lasted three days.

GARFIELD DENOUNCED.

Don Piatt Turns Upon His Life-Long and Now Dead Friend.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 17.—Don Piatt, in a letter from Makocheé to the Plaindealer, gives some personal recollections that throw a vivid light on the life of James A. Garfield, and show his character in an unfavorable light. In his letter Mr. Piatt says:

"I thought for many years that I knew Garfield. We were, before the war, in the war and after in the political arena, intimate as brothers. I sympathized with and sorrowed over his struggle for life after being shot down by a maniac, and cried like a child when the news reached me of his cruel death. But a sorrow deeper than this was reserved for me when years after, engaged upon the life of Gen. George H. Thomas, I came upon Garfield's confidential letter to Salmon P. Chase, written from Rosecrans' headquarters at Murfreesboro. I was fairly stunned, for my investigation of the events of that wonderful campaign gave me an information that the public was deprived of. This letter was the cause of the bloody battle of Chicamauga and all the loss we suffered in the terrible two days' fighting. I write this with reluctance now. But these are facts that must sooner or later pass to public record. I did not know how tenderly attached I was to this eminent man until, reading his letter by the lurid light of disastrous events, I was forced to take out all vestige of affection from my heart. I was driven to the painful conclusion that the man to whom I had given so many years of disinterested devotion was not a living reality, but

A CREATURE OF MY IMAGINATION.

"Garfield's crime was this: When Lieut Col. Garusche, Gen. Rosecrans' chief of staff, was killed at the battle of Stone River, Garfield, through Salmon P. Chase, then secretary of the treasury, made application for the position. Secretary Chase got Rosecrans to make application for the assignment, and Garfield was appointed Rosecrans' chief of staff. Rosecrans found Garfield positively lovable, for Garfield labored to secure his chief's confidence, and yet Garfield, in the midst of Rosecrans' troubles with the war department arising out of his demand for supplies and reinforcements, sat down in the solitude of his tent and wrote a confidental letter to Salmon P. Chase, in which he denounced his general as an imbecile, utterly incapable of commanding such an army as that of the Cumberland.

"Chase was at first stunned and then demoralized. He admired Stanton, and anyway felt a reluctance to interfere in his department, especially against its head. He dropped the contest and left Rosecrans to his fate, who without the reinforcements—necessary to protect his flank crossed three ranges of almost inaccessible mountains, a deep, wide river and maneuvered Bragg out of the grand gateway of the South that, when taken as Thomas had promised, brought the deadly conflict to a close. Had Rosecrans been given what he had reasonably a right to demand, the mounted infantry, he would have occupied Chattanooga without the loss of a man. All the blood of these two awful days came from the one treacherous letter that demoralized one friend and nearly destroyed the other."

Quite a Deficit.

PARIS, Aug. 17.—The French wheat crop is estimated at 90,000,000 hectolitres, leaving a deficit of 32,000,000 hectolitres. The customs sur tax on wheat will therefore be suspended for one year.

SIOUX KICKERS.

Yankton Indians Protest Against the Pipestone School.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Aug. 17.—The Yankton Indians in South Dakota have protested to the Indian office against the building of the Indian school at Pipestone on the ground that it interferes with their rights in the Pipestone reservation. This is the school that John Lind labored so hard for during the last congress and finally succeeded in getting an appropriation of $25,000 for. The Indian office has as yet taken no action in the matter, but the protest of the Yankton Sioux will be disregarded.

The Yanktons have always been considered when any treaties were made which affected the Pipestone reservation, for the Indian office believes that this tribe have undoubted rights in it, but as complaints have been frequently made of depredations upon the pipestone the Indian office believes that no better guard could be placed upon the reservation than an Indian school. Besides, congress authorized the school located there and it would take more than a Yankton protest to turn the Indian office aside from the direct letter of the law.

The Indian children to be educated in the Pipestone school will not be confined exclusively to the Yankton Sioux, notwithstanding their claim to the reservation. All Sioux will be admitted.

WASTE BASKET MATERIAL.

An Eastern Paper Touches Up the Census Bulletins.

"The mails are just now being burdened with letters from the census department to everybody whom the enumerators failed to report as being supplied with a mortgage. One of our local enumerators, whose work was done in a township where mortgaged farms are very scarce, says he is being hopped on to on all sides by indignant property owners who blame him with having returned them as living on mortgaged property. This is only one way the census officials have of putting in their time, and persons who receive the documents can simply throw them in the waste basket. It is on a par with the sending out of notices to enumerators that they must find a few more deaths than they had reported, as their lists did not come up to the average. Western Crawford doesn't have many deaths, and the mortgages are also scarce, and our people don't propose to increase them simply to oblige the census officials."

Fatal Storms.

MONTICELLO, Ill., Special Telegram, Aug. 17.—There was a terrific electric storm passed over Central Illinois last night, doing great damage. Several lives were lost. Buildings were struck and destroyed; horses and cattle were killed, and hail fell in some places, destroying the growing corn crop in this county. The large oil house of Kilgore & Co. was struck by lightning and burned. Many thousands of dollars' worth of property was destroyed. There was a heavy rainfall, which saved the city of Mansfield from burning completely.

Cakes Without Eggs.

Observing housekeepers quickly learn that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is far superior to other brands in the fact that they never fail to make the finest pastry, and if they wish to be economical they can dispense entirely with eggs and can use a less quantity of butter for shortening purposes. The advantage is not alone in the saving effected but in avoiding the trouble and frequently the great difficulty of securing eggs that are fresh. This is often a serious trouble.

Cakes of various kinds from the informal Griddle Cakes to the stately Bride Cake can be made with Price's Cream Baking Powder, which insures light, sweet and handsome cakes; or when used for Griddle Cakes to be eaten hot enables their production in the shortest space of time, always tender and delicious.

Dr. Price's is the only Baking Powder that contains the white of eggs. None so pure! None so wholesome!

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, or any other adulterant. In fact, the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

New York Press: The Louisiana Farmers Alliance has decided not to put a third party ticket in the field for the coming state election, but to act inside the Democratic party to secure Alliance nominees, as has been done in other southern states. In other words the Southern Alliance men are still Democrats first and Alliance men incidentaly.

Bradstreet's publishes an extended review of the prospects for the European wheat crop and as a result it is figured that they will require 231,000,000 bushels to supply the deficiency. This is a more conservative estimate than the shortage estimated by the New York Sun last week but it is large enough to boom prices to a higher notch than has been reached for several years.

We are in receipt of private information from Washington stating that the survey of the Red Lake Reservation will probably be completed by January 1st. Although this seems too good to be true we are glad to learn that the work is progressing rapidly and that the promised land to which this city is one of the principal gateways will be thrown open to settlement in a very short time.—McIntosh Times.

The U. S. Postal authorities are advertising for bids for carrying the mail from Crookston to Wylie and St. Hilaire and return three times a week each way, the trip to be made in six hours or less. The mail will leave here Tuesday Thirsday and Saturday at 10 a. m. arriving at Crookston at 4 p. m. It will leave Crookston on the same days at 8.30 a. m. arriving not later than 2.30 p. m. The service will commence on Sept. 7th.

Red Lake Falls News: The Great Northern surveying crew arrived in the city Monday morning and are now engaged in surveying the road from the north side to the St. Hilaire branch. Grading will commence this week, Surveyors will, as soon as they have finished the survey on the north side, commence running the line across the Clearwater and south towards the Fosston branch. Work will be pushed with a large crew as the company contemplate hauling a share of this fall's crop.

We learn from reliable authority that the Great Northern will build from here to Red Lake Falls this fall. The new line will leave at the bend south of here and follow the east line of Black River Township south for about five or six miles cutting from there southwest to Red Lake Falls entering the town near the flour and saw mills. A crew of surveyors are here now working and the graders are expected to be here the last of this week. This will probably give us a daily service as soon as the branch is completed,

We are informed that the Duluth & Dakota railroad have withdrawn their proposition and the election on the bond question will not take place We learn that the company were afraid that their proposition would be defeated the time being too short to thoroughly explain the matter to the farmers. The proposition will probably come up again during the winter when the matter can be thoroughly looked into by every voter in the county, The proposition is a good one for the county and we think the voters will see it yet.

Considerable pressure is being brought to bear upon Governor Merriam to call an extra session of the legislature to appropriate more money to the Worlds Fair exibit. Without doubt we need more money to make a creditable exhibit but we are of the opinion that an extra session would be much too costly a plan. Besides the legislature if called together would probably take advantage of the opportunity to inflict upon us some more legislation. As we have not yet recovered from the last one we think the Governor should ponder long before calling it together again.

A correspondent who has probably been duped by a "traveling merchant" writes: "If our local merchants or grocers would let the people know as much about the price of their goods through printer's ink as the traveling grocers and foreign merchants do by flooding the country with price lists catalogues &c., there would not be so many duped farmers or complaining merchants. The advertisers who put their goods and prices before the people and keep them there, are the ones who will sell the goods. They may say when too late, 'I would have duplicated that bill of goods,' but they should have let the farmer who sent away and bought advertised goods of a foreign merchant know of it before he bought. That's the business of it.—Northfield News.

If Minnesota were a gold or silver bearing country and it was demonstrated that the output of gold for the year 1891 amounted to or exceeded $60,000,000, every resident of the state would feel that here was the favored spot on earth and that there was no occasion for looking further for home or business.

It is very moderate to estimate that our crops of all descriptions for 1891 will bring an income to Minnesota of $60,000,000. This is as direct and tangible a bringing of new wealth into the world as if it had been dug from the earth in the shape of gold and silver.

It is $60,000,000 produced from the soil and placed in circulation among a million a half of people. With such an outlook Minnesota stands in the front rank of the happy and prosperous states of the Union.—St. Paul Globe.

Winona Republican: State Supt. Kiehle and Atty. Gen. Clapp call the attention of county auditors to the late amendment of the school apportionment law, that no district shall receive a sum greater than its added local 1 mill tax and special school tax. Until the law was amended by the recent legislature, school districts were allowed by the state $3.75 per pupil, regardless of whether the district voted money or not. In some cases the district at a trifling expense, it appears, would run a cheap school for a few weeks over the required 40 days, and then pocket a state apportionment that would pay the expenses and leave a little nest-egg over to put in the bank or loan out at interest The amendment requires the district to put its shoulder to the wheel, in order to receive aid from the state. That, of course, is the object of the apportionment. The state's aid is for educational not for money making purposes. The amendment will save the state a large sum of misappropriated funds, and at the same time stimulate the backward and unprogressive districts to something like educational enterprise.

Russia has forbidden all exports of rye, which indicates that the crop of breadstuffs in that country is less even than has been reported. This action has created almost a panic in Germany, where rye is the principal food of the poor. Austria and England will also suffer severely from the prohibition. The London Daily News calls upon the farmers of America, who, it says, are masters of the situation, to be "merciful."

It is not the farmers who need to be feared in this emergency, They want a good prize for their grain to be sure but there is not a county in the northwest where the farmers would not load a ship with golden grain and dispatch it free to relieve the hunger of unfortunate men and women anywhere on earth.

The difficulty will lie with those who run "corners" with the intention of creating a fictitious price, and if these cannot be prevented the farmer may as well go into the business and reap the advantages as to have less deserving persons do so, This however he will not seek to do. He only wants that legitimate price which a world's scarcity will fix, without artificial means or fictitious intervention. Nature is not always bountiful to him. She has been extremely chary of her kindness for a dozen years. He has suffered from the neglect; and while he will be charitable to the world's poor, the great class that are able to eat No. 1 wheat flour and are after all the principal purchasers at all times must this year pay for it,

There is no mistake! The farmer is king.—Minneapolis Tribune,

STATE TEACHERS INSTITUTE.

An institute for the county of Polk will be held at Crookston Minnesota, during the week commencing August 24th 1891.

The state will provide efficient instructors, who will be furnished with such professional books apparatus and material as have been thoroughly tested and found to be of special service to teachers. Great pains will be taken to make the instruction pointed and in the highest degree practical, in matters pertaing to the management and grading of schools and the teaching of common school branches.

One evening will be devoted to a lecture by some good speaker.

The conductor and superintendent may also arrange for another evening entertainment.

Teachers are requested to note that this fall and next spring some of the examination questions in "Theory and Practice" sent out by this department will be based on Page's Theory and Practice; and the instructors will make free use of the same work. Every teacher should procure a copy for use in the institute and for subsequent study.

Teachers who take a proper interest in their calling, and who desire by self-improvement to advance to higher positions will be present at the opening Monday afternoon and remain till Friday evening. At the close of the week certificates signed by the state superintendent, county superintendent and conductor will be issued to all who have been neither tardy nor absent at any session, and who have been diligent and shown progress in the work of the institute.

All schools can be legally closed during institute week at the request of the teachers or the county superintendent.

The institute will be in charge of the superintendent who will make all the required arrangements for its success, as well as for the accommodation of teachers, who are requested to give him early notice of their intention to be present that he may provide board for all at the lowest rates.

SELECTIONS

THE STRENGTH OF A GIANT.

A Hotel Porter Who Makes Nothing of Seeming Impossibilities.

The proprietor of a blacksmith shop on Commerce street was one of the most surprised men in New Haven a day or two ago Mr. Tuttle, father of the proprietor of the Arlington House, in Meadow street, and a young man stopped at the shop to have the tire of the carriage in which they were riding repaired. While the work was in progress the young man, with the curiosity that overcomes the stranger in a blacksmith's shop, inspected the various iron rods, pokers, etc.

"Why don't you have good, substantial material for your business?" inquired he after a while. "This rod of iron," he continued, picking up one and examining it, "is rotten."

"What are you talking about?" rejoined the blacksmith.

"I'll bet you I can bend it with my teeth," retorted the young man.

"I would like to see you or any other man bend it with your teeth," said the blacksmith in a contemptuous tone.

"You just watch me do it," responded the young man, lifting the iron rod to his mouth. The rod was about five feet long three-quarters of an inch thick, and had every appearance of being absolutely free of defects. In fact, it was as perfect as any rod of the kind. The young man put the rod in his mouth. There were two or three movements of the teeth, jaws and chest as he concentrated all the powers of the upper muscles on the rod of iron, and then a moment's tremendous pressure, during which he pulled down on the ends of the bar of iron with his hands, while his teeth closed like a vise on the rod When he took the rod from his mouth there was a bend in the center of it like the curve on some of the balls pitched by Jack Horner. No more astonished man stood in shoe leather in New Haven that moment than the blacksmith. He was speechless for a few minutes. The first to break the silence was the stranger.

"Now what do you think of your rod of iron and its perfect condition?" he asked of the annoyed man. "Let me see that poker you use in the forge. It strikes me that poker is not just what it seems to be. See here, boss, I'll bet I can bend that poker by striking it across my forearm."

The blacksmith had ceased to doubt the fellow's statements. As a matter of fact, he was becoming alarmed lest the stranger should take a notion to bend all the bars and pokers in the shop But, just to see what kind of success he would have with the long poker, the blacksmith told him to go ahead and test it on his forearm. The stranger peeled off his coat, bared his arm, and then wielded the poker in the air, bringing it down with great force on his forearm. Instead of the poker bending, as the rod, it broke in two.

This strange young man is a porter at the Arlington House. His name is Oscar E. Skiff, and he is twenty-two years of age. He is about 5 feet 7 inches in height and weighs 155 pounds. One of the ordinary schemes he indulges in to amuse the guest who has just reached the hotel is to grab the guest's big trunk (it makes little difference how large or how heavy it is) and rush up stairs with it on his back. If the room to which the trunk is destined happens to be on the top floor, four or five stories high, Skiff mounts those several flights of stairs with about as much ease as the hotel clerk welcomes a fresh guest. There were several gentlemen in the hotel office a few days ago talking about the muscular capability of mankind generally. The clerk of the hotel weighs about 185 pounds. At his side was seated a guest who weighed 170. Skiff put one hand under the clerk and the other under the guest and lifted both off the floor so that his arms, with a man in the palm of each hand, were straight out from the shoulder. With 355 pounds thus held up, Skiff told a boy weighing all of eighty pounds to climb upon his knees and remain there to further test his strength The lad obliged, making in all 435 pounds that Skiff was holding up.

Skiff was born in San Francisco. The muscles of his forearms, legs and neck are as hard as rock. He stated that the first evidence of his strength came when he was eight years old. His father is A. W. Skiff, who a few years ago was known in the world of minstrels by his connection with Skiff & Gaylord's minstrel company.—New Haven Cor. St Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Boy and the Bees.

Wednesday forenoon Seeb Bradford, a delivery boy in the employ of Weber & Cleaves, was badly stung by a swarm of bees. They were about ready to swarm and were in a heap about the hive. Seeb's curiosity led him to investigate, and picking up a long stick he gave them a punch. He had no more than touched them when the whole swarm took after him, and he ran like a white head over the adjoining field, yelling at the top of his voice, the bees at the same time getting in their work. It is safe to say that he did not do any delivering on Wednesday, and that the next time he will not interfere with a convention. — Wapakoneta (O.) Democrat.

The Roller Coaster of Today.

The roller coaster of only a few years ago has developed strangely under competition. Where it had one sprawling, hummocky track at first it now has three and even four stories of such tracks, one above the other, with steam elevators to lift passengers to the topmost one, with a central court for ice cream eating or dancing and with a band of music to help make things hum. —New York Sun.

The New Lightships.

We are going to have new and improved lightships soon in some of the most important places along the coast. Three of them are now in process of construction at the Harrison Loring works in Easton, and they will cost about $70,000. They are to be built of steel and wood, and will be powerful vessels. The first one completed will replace Captain Pritchard's old red home off Sandy Hook.

The new ship will be 112 feet long on the water line, will have a beam of 27 feet 8 inches and a draft of 11 feet. She will have two lantern masts 67 feet high and 16 inches in diameter. She will have revolving lights, the first ever used on an American light vessel. The lights will be so arranged by means of cog-wheels and clockwork that they will revolve around the masts, sending their rays to every point of the horizon successively. These lights will be visible twelve miles from the ship. The vessel will be provided with two tubular steam boilers to operate the fog signal and the hoisting apparatus She will also have a steam windlass, which will relieve the crew of the dreaded operation of heaving up the chains to sight the bridles.

A number of these new ships will be built and put in prominent positions now occupied by old craft. One is to be put in a new situation off Nantucket Round-shoal to meet the increased demands of shipping in that quarter. Others will be placed off Cornfield point in Long Island sound, where there is now an old one; off Bush's Bluff shoal, in Hampton roads; off Fenwick Island shoal, on the coast of Maryland; off Fryingpan shoals, near Cape Fear, and off the shoals at Martin's Industry, near Port Royal.—Harper's Young People.

Though Poor, She Loved the Dog.

A singularly pathetic incident, illustrative of the inseparable bond of attachment which frequently exists between the poorest and their pet dogs, occurred in the justice of peace court, Dundee. Christina Smith, described as a sack sewer, was charged with keeping a dog without a license. Mr. Haliburton, of the inland revenue, stated that the poor woman, to his knowledge, had year after year been in the same predicament as that in which she was now placed. It was a hard case. The woman had no money, but she would persist in keeping her dog. Accused, in reply to the bench, stated that she would do her best to pay for a license. She had done that in years past, and if she only had time she was sure she could do it again.

J. P.—How old is the dog?

Mr. Haliburton said that he had on several occasions paid for the license, but to do accused justice she had always repaid him the money by installments. The court held that it must impose a penalty, but it would make it as small as possible, viz., one shilling. After consultation among the justices they resolved, out of sympathy for the tender hearted old lady, to pay the fine and take out a license for the dog. The poor woman courtesied her thanks to the justices, and left the court agreeably surprised with justices' justice. Sir Walter Scott's love for his dogs did not surpass this.—London Spectator.

How to Keep Cool.

Cleanliness, not only next to godliness, is part of coolness. So take a plunge bath in the morning, letting the water be tepid, and afterward giving yourself a cold shower. Omit starch from your clothes as far as possible. Eat a light breakfast. Greasy food or a great quantity of food taken in the morning will most certainly heat your stomach for the entire day. A woman who stays in the city and is always cool gives this as her bill of fare: A cup of coffee in the morning, with bread and butter; a luncheon of cold beef and baked potato, with lemonade or iced tea, and a dinner after sunset consisting of a little soup, a bit of meat and one hot vegetable, a cool green salad, a cold dessert and a small cup of coffee. Keep this in mind also: There is no better preventive against heat than good temper, when you combine good bathing, proper food and evenness of disposition with it.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Superstition in India.

The following from the Rangoon Gazette about the origin of a fire gives a fairly good idea as to the extent people there are superstitious: "The fire originated in the house of a Burmese trader, whose wife, Mah Shwe Me, was disappointed at the nonappearance of her husband for the past month. She had consulted several neighbors as to the best means to be adopted to secure his return, and on Sunday evening saw a 'charmer,' who told her to place a lighted candle on her bed and leave the house for at least half an hour. She placed the lighted candle under her mosquito curtain and went away, only to return to find her house and the adjoining ones in flames. Such is said to have seen the origin of the fire. One hundred and thirty-three houses were destroyed."

A Quartet of Old Friends.

At the residence of Joseph E. Reeder in Solebury there dined the other day Daniel Smith, of Buckingham, aged 96 years and 3 months; Letitia Reeder, of Solebury, aged 89 years and 0 months; Joseph E. Reeder, of Solebury, aged 88 years and 2 months, and John Betts, of Warminster, aged 86 years and 10 months. The combined ages of the four is 360 years and 0 months, and the average age would be 90 years and 2 months. The four bear the relation of brother, sister, husband, wife, brother-in-law and sister-in-law respectively to each other. —Doylestown (Pa.) Democrat.

Bees Swarmed In Her Corset.

A hive of bees swarmed in a corset that had been hung out to air in North Atchison last week. The owner of the corset tried to coax the bees off by beating a tin pan, but they settled down to business, and she had to go without her corset until her husband came home at night and smoked the invaders off.—Atchison Globe.

A Cure for Ague.

No disease has given rise to a more numerous and curious catalogue of charms than the ague. A common practice was to run nine times through a circle formed by a brier that grew in that direction. This was no doubt a Druidical ceremony, nine being the mystic number of high antiquity. A spider given, unknown, to the patent was a favorite remedy with some persons.—London Tit-Bits.

THE PORT OF PLEASANT DREAMS.

I sailed in the good bark Fancy
Down the still, deep river of Sleep,
From the lands of bleak December
To a port that the sunbeams keep;
While the glad winds followed after,
And sang with a happy zest,
And I heard them croon o'er the infant moon
As it lay on the night's broad breast.

And the port of the good bark Fancy,
A port that the sunbeams keep,
Is called Pleasant Dreams; like an opal it gleams
O'er the strange, dark river of Sleep.
There, flushed with the wine of laughter,
The voyager sings queer songs,
And, borne in a car of the sunset,
Rides oft with the elfin throngs
Up, up through the rosy Cloudland,
Where the round little mist men stay,
To the stars abloom in the cool, soft gloom
Of gardens far away.

There are none too poor for a voyage
To this port that is centuries old;
Where hunger e'er finds a banquet,
And poverty revels in gold;
Where, robed in the garb of morning,
The earth in new beauty glows,
And the amulet of the summer
Is worn on the heart of the rose.

Oft from the fields of sorrow,
To the brink of the river of Sleep,
Wan toilers come, and, restful,
They sail on its watery deep;
Till clear through the gates of Sundown
The post, like a beacon, beams,
And Love, sweet mariner, anchors
In the port of Pleasant Dreams.

Suffering as a Discipline.

Suffering is the most perfect discipline of character. We all shrink from it, as we shun the scourge or plague, but it is only through affliction that we can ever hope to attain to stability and true symmetry of manhood and womanhood. Disappointment and sorrow develop certain traits within us which, if they remained dormant, would leave our lives imperfect and incomplete. We can acquire fortitude only by surmounting fears, and endurance we can gain only by suffering unmitigated pain. Sorrows educate mind and heart; they elevate, they purify the baser passions.

We receive our best instructions in conflicts with the world; not in those frays in which we are victorious, but in the encounters that often witness our defeat. We need the stern and rigid discipline of outside trouble, of inward struggle, that calls out the best that is in us. Human nature is weak enough as it is, but were it not for the trials and temptations which it must meet and resist we would soon degenerate into a race of characterless beings. We cannot suffer too much in order to be strong. Adversity is a teacher whom none should despise.—Atchison Globe.

Browning Would Not Sell Poetry.

Browning is believed to have made £2,000 a year, but this he achieved only after many years of ceaseless production. His antipathy to writing for the magazines is well known, and no doubt helped greatly to limit his income. On one occasion an English magazine offered him a large sum for the privilege of publishing one of his poems. This he refused. The offer was then increased, but he still refused. Finally a blank check was sent to him with the request that he would fill it up to his own satisfaction, but even this failed to secure the poem.—London Tit-Bits.

THE LAPLAND BIBLE.

It Was Translated by a Murderer While He Was in Prison.

The Lapps have the Bible in their own tongue and few stories are more interesting than the account of its translation. Over thirty years ago a serious of religious riots took place in a number of villages in Lapland and among the rioters was one Lars Haetta.

During the riots several homicides occurred, and Lars and some other of his companions were committed to prison on a charge of murder, relates the New York Home Journal. They were found guilty and several were hanged, but in consideration of his youth Haetta was condemned to life-long imprisonment. Commiserating his condition, his keepers and the prison chaplain extended to him such favors as could safely be granted to a life-long prisoner, and finding them rewarded by good conduct took especial pains to teach him to read and write.

Lars became interested in the Bible, grew day by day more fond of reading it, and finally formed the bold project of translating it into his native tongue. Through many weary years the labor went on, for Lars was no great scholar and the Lapp language, as may be readily supposed, is not a fluent literary medium of thought.

But finally the work was done, the Bible translated and printed in the language of Lapland and the remainder of Haetta's sentence was commuted. He was living as late as 1870, and, though an old man was still active and often served parties of travelers as guide.

To Preserve Flowers.

A charming way of preserving flowers is shown by a Boston friend. Take very fine sand, wash it perfectly clean, and when dry sift it through a fine sieve into a pan. When the sand is deep enough to hold the flowers in an upright position, take some more sifted sand and carefully cover them. A spoon is a good thing to take for this, as it fills in every chink and cranny without breaking or bending the leaves. When the pan is filled solidly leave the flowers to dry for several days. It is a good plan to warm the sand in the oven before using it, as the flowers will then dry more thoroughly. In taking the sand off great care must be taken not to break the leaves, as they are now dry and brittle. Pansies preserved in this way will keep their shape and brilliancy of color all winter, and many other flowers can be equally successfully treated—anything, in fact, where the full pressure of the sand comes on both sides of the leaf; other wise they will shrivel. To fill in flowers with cup-like shapes it is better to lay them on the sand and with a small spoon fill in and around each flower. Ferns, when preserved in this way, have a more natural look than when pressed, and the maidenhair fern looks almost as well as when it is freshly gathered.—New York Tribune.

Her Name Is Dennis.

A singular character residing near Irasburg, Vt., says the Philadelphia Times, is said to have allowed no human being to look upon her during the day for nearly forty years. She goes by the name of Ann Dennis, and is said to have been the daughter of a well-to-do farmer, and that she lost her mind, or at any rate took up her present singular mode of life, after the death of her mother, whom she accidentally killed by an overdose of some opiate. She lives in a small, substantial one-room cabin about six miles from the town, remains tightly shut up during the day, and ventures out only on the darkest nights, when she will walk into town and transact such business as she may have, but cannot be induced to enter a room lighted up save very dimly, and then only when thickly veiled.

As she has some little money left her by her father, the tradesmen all humor this singularity of hers, though several attempts have been made to get her to show herself in the light, but however well planned the strategy it has never succeeded. She converses intelligently enough when she wants to, and many deny that her mind is at all affected beyond a little harmless eccentricity. Those who remember her in her youth say that she was an unusually pretty, attractive girl, and well educated. She lives quite alone, with nothing living to keep her company.

Here is the prayer of the minister of the Cumbrays, two miserable islands in the mouth of the Clyde: "O Lord, bless and be gracious to the greater and the lesser Cumbrays, and in thy mercy do not forget the adjacent islands of Great Britain and Ireland.

For Dyspepsia.

A. Bellanger, Propr., Stove Foundry, Montagny, Quebec, writes: "I have used August Flower for Dyspepsia. It gave me great relief. I recommend it to all Dyspeptics as a very good remedy."

Ed. Bergeron, General Dealer, Lauzon, Levis, Quebec, writes: "I have used August Flower with the best possible results for Dyspepsia."

C. A. Barrington, Engineer and General Smith, Sydney, Australia, writes: "August Flower has effected a complete cure in my case. It acted like a miracle."

Geo. Gates, Corinth, Miss., writes: "I consider your August Flower the best remedy in the world for Dyspepsia. I was almost dead with that disease, but used several bottles of August Flower, and now consider myself a well man. I sincerely recommend this medicine to suffering humanity the world over." ®

THE SMILE THAT AWAITS ME AT HOME.

Something I own that wealth cannot buy;
And not offered for sale on the mart;
Something for which the great often sigh
With an unhidden void in the heart;
Something possessed by one little spot
In a corner I know on earth's loam,
Waiting for me in a neat, cosey cot,
'Tis a sweet, loving smile in my home.

When all the world is dreary and cold,
And the cloud darkly hang o'er the way;
Friendship and honor purchased with gold,
And a world seems to win to betray;
Still one fond thought thro' shadows will shine,
As I back to that humble cot roam,
Feeling as rich as wealth-laden mine.
With a sweet, loving smile in my home.

When that bright scene shall vanish and fade
Into visions of heaven beyond—
The earth grow dim in death's misty shade,
With the forms so loving and fond—
Yet will remain forever in mind,
Though afar in the heavens' broad dome,
The sweet, happy face, loving and kind,
With the smile that awaits me at home.

JOSIAH'S LUCK.

BY ABBIE C M'KEEVER.

NOW, Josiah, do be careful son, you've never been to the wicked city, and I reckon circuses are about the worst places going anyhow. I do wish to gracious you were not so set on goin' there. Selling the load of potatoes and seeing the sights ought to be enough."

"I wouldn't drive no forty-odd miles for the potatoes if it weren't for the circus, I know that," and 20-year-old Josiah Leach cracked his cowhide whip about the horses' backs, and away he went rattling over the hill while his old mother stood by the bars and watched him as long as he was in sight.

"He's such a reckless child and so set, but he's no fool," and with which comforting thought she let down the bars that the cows could make their way to the pasture.

Josiah reached the outskirts of the city at nightfall and stopped at a small inn for the night. He was up before daylight on his way to the city market. His potatoes disposed of at a good price, his horses stabled, he set out to find the circus about which such monster bills had found their way even to Possum Run.

"I reckon I'm in time for the parade. Yes, here she comes! Goodness! wasn't I lucky."

He was indeed lucky; the circus troup and menagerie was approaching with all its brass band, handsome horses, and elephants, and open mouthed and eyed Josiah watched it until the last little pony had passed, then he at once set out with the crowd of small boys who were following it.

Once within sight of the majestic tents Josiah felt it hard not to omit a boyish shout of joy, the dream of his life was about to be realized.

He lolled around eating a lunch and impatiently awaited the time for the performance to begin.

His first experience was that he paid a dollar for his ticket and the fellow who took it coolly told him it was but fifty cents, just what it should be.

"You know better than that," said Josiah hotly; "however, I'd pay fifty cents any day to find a feller out."

He forgot all about it later when the wonders of the ring began, and the one thing that especially charmed him was the lady who was very pretty in spite of the ugly paint and powder, and who threw many bright glances at Josiah and at last a kiss.

Josiah blushed, the crowd laughed and the clown tried to make a joke.

"Lor, what a beauty," thought Josiah, "how I wish I was a circus feller."

Wonderingly Josiah opened it and read:

> "You have such a good, true face, and I am in such trouble. Will you help me? I know you are from the country, perhaps some remote place where my cruel stepfather could never find me. Meet me at dusk at——.
> "THE LADY RIDER."

That was all, but Josiah's heart thumped so he felt the persons near him must hear it. Wanted him to help her, poor little thing! So he would as long as he had life.

He was at the place of meeting as the shades of night began to gather, and there under a small tree, was a cloaked figure. He approached slowly fearing it might not be the one he sought.

"You have come. I am so glad. You must be at the circus to-night and at its close, that is at the close of my own riding, I will dash through under the canvas instead of going to the dressing room. I have a place prepared and you must be at once ready to go out and meet me near that wagon yonder. I will have a bundle of clothes ready but I must escape in the short dress. Do you understand?"

"Yes" said Josiah bashfully, "you want to go home with me."

"Any where, only safe out of this dreadful life."

He was at the performance once more, and had been careful to present but a half dollar this time to pay his fare. The rest of his money, about twenty dollars, he had carefully stowed away in the bottom of his hip pocket with a revolver loaded in every chamber on top of it.

"No telling what may happen," he had reasoned, "and I am going to get that little thing off if living man can do it."

Everything passed off as usual until the appearance of the lovely lady rider, and Josiah noticed that her acts were more daring than in the afternoon and that her eyes sought him out and smiled a bright recognition.

At last she disappeared suddenly and Josiah at once made his way toward the entrance. There the man in charge stopped him rudely.

"What's up now, Country?" he enquired.

"I'm sick," said Josiah, telling a lie so easily it would have caused his own mother a heartache. "Sick all over and I want to go to bed."

"Love sick, I guess," laughed the man.

He hurried off with swift steps toward the appointed place and there, enveloped in a long cloak was the one he wished to see.

"Henry!" she whispered, "I fear I have been followed."

Her words were prophetic, for at that instant out of the gloom leaped several forms and Josiah found himself pinioned.

"What means this, Rosine? Is this a new lover ha, ha; or a new runaway scheme? I saw you slip away and I followed, none too soon it seems. Take him to old Bruno's and shut him up; as for you, Miss, you come with me!"

To Josiah's disgust and anger he found himself helpless as a baby, and at last to his horror he found himself locked up or rather shut up in a cage with a huge bear—a tame performing one as it was in truth, kept near the dressing room, but Josiah did not know this; he would have cried for help only the man that left him there told him an outcry would enrage the bear, and only by perfect quietness could he hope to escape. He thought of his revolver, and at last succeeded in freeing his hands, and then he discovered that his hip pocket was empty not only of the revolver but of his money also.

Josiah was no fool if he did fall a victim to a pretty face, and he began to put matters together.

"First they stole fifty cents, then twenty dollars. I reckon it was a game from the beginning, and I don't suppose Mr. Bear would eat me at all, he would find me altogether too green. Mammy ought to keep me tied to her apron strings the rest of my life—if there is any rest."

The circus folks had all departed save a few, and the tents were being torn down when Josiah heard a voice near him whisper:

"Come, quickly; the door is open! We have only a few minutes' time."

It was the girl he had tried to befriend. He quietly obeyed her, wondering if she was in it all, and merely wanted to rid herself of him quietly.

"I'd like to have my twenty dollars, they stole."

"Never mind the money. Do hasten!" imploringly.

Without more ado Josiah and his companion hurried away in the heavy darkness.

"Where did you leave your wagon and horses?"

Josiah told her.

"Come then, you must get them at once and we will soon be off."

In less than an hour Josiah, still puzzled and in none of the best of humor, was on his way homeward with empty pockets and a strange girl crouching in the back of the wagon.

"What will mammy say?" he thought. "I'd rather face a canon. Poor thing, she may be innocent. I can't turn her out. Ive got to fight it out but the $20 we need so to buy groceries; oh dear, I did get into a pretty mess. If I'd raised a row I'd got into the papers and that'd a been worse and no money back either."

At noon they paused to let the horses have some hay.

"It's all I can afford," said Josiah. "I've got a quarter left that will get some cakes and crackers I guess, and I reckon we won't starve until we reach home."

"I'm not hungry," said his companion. "I only want to keep hidden."

At a late hour they drove into the barnyard at the old home; a light burned into the window and soon the old mother, lantern in hand, hurried out.

"Sakes alive, Josiah, how late you are! Why, who's this?"

"A lady I found on the way. She begged to come home with me, that's all."

"A lady! What did you want to come to Possum Run for?" coldly.

"Let us go in, please," said the girl, "and I will explain everything, I am very tired."

"Supper is ready. I hope you can both eat, the child—she's little more—can remain until we see what is best for her to do."

But the story of the lost money was not told. Josiah knew it must be told by the next day.

The most astonishing thing happened, however; when he went to put his hand in his pocket he drew forth the lost money—at first he thought it the lost money, but he found this was in two tens, the other had been in fives.

He understood but resolved to keep silent, it was evidently the girl's wish.

Rosine, as she was called, washed off the remains of the paint and powder, combed her hair into one long, heavy braid and turned her hands to whatever she could find to do.

"She's the handiest girl I ever saw. I don't see how she learned so many things. Poor dear, how she hates the mention of a circus."

Josiah made a grimace. "No wonder, so do I."

In two years Rosine was his happy wife; a weeks after her marriage a man rode up to their door. At sight of him she turned pale.

"You needn't faint, Rosine, I bring you only good news. The publishing of your marriage led to your discovery. Your stepfather is dead, and and the fortune once your mother's is your own once more. It's only ten thousand, but it is yours and has been for several months."

A handsome new house takes the place of the old, and in its spacious yard Rosine walks with her little boy. "There's a circus, mamma," he says, "coming here soon, can't I go? I want to see it so much."

"Perhaps papa will take you; as for mamma, she would rather not."

THE chances are that the Chicago board of trade will soon give up the fight on the bucket shops. The latter have so far baffled every movement of their antagonists.

Is Alum Poisonous.

[Hall's Journal of Health.]

"This question has caused a good deal of discussion. Alum is used by many bakers to whiten their bread, enabling them to use an inferior flour. It is most extensively employed as a cheap substitute for cream of tartar in the manufacture of baking powders. It has not been considered immediately dangerous; although if continued it induces dyspepsia and obstinate constipation. But the fact that many cases of poisoning have occurred from the use of alum, puts the question in a more serious aspect, and prudent people will exercise caution in the selection of baking powders.

"Under what conditions then, does this substance—formerly used only for mechanical or medicinal purposes—become poisonous? They are certainly obscure, and at present we can only surmise what they may be. We suspect that the cause exists in the individual poisoned; some peculiarity of the constitution producing a morbid change in the secretions of the stomach, with which the alum combines and forms an active poison; or the secretions may be healthy but in unusual proportions, and that these less or greater proportions in combination with the alum constitute a poison.

"For example, two parts of mercury and two parts of Chlorine form calomel, which is not poisonous, but change the proportions to one part mercury and two parts of chlorine, and we get corrosive sublimate, which is a deadly poison.

"Then again, we know nothing of the constitutional peculiarities. Why is it that one person can eat all kinds of green fruits and vegetables with impunity, while the same course might cost another individual his life? One person can handle poison ivy and sumac without being in the least affected; another is poisoned if he approaches to within ten feet of them. Out of a family residing in a malarial district, some of the members will suffer half the year with fever and ague, while the others will enjoy excellent health during the entire year. Foods that are wholesome to some persons are actually poisonous to others. This is especially true of some kinds of fish. There is no safety in taking alum into the stomach, as it is shown to be always injurious, and often dangerous." * *

The Scientific American published in a recent number a list of alum and ammonia baking powders, which is of great value at this time. Following is the list compiled from official reports. Powders marked with a star seem to have a general sale, as they are mentioned in at least two of the official reports.

There are pure cream tartar baking powders on the market. All authorities report Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder as free from Alum, Ammonia, Lime or any other adulterant. The purity of this brand has never been questioned.

In His Foreleg.

In the hurry of writing, laughable blunders will inevitably occur. Thus an editor of The Companion found in a piece of his own copy, the other day, a sentence about a man who was wearing a knew hat."

The New York Tribune tells a story of a correspondent who described an accident by which a man was injured "in his right foreleg." The editor who read the copy did not notice the error, and the compositor set it up as if it were an every-day occurrence to meet four-legged men. The ever-watchful proof-reader was equal to the emergency, however, and came into the room with a broad grin on his face to ask if the injured man could probably be secured for a dime museum.

A CHILDLESS HOME.

Smith and his wife have every luxury that money can buy, but there is one thing lacking to their happiness. Both are fond of children, but no little voices prattle, no little feet patter in their beautiful home. "I would give ten years of my life if I could have one healthy, living, child of my own," Smith often says to himself. No woman can be the mother of healthy offspring unless she herself is in good health. If she suffers from female weakness, general debility, bearing-down pains and functional derangements, her physical condition is such that she cannot hope to have healthy children. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a soverign and guaranteed remedy for all these ailments.

Worn-out, "run-down," feeble women, need Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It builds them up. It's a powerful, restorative tonic, or strength-giver—free from alcohol and injurious drugs. The entire system is renewed and invigorated. It improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, gives refreshing sleep, and restores flesh and strength.

Two Boys.

Mamma—"Indeed I did."

"Well, he's with him behind the barn smoking cigarettes."

"Horrors! Is that dirty faced boy teaching Dick to smoke cigarettes?"

Death and Taxes

Are not surer than the fact that if you are constipated, the most efficient, as well as the least painful laxative, is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, gentle and thorough, not violent and weakening like a drastic cathartic. Together with the bowels, the liver and stomach are regulated and invigorated by this genial reformer, which also subjugates malaria, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervousness and disorders of the kidneys.

Wanted His Rights.

Some years ago a wealthy manufacturer in the West, employing nearly a thousand hands, established a "model" city, thus giving the workmen and their families many comforts and luxuries that they could not have attained unaided. Of course there were regulations to govern the model city, which as a rule was cheerfully observed.

There were fault-finders, however, and especially a new-comer, named Bascomb. Among the rules was one forbidding the burning of soft coal, on account of the odor and smoke, and Bascomb objected strongly.

"My goodness!" remonstrated a friend, "I don't see what you are growling about. We get hard coal at cost, and as one ton goes as far as two of the other, you aint out of pocket."

"Taint right to forbid it," asserted Bascomb.

"No, I don't wanter," replied Bascomb, "but I wanter have the right in case I wanter!"

Why Not Topp?

There is a quaint anecdote circling about in the widening eddy of the baccarat gossip, which perhaps is worth recording on its own account, but which is set down here by way of preface to another matter. It is related that Lady Brooke confided the secret of the Tranby Croft scandal to another titled dame, who last autumn became a widow. Before that time her relations with a man whose name I believe is Hartopp, but who is familiarly known as "Topp," had been notorious. The first time after her widowhood that she met Sir William Gordon Cumming the two had a rather acrid verbal encounter, to which he put an end by asking her in the presence of a number of mutual friends: "Why don't you make an honest man of Topp?" In revenge she circulated the scandal.—New York Times.

Real Estate is the Basis of all Wealth.

AN INVESTMENT THAT WILL NET

20% to 30%

99 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money. 87 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center; has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now pre-eminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland.

THE TAWOOD REAL ESTATE COMPANY PORTLAND, OREGON,

Has the best plan for investors yet devised. You never read anything more explicit and simple. It is absolutely safe, and cannot fail to be profitable to all who invest.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

Flashed by the Wires of the Telegraph Condensed and Classified for Convenience of Readers.

Washington, Foreign, Accidental, Personal, Criminal and Other News of Importance.

WASHINGTON.

The recent report of the harbor line board, establishing harbor lines on the west side of New York harbor, was approved by the war department.

Positive assurance is given from Washington that the Iowa Sac and Fox and Pottawattomie reservations will be opened for settlement Sept. 15.

Gen. Nettleton expects to be absent from Washington during the entire month of September. He will probably come to Minnesota for a brief visit, but most of the time will be spent at the seaside.

The treasury commission to select a site for a postoffice at Davenport, Iowa, has reported in favor of the property at the southwest corner of Perry and Fourth streets, owned by Walter Chambers, and offered at $5,500.

A board of army engineers consisting of Gen. O. M. Poe, Maj. Alexander MacKenzie and Capt. W. L. Marshall has been ordered to take under consideration and report upon the western terminus of the Illinois & Mississippi river or Hennepin canal.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

A cloud burst partially destroying the village of Kollman, Austria, and forty persons were drowned.

The dead body of George H Belcher was found in bed in a Chicago hotel. He was asphyxiated and had the appearance of having committed suicide.

A cloud burst at Swansea, Wales, struck a gathering of 10,000 people and created a great consternation. Many were knocked down and injured, but none seriously.

At Hane, Pa., Anson L. Pratt, a fireman on the Campbell lumber road, was killed, and John Galvin, the engineer, and an unknown young man were fatally injured.

The Red Lands Motor road was washed out in several places by the heavy storm which occurred in the mountains east of San Bernardino, Cal. It is now generally accepted that the continued storms and the sultry weather which has lasted since July 1 has been the result of the flooding of the Colorado desert.

WICKEDNESSES.

John P. Baker, of Abangdon, W. Va., has been sentenced to hang Nov. 27.

At Brockville, Ont., Bella Nichol, aged 9 years, and Willie Nichol, aged 6, were drowned while bathing in the river.

During a free fight among Huns at the Good Spring colliery, Pa., four men were fatally injured. The crowd was drunk.

E. B. Preston, a lumber merchant of North Ottawa, Kan., shot and killed his wife and attempted to commit suicide.

At Cleveland Ohio, a mob of Hungarians attacked the house of John Martvany, a Catholic priest and demanded his blood. The police drove the mob away.

Three smugglers were arrested on the Etruria, which arrived at New York. A large quantity of silks and jewelry were seized.

Two Chicago policemen had a desperate struggle with a powerful crazy negro named Nathan Whitfield on a housetop, but finally succeeded in overpowering him.

Near Ashland, Pa., a crowd of hungarians at a christening got into a row among themselves. Four deaths will be the probable result.

John Sewald, of Sacramento, Cal., who surrendered himself four months ago stating he had murdered two wives in Nebraska, has been released by the authorities.

Two boys, Kazer Mikaldi and Joe Traves have been arrested in Cleveland, Ohio, for incendiarism. Two large and destructive fires were started by them.

Edward Lambert, Jr., bookkeeper of the San Juan Smelting and Mining Company of Durango, Cal., is short $110,000 in his accounts.

Hiram J. Baker, who claimed to be a member of the firm of Hiram J. Baker & Co., Committed suicide at St. Louis by cutting his throat.

Charles Rouska, a Chicago laboring man, attempted to kill his wife, inflicting a ghastly wound in her neck, and then cut his own throat, dying in a few minutes. Liquor is responsible.

J. L. Bay, a clerk employed by the bondsmen to examine the books of the defaulting State Treasurer Woodruff of Arkansas, has been arrested on the charge of stealing $100,000 of state scrip.

Charles Lawrence, ex-assistant cashier of the Keystone National Bank of Philadelphia, who pleaded guilty to false entries in the books, was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment and a fine of $100 and costs.

Ren Gano, a hotel keeper at Fulton, Ohio, went home intoxicated, quarreled with his wife and shot her through the body with a shot gun. The woman will probably die. Gano is in jail.

At Lancaster, Pa., Lemon Ellsworth, a widower, aged 28 years, shot and killed Mrs. Amanda Eitnier, a widow aged 46 years, and then blew his brains out. They had been old lovers.

At Chicago Gastare Miecr, a Greek print merchant, died from injuries inflicted by three men, Julius Thompson, Joseph Mohr and John Mohr, all of whom are under arrest.

At Kings Creek, Mo., Thomas Wallace, colored, had his head split open and was killed with an axe by James Mardox, alias Lull, colored, who immediately afterwards shot and killed himself with a pistol.

Antonio Carrasco, a noted bandit chieftain and desperado and the slayer of eight men, added another victim to his list in the person of Chas. Fusselman, a sergeant of Texas rangers. The Rangers are on his trail.

PEOPLE IN PRINT.

The statement that Jay Gould is seriously ill is denied.

Archbishop Corrigan has announced that owing to the ill health of Vicar General Preston, he will, early in September, appoint a new vicar general.

Col. C. E. Bently, of Corry, was elected by the uniformed ranks of the Knights of Pythias brigadier-general of the rank in Pennsylvania.

Mme. Patti has declined an offer for a concert tour, but has signed with Abbey for an operatic tour of America in the late autumn and winter.

A St. Louis paper is authority for the statement that after six years' retirement Jack Haverly, the theatrical manager, will, on the opening of the season, reappear on the stage.

Mrs. Hopkin-Searles failed to provide for Miss Harriet Hubbard and Mrs. Jane Smith, her cousins, and they were left without income of any sort, and the poor house stares them in the face. They live in Delaware county, N. Y.

FOREIGN.

A new cabinet has been formed in Hayti, and everything is tranquil.

Troops have been sent from Lille to Fourmies, France, to put an end to disturbances there which have resulted from labor disputes. Serious rioting is apprehended.

China is notified to cease the persecutions of foreigners or suffer the consequences of a demonstration of several powers, including America.

There is a great demand for American wheat and produce in Peru, the Chilian supply being cut off. American flour sells at $18 per sack and potatoes bring a high figure.

The foreign committee of the Chicago fair has met everywhere in Austria assurances of solid support. The committee will spend a short time in Belgium before returning to London on its way to the United States.

The Chilean Times says rumors are prevalent of an engagement having taken place between some of the insurgents and Balmaceda's troops, and that other expeditions are to be undertaken.

A horrible accident is reported from Nordenhamm, Oldenburg, Germany. A scaffold on which a large number of men were working, collapsed, dragging with it in its fall a lower scaffold with more men. Ten men were killed and 40 seriously injured.

SPORTS.

At Durand, Wis., the home team defeated the Menomonee Club by a score of 16 to 10.

Bierbauer the second baseman of the Pittsburg club, has become disgusted with the club's playing and asked for his release, but there is no probability of his getting it.

Zach Phelps of Louisville will, it is given out, be elected president of the American association at the meeting to be held in St. Louis in place of President Kramer, whose resignation is said to be on the way.

The big annual sweepstakes of the New York Corinthian Yacht club was sailed at Newport, and resulted in a victory for the Rhode Island boat Gloriana. The Gloriana has started in eight races and won all of them, and Rhode Island people are exultant.

Advices received from Sydney, New South Wales state that the prize fight between Billy Murphy and Young Griffo, for a purse of £250 and the feather-weight championship of the world, ended in Murphy winning in 17 rounds. Murphy is the Australian who fought Frank Murphy, of England, and Ike Weir in the California Athletic Club.

Pitcher J. Vickery and Catcher J Shriver of Milwaukee signed National league contracts to play with Chicago. The latter have, therefore, filled a weak spot. In Milwaukee the battery are looked upon as contract jumpers but President Hart of Chicago defends the action by reason of the flop of the Milwaukees to the American association.

RAILROADS.

The Minneapolis & St. Louis has just added 200 box cars to its freight equipment.

The Great Northern railway has issued a notice to its agents in Minnesota, the Dakota and Montana to not only strictly observe the game law themselves, but report any violation of the same coming to their notice. The Great Northern runs through a good game district.

President Van Horne of the Canadian Pacific, who has just returned from England, declares that the reports concerning an amalgamation of the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk roads are without foundation. No such arrangement had been proposed, and even if it had it would be both impossible and undesirable.

AMONG THE TOILERS.

The strike on the Lake Erie & Western road at Lima, Ohio, still continues, and the men say they will never give in.

The engineers, firemen and switchmen of the Peoria & Pekin Union, at Peoria, have gone out and every engine is in the round house.

The strike of the Omaha smelters ended with the understanding that the men begin work on the old terms, and will negotiate for wages on the basis of the eight-hour day.

A conference was held between the national committees of the Green Glass Manufacturers' and Workers' association. An agreement was arrived at by which the impending strike in the trade will be averted.

Owing to protracted discussions no resolutions were adopted by the International Labor congress in Brussels, and little was done beyond the reading of fraternal telegrams from all parts of the world.

The wrought-iron nail men of the Worcester and Staffordshire (England) districts have struck against a proposed reduction of 10 per. cent in their wages. The strike affects no less than 8,000 men and may eventually affect other trades.

GENERAL.

Gold and silver has been found in paying quantities in the Kiowa and Comanche country.

California papers demand the appointment of a Californian as the head of the bureau of horticulture of the world's fair.

Thirty-three young novices were invested with the black veil in the order of the Sisters of Notre Dame at the convent of Notre Dame in Baltimore.

A New York agricultural paper estimates that farm products will be $1,000,000,000 more this year in the United States than for several years.

A petition in insolvency by F. E. Emery, the failed boot and shoe manufacturer of Boston, was granted. His debts are about $375,000 and assets some $200,000.

The firm of Johnston, Tallman & Co., importers and dealers in fireworks, notions and toys, in New York, made an assignment. Liabilities, $100,000; nominal assets, $150,000.

At Richmond, Va., the Alliance convention has adopted the Ocala platform, with an addition demanding that the congressmen elected should give the subtreasury plan or something better.

MANY BODIES FOUND

Searchers For the Victims of the New York Horror Continue Their Sad Work.

Their Labor's Well Rewarded, Thirty Five Bodies Having Been Recovered.

At 3:25 in the morning there was a bustle of excitement among the workmen that soon spread to the eager watchers at the fire line. Another body had been found. It was that of a man, and lay beside the tangle of presses at No. 70. It was terribly burned and unrecognizable, unless identity may be disclosed by the tattered fragments of clothing that but partly covered it.

The work again went on unmarked by incident until 7:40 o'clock this morning, when a second body was found, also that of a man, near the spot where the first was discovered. Five minutes later a third body of a man was found in nearly the same place. Hardly had this been unearthed when the body of another man was found, but it lay beneath a heavy press and it will be impossible to remove it until a derrick is obtained to hoist the press from the ruins. Almost simultaneously came the discovery of a fifth body—making twenty-one in all—among the brick and paper at 74. It was that of a large man, but when the face became visible, it was like the others—unrecognizable. At 9 o'clock the Italian laborers were still at work removing the bricks that buried the body and hindered its removal. From daylight on the crowd of spectators at the fire lines gradually increased, and at 9 o'clock a densely packed throng filled every spot that commanded the slightest view of the blackened ruins.

NO BOILER IN THE BUILDING,

but the presses were not working when the accident occurred. It was due probably to the faulty construction of the building.

One of the bodies recovered this morning is believed to be that of John Steinke of Hoboken.

At 10:10 o'clock the body found at 8 o'clock pinned down beneath a press was removed. In order to release it, tackle employed in hoisting safes was secured and was fastened to a telegraph pole and the press raised sufficiently to permit of the recovery of the body. It was that of a young man about eighteen or twenty years old. About ten minutes later the body of another young man or boy was found almost directly beneath the platform, which latter had been removed. It had been identified as Ernest D. Shadduck of Brooklyn, who was employed by Leibler & Maas. He was sixteen years old.

Just before these two bodies were taken from the ruins a crowd of people standing on the steps of the building opposite the wreck saw one of the Italians working in the ruins stoop over the body of one of the victims and take something out of the vest pocket. They shouted to the police and a boy ran across the street and told Policeman Sweeney, of the Ninth precinct, who arrested the Italian. He was compelled to show what he had in his pockets, and the first thing he pulled out was a silver watch which he admitted he had "picked up." He was taken to the Second precinct station house, followed by a mob, many of whom shouted "Lynch him! Lynch him!" From the police station he was taken to the Tombs police court. There he gave his name as Rosso Savano. He said he intended to give the watch to his boss. He was held for trial.

SIX MORE BODIES

were found in the ruins at 3 o'clock. The work of the taking them out of the debris was completed at 3:25 o'clock, when it was learned that five of the bodies were those of women and girls and one that of a boy. One of the bodies was identified as Lottie Heim, twenty-five years old, who worked with Liebler & Mass. Another as that of Maggie Quinn, about twenty years old, and a third that of Mamie Williams, sixteen years old. The two first were press girls.

District Attorney Nicholl is considering the question of indicting the person or persons responsible for the disaster. After a long consultation with his chief assistant, ex-Sudge Redford, he placed the case in the hands of Assistant District Attorney Townsend.

The scenes at the morgue to-day were similar to those of yesterday. Up to 5 o'clock twenty-one bodies had been brought to the morgue from the scenes of the diaster. Of these thirteen at the morgue by friends or relatives. The bodies of those identified as soon as they were dug out of the debris were not taken to the morgue, but removed at once to undertakers' shops. Most of the identifications were made from the articles of clothing found on the charred remains.

Another body was removed from the ruins at 6:45 o'clock. It was that of a large and muscular man, about six feet in height and perhaps 185 pounds weight. The remains were not much burned, although somewhat blackened. There was no mutilation of any part, and the hair was not even singed. None of those at the scene of the disaster waiting the recovery of relations could identify these remains and they were sent to the morgue. This was the thirty-fifth body which had been recovered up to that hour.

Late this evening the workmen in removing some timbers revealed the arm, head and breast of a woman. She lay on her back, and a large press crushed her down with its weight, and rendered the removal of the body impossible without the use of a derrick. It was allowed to remain where found until to-morrow. A canvas was mercifully thrown over the face, which showed no sign of suffering, she probably having been providentially stunned before the huge press crushed out her life.

An alarm was sent out from police headquarters to-day for Louis Rosenfeld, proprietor of the paint store at No. 70 Park place. He has been missing since the disaster, and his brother thinks the fearful scenes he witnessed after the crash came unsettled his mind, and that he is wandering aimlessly about this or some other city.

A BROTHER'S TRIBUTE.

An Eulogistic Memorial of the Late Prof Alex Winchell.

Washington, Special Telegram, Aug. 25.—At the annual meeting of the Geological Society of America to-day Prof. N. H. Winchell, who fills the chair of geology in the Minnesota state university, read a touching and eulogistic memorial of his dead brother, Prof. Alex Winchell, the last elected president of the society, who was well known in Minnesota.

The memorial was quite lengthy, and reviewed the dead geologist's life from his birth, Dec. 31, 1834, in Duchess county, N. Y., to his death at Ann Arbor Feb. 9 last. His work was many sided. He had studied to be a civil engineer; had a strong leaning toward theology. He also read medicine and was a fine mathematician. He loved music; wrote poetry, and modeled in clay and plaster. As a financial resource he became a teacher, and was very successful. He became famous by his arguments on "The Bible History of the Creation." He published in the Christian Advocate "Adamites and Pre-Adamites," a far-reaching exposition of Scriptural and scientific harmony. For four years he lectured on geology at Vanderbilt university. During his long connection with the university of Michigan he wrote many scientific articles of a popular nature, and did a great deal toward popularizing geology. The speaker spoke eloquently of his dead brother's long and splendid connection with the Ann Arbor university.

His death was most touchingly described. Oddly enough the last words he uttered in public were these: "When I speak to you again it will be of the inhabitants of another world." He had just finished his weekly lecture and referred in his closing sentence to the subsequent lecture that was never delivered. He was a most prolific writer. His sketches on "Creation" are a very widely read book, and many other works written in refutation of evolutionary ideas being very successful. He discovered many new geological species, and many other geologists testified their admiration for him by naming species they discovered after him. His great work for the geological society was touched on, and in closing the living brother said that the new generation keenly feel the beneficent influence of his work.

At the conclusion of the memorial Prof. Edward Orton, Dr. C. A. White and C. R. Vanhise were appointed a committee to draft resolutions expressive of the society's regret at the death of its president.

MOSBY ON HIS MUSCLE.

San Francisco, Aug. 25.—Fur flew on a Leavenworth street car yesterday. A conductor collided with Col. John S. Mosby, the old guerrilla chieftain, and the colonel laid the conductor in remnants on the floor. Then the gripman tried to slay the colonel as he was shaking the prostrate remnants of the conductor. Then the ladies in car came to the old colonel's rescue and carpeted the dummy with the gripman's hair.

The colonel started out from his hotel for a quiet ride on the cable cars. Owing to the crowd Mosby was obliged to take an inside seat. Presently the inside began to fill up. A lady entered and looked around. Every seat was taken. The colonel gave her his seat. Having performed this courtesy the colonel looked around and noticed that some of the seats on the grip had become vacant. The afternoon was scorching hot and the colonel went outside.

"May I cross to the dummy?" he asked the gripman. "You can't, and you know it," said that official.

Hot words followed. The colonel knocked the conductor down and hammered him. The car was stopped and the gripman, a large, powerful man attacked Mosby. Three lady passengers assisted by pulling the gripman's hair. Squeals rent the air, the gripman got up and bolted; so did Col. Mosby; so did the battered conductor, and the latter chased out to seek the police. Afterward Col. Mosby said:

> Generally I try to stomach insults from men in that class, for I hate a row. But you see that Mitkiewicz affair has made me a bit irritable, and so I smashed the fellow.

Mosby bears a few marks of the encounter. His knees are peeled and his thumb is scratched. The conductor, however, has a face that is unfit for publication.

NEARLY THREE MILLIONS.

Bismarck, N. D., Special Telegram, Aug. 25.—Complete assessors' returns from all but one county in North Dakota give the following acreage of wheat by counties:

County.	Acreage.	County.	Acreage.
Barnes	137,421	Morton	11,440
Benson	84,880	Nelson	57,760
Billings	....	Oliver	644
Bottineau	86,880	Pembina	218,066
Burleigh	17,283	Pierce	9,874
Cass	527,070	Ramsey	70,508
Cavalier	67,108	Ransom	70,703
Dickey	107,816	Richland	150,631
Eddy, est'd	25,000	Rolette	21,056
Emmons	15,872	Sargent	99,320
Foster	24,057	Stark	7,109
Frand Forks	262,990	Steele	82,102
Griggs	89,040	Stutsman	57,407
Kidder	25,107	Towner	38,448
La Moure	56,070	Traill	269,426
Logan	4,744	Walsh	241,673
McHenry	6,010	Ward	844
McIntosh	82,681	Wells	21,821
McLean	4,338
Mercer	2,137	Total	2,007,415

These figures are official, but it is probable that they understate the acreage somewhat, for the auditors' of some counties state that the assessors' reports were incomplete. But the total acreage will not vary much from the figures given. The total is an increase of 630,536 acres over the acreage of last year.

A Crack Country Club.

Cumberland, Wis., Special Telegram, Aug. 25.—The Cumberland Base Ball club returned from Eau Claire this morning covered with glory. They won from the Eau Claires Saturday and Sunday in hotly contested games, the scores standing 2 to 4 and 10 to 6. The games were played at Eau Claire, where several thousands dollars changed hands. Cumberland now boasts of the banner nine in the state outside of league clubs.

Stolen Property Identified.

Red Wing, Minn., Special, Aug. 25.—The stolen property found in the possession of the Diamond Bluff burglar has been identified as the property of Stockholm and Martin Rock, parties from whom it was stolen on Monday night.

Gamble's Successor.

Huron, S. D., Special Telegram, Aug. 25.—It is stated on good authority that Bartlett Tripp will not permit his name to be used as a candidate for congress. If this is true, Gen. Taylor, candidate for governor on the Democratic ticket last fall, will be urged to make the run for congress. Hon. P. M. McClure is also mentioned as a possible candidate and has many friends to back him. H. L. Loucks of the Farmers' Alliance and representing the Independents says he is not prepared to say what his party will do, but when the proper time comes they will be in the field.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell.

MINNESOTA

Two young men, John Maier and Robert Finkley, were killed by lightning at Barnesville.

Dr. J. A. James, until recently assistant superintendent of the St. Peter insane asylum, has decided to locate in Mankato and continue his practice.

Joseph O'Neil, of Eau Claire, Wis., was fatally injured at Moorhead by falling 125 feet from a scaffolding which gave way under him when at work in a new elevator.

The new Mitchell & McClure mill at West Duluth began its season's cut the other day. It requires 30 per cent less hands than other mills of like capacity.

Several arrests of violators of the game law at Little Falls is the result of a visit from several men sent out for that purpose and more are to follow.

It is announced that Warren Potter, of the firm of W. Potter & Co., of Aitkin, and Miss Martha Maddy, a teacher of Aitkin's public schools, will be married Sept. 1.

Mrs. Q. Bunch, of Red Wing, was thrown from a wagon into a barb wire fence by a runaway team and seriously cut on the face and one arm.

John Magurin, of Melrose, was brought to St. Cloud the other night by Sheriff Hammeral, charged with committing rape upon Miss Hinnekamp.

The Mankato council has ordered that the sewerage system be extended over half a mile at an estimated cost of $6,000, the work to be done by contract.

The city council at St. Cloud voted to change the ordinance relating to street railways to suit the parties wishing to operate the electric line. It is expected now that an electric line is a sure thing.

Mrs. Geo. Weisbeck, of Spring Valley, a lady of 60, fell through her husband's saw mill into the flume. She was taken out of the water unconscious, and the doctors are fearful she will die from hemorrhage.

The west-bound freight train which passes Alexandria at 6:30 in the evening, collided with a wild-east bound train two miles west of town the other evening. Six cars were derailed and both engines damaged.

The Renville County Agricultural Society will hold their annual fair at Bird Island Sept. 29, 30, and Oct. 1. They are erecting new buildings and fixing up the grounds in good shape.

W. E. Bailey and Gus Koch, two prominent citizens of Rice's, were arrested by Sheriff Quinn, who caught them in the act of shooting prairie chickens. They gave $200 bonds for their appearance at court.

Porter Rix, a prominent citizen of Spring Valley, was seriously injured by a runaway team. His face and head was badly bruised and his spine injured to such extent that the limbs are paralyzed. Doctors think recovery doubtful.

Louis Baldwin, colored, was found by Policeman Fairbanks near the cooper shop at Anoka and taken to the county house. He had a stroke of paralysis and had in his pockets his discharge from the regular army, transportation to St. Louis and $100.

Two boys, aged 10 to 12, at Spring Valley, were arrested and brought before the municipal court charged with breaking into freight cars and stealing candy. They were fined $5 and costs. More arrests will follow as the railroad company have been troubled in this way for some time.

The trouble between the Red Wing people and the Salvation Army has broken out anew. Since the Army has been allowed to march the streets feeling against them has grown more intense, and the Army is now egged nearly every time they appear.

The new M. E. Church at Brownsdale was dedicated in the presence of a very large audience. Rev. F. Doran, of Rochester, was officiating clergyman, and gracefully talked $400 from those present. A deficit of $150 was amply provided for, and the society, with a church structure costing $1,400, is virtually out of debt.

Samuel Wicks and Mrs. Jennie McCann were arrested at Redwood Falls by Sheriff Mead. The couple eloped from Rochester Aug. 5. Mrs. McCann's husband is at Baraboo, Wis., and he was notified of the arrest. They have been traveling by team in a covered wagon. Mrs. McCann has two of her children with her.

The $1,000 6 per cent bonds of the Winnebago City water works were sold to the Smedley Manufacturing Company, of Dubuque. The contract was awarded to the same company for $9,950 for putting in the system of water works in this city, to be completed within 90 days from date.

The State German Sangerfest meets at Mankato, Aug. 21, 22 and 23. The Arion, West Side Liedertafel, Concordia, Germania Maennerchor and Dayton's Bluff societies, of St. Paul, and organizations from Brainerd, Young America, Duluth, Stillwater and Jordan will arrive Friday. The total attendance is expected to reach 5,000.

It is estimated that the hail storm that visited at Deer Creek, Otter Tail county, laid low between 12,000 and 15,000 acres of grain, and the damage will reach $300,000. J. J. Bolton is the principal loser. Senator J. B. Hompe is a victim, and Josh Mead, Fred Peck, A. D. Baker and E. C. Field lost their entire crop.

Mike Coltice, a German, single, living in Stonybrook township, Grant County, was found burned to death. A straw stack was discovered on fire and when the father went to it found his son's effects near by and in the ashes the remains of his son. No reason is given for the deed. Report says there were facts which leads to the opinion of foul play and the body burned to cover the crime.

Frank Quipp, a farmer at Ball Bluff, thirty miles north of Aitkin was drowned while swimming a horse across the Mississippi river near his farm. The current in the river was very strong and washed him off the horse, while hanging to the bridle he was struck by the horses feet on the head, and his head is cut very bad. He leaves a young wife, only being married a few months. He was about 25 years old.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The state pharmaceutical association met at Madison. Major Kennedy made the address of welcome and the body were given an excursion on Lake Madison.

Lightning set fire to the prairie just south of Doland the other evening. About 50 tons of hay were burned. By hard work the people saved several stacks of grain.

Fire occurred in the store of Erlandson & Johnson at Milbank, doing damage to the store and stock to the amount of $1,500 to $2,000; fully insured.

The Minnekahta Daily Herald, a new daily, put in an appearance at Hot Springs recently. J. W. Jones, editor and publisher of the Minnekahta Weekly Herald, is the founder.

Elmer Comstock, a hitherto respected young man, was brought before the police court at Mitchell on the charge of assaulting Gracie Greenacre, a little girl 12 years of age. A continuance was had for the purpose of securing witnesses for the defendant.

At Sioux Falls, Thomas Kelly, a fairly well-to-do farmer, had his wife and Joseph Linebeck, a neighboring tiller of the soil, arrested for adultery. The trial took place immediately after the arrest, resulting in the couple being bound over to appear before the grand jury. Mrs. Kelly created an exciting scene at the conclusion of the trial by pitching upon her angered lord, and was only kept from tearing his eyes out by the officers of the court.

On account of the mammoth crops raised in the vicinity of Mitchel this season trade in all lines is on the pick-up and is showing a healthy activity. Merchants are stocking up heavily and new stores are continually opening up. The past week or two has added a grocery store, a dry goods establishment and a wholesale and retail music house to the business places of Mitchell, all with new and extensive stocks. The Mitchell Printing Company has also added to their facilities by the addition of a book-binding establishment.

Deputy United States Marshal Dawson arrested Ervin Parks and Abe Snyder, near St. Lawrence, charged with perjury in justifying as bondsmen for Timothy Parks for $300 in the recent case where the latter was bound over for abstracting and secreting a registered letter at Clyde. They will be taken before United States Commissioner Grant at Huron for hearing. They attempted the straw bail racket. The two Parks are brothers.

Cora Bell Chaska, accompanied by her two children, passed through Sioux Falls recently, having come from Worthington, Minn., where she visited relatives. Her oldest boy, Sam, is now a lad of 3 years, and looks and acts like other children. Mrs. Chaska said: "The stories about my getting a divorce are false. I just received a letter from Sam Chaska, and he said the house was ready for us. You know we sold our original homestead, and Sam has been busy building a house on our own new claim, west of Forest City. We still love each other, and I am proud of the father of my babies."

NORTH DAKOTA.

The Minot, N. D., land office will be open October 1.

The Grand Forks council awarded the contract for the new sewer system to W. P. Alsip of this city at $13,000.

The funeral of Rev. W. T. Currie and daughter and Miss Van Kirk, of Grand Forks, who were drowned while bathing, was conducted by Bishop Walker.

The railroad commission of Fargo decided to attempt to enforce the law. They have submitted to a list of questions to the attorney general for answer and on his filing his opinion, which will probably be the latter part of the week, they will promulgate their full set of rules.

An invention which is destined to revolutionize the work of threshing has been invented by A. A Booth, of Odell, a few miles north of Sanborn. It is a self-feeder and band cutter, and when in its perfected state it is claimed that it will do the work of five men, entirely doing away with the usual three feeders and two band-cutters.

A Sanborn dispatch says: Grain is so heavy in some fields that only half a swath can be cut with the harvesters. In former years only two and one-half pounds of twine on the average has been used to the acre, but the average this year is three and one-half pounds. In cutting nine acres of wheat one farmer used forty pounds of twine, showing that the stand of grain is immense.

Rev. S. N. Griffith of Larimore had a preliminary trial before Justice Cutts of Grand Forks, charged with assault with intent to outrage a girl aged nine years, daughter of Newell Morgan, a farmer of Arvilla. The alleged assault occurred during a camp meeting in June. The defense claimed the charge was the result of spite work on the part of parents of the child. Judge Cutts held the defendant to the district court in $1,000 bail. Rev. Griffith is pastor of the Methodist church at Larimore. He was lately elected professor of mathematics of the new Methodist university. There is considerable excitement here over the matter and some division of opinion as to his guilt.

WISCONSIN.

Elkhorn has a scandal, the Independent says, but it refuses to divulge it.

In the case against the Superior gamblers the jury failed to agree.

S. M. Berg, of Tigerton, killed a bear that weighed 200 pounds.

United States Railroad Commissioner H. A. Taylor, of Hudson has appointed his son, Willis A. Taylor, as his confidential secretary, at a salary of $1,600.

The Ashland County Board rescinded the resolutions bonding the county for $100,000. The move was made on account of opposition by the Hurley faction.

Samuel A. Carley, 19 years old, has been arrested in the town of Rushford, Green Lake County, charged with forging his father's name to checks for sums aggregating $200.

The census bulletin gives Florence a population of 444, when the enumerators found that it contained 1,000 inhabitants. Supt. Porter's attention will be called to the mistake.

The examination of Frank Carey, arrested at La Crosse, on the 13th for complicity in the Drake murder, took place at Viroqua. No evidence to warrant his detention was introduced and the case was nolled.

John Gillen's 2-year-old daughter at Bryant met with a sad death. The little one was playing about the house with the stem of a pipe in her mouth, when she fell striking her chin on a bench, which drove the end of the pipe stem through her tongue, before surgical aid arrived she bled to death.

Fire started from a heater over the clothing store of A. C. Ehrmann at Oshkosh. The damage done by fire, smoke and water to the building and stock is about $3,000. Horn's drug store and the novelty store of Hull & Hawthorn, next door also suffered, the damage done to stock being $1,000.

Frank Rowe and George Wortley's boys were engaged in threshing on Dave Matthew's farm near Shullsburg when a battle begun in which pitchforks, neckyokes, singletrees, and every available weapon figured. The battle was short but decisive, and when it was over Mr. Rowe the elder, who had taken a hand in the fight, was found unconscious from a blow on the head from a singletree. Rowe may die.

Ore shipments at Ashland were nearly fifty thousand tons, the heaviest of the season. A large number of the mines which shut down early in the season have resumed work and at least a dozen options will begin shipping by Oct. 1. Assays made of the new mines opened are astonishing, several running as high as 63 per cent iron and low in phosphorous. Two new mines will shortly be shipping from the new Messembria range.

IOWA.

E. Skinner, an auctioneer at Manchester, committed suicide by shooting himself at the cemetery in the presence of two men. The cause is not known.

The fire in the plant of the Farley & Loetcher sash and blind factory at Dubuque, was extinguished after five hours' hard fight. The loss is estimated at $15,000 to $20,000.

The contest for the United States district judgeship in the First district, the position left vacant by the death of Judge Love at Keokuk, recently, has been decided by the appointment of Senator John S. Woolson.

The 8th Iowa Infantry Association at Wapello closed their eighth annual reunion of two days. Gen. B. M. Prentice, of Bethany, was the principal speaker. Hon. H. H. Benson, of Omaha, was also present and addressed the soldiers. A big camp fire with speeches and toasts was held.

An election was held at Mount Pleasant recently to decide whether or not the city should purchase the local water works system. There has been a long standing fight between the city fathers and the company, and the problem was solved by an almost unanimous vote to purchase the system. The price to be paid is $32,500.

Pastry Without Butter.

Light, flaky and digestible pie crust and all kinds of fine pastry can be made with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder without butter or with one half the usual portion, if preferred, or with a small quantity of lard or other shortening as desired. Pie crust made in this way is more wholesome and digestible besides being more economical and easier prepared in addition to saving all the butter if desired. One third the flour is also dispensed with, and the crust is rolled that much thinner, the raising qualities of Dr. Price's Powder swelling it to the requisite thickness. Those who enjoy the appetizing qualities of the delicious home made pie will rejoice to know this secret.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, or any other adulterant. In fact, the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

Mr. M. Dauser, the Crookston photographer was in town today on his way to Thief River Falls. He will be here on Friday to attend to all who desire his services.

J. W. Wheeler, of Crookston, was in town today. He has recently bought a farm north of here and seems well pleased with his purchase and the country.

A telegram was received here this afternoon (Wednesday) which states that the signal observer predicts considerable frost in northern Dakota and Minnesota to night.

Harvest is progressing rapidly but will hardly be completed this week Some of the grain is quite green yet and considerable cutting will be left until next week.

Henry Reinhardt and bride, of Fisher arrived on today's train. Mr. Reinhardt informed us that he was married yesterday at Croookston. We acknowledge a cigar and offer congratulations.

Next Monday will be Sept. 1st and it will be lawful to kill prairie chickens. It is intimated that the law has not been very closely observed and that a good many birds have already been killed.

Mrs. C. W. McKaallor left last Monday for Superior Wis., where she will visit relatives for several weeks. Agent McKallor will leave to join her next Friday having obtained a leave of absence for a couple of weeks.

Crookston Times: Dan Patterson, of St. Hilaire was down this week looking after the contrast to carry the mail from Crookston to St. Hilaire three days in the week that the tri-weekly train does not run. Dan was the pioneer stage driver over this route, and during the time he had the contract, no matter whether it was wet or dry warm or cold, blizzard or calm did he miss a trip or failed to attend to any business entrusted to him. "Old Reliability" the boys used to call him in the early days and he well deserved the term.

The larger card will be three quarters of an inch wider and one inch longer than the present card.

Chicago Journal: If all the people of the United states need except the produce of the soil is to be bought of foreigners because they can produce it cheaper, what are all our people going to do? Shall they all go to farming? Shall they all go to raising wheat, meat and cotton for sale to foreigners, using the proceeds in buying from foreigners everything else of human use?

Many of the best farmers are coming to the conclusion that summer-fallowing is of very doubtful advantage. The straw is altogether too heavy this year on summer-fallowed land and many such fields will not fill. The same condition may be safely counted upon in all wet seasons. Besides summer-fallowing leaves the land so loose that the danger from blowing in the spring is materially increased. Either a crop of barley followed by early plowing or seeding to timothy seems to be the best treatment for land that has been cropped to wheat until a change is needed.—Stephen Leader.

Eastern money lenders are beginning to demand that in the obligation shall be inserted a clause specifying that it shall be paid in gold. This requirement has been in vogue in many sections of the west for a considerable time. It indicates that the tense condition of the money market is due to the apprehension of money owners that the government may be induced by the free silver craze to send out a flood of dollars which are not really worth 100 cents each, and which can never be worth that much, for behind them is no promise of the government nor of anybody that the difference between their face value and their real value will ever be made up to the holder.—Grand Forks Herald.

A little funnygraph is going the rounds of the press, which is so replete with the philosophy of fact, that it is worthy a place among Esop's Fables. A passenger on a steamer bound for Europe said to the captain, "The steerage seems empty Don't emigrants ever go back to Europe?" "Oh yes," answered the captain, "but they always go back in first cabin." Isn't it a pretty little sermon? They come here by the thousands in poverty squalor and wretchedness—but when they go back to visit fatherland, it is always in the first cabin. Yet this country is going to the demnition bowwows.—Milnor Teller.

The Indian office in Washington appears to be anxious for the opening of the Red Lake reservation. One of its officials said to a Minneapolis Journal correspondent the other day:

"First, we must have the surveys of the Red Lake country. Contracts have been made by the general land office and as soon as surveys are completed the appraisers will go ahead and sell as much of the land as they can this year and then dispose of more next year. The lands will be sold at public auction, but not below the appraised value. You see we are hampered and harassed by the long delays of the commission Now we must await the surveyor's work and we cannot hurry them. They are anxious to complete their work and get their money. They cannot accomplish impossibilities. Then after the surveys are made, we must, under the law, advertise the lands for four weeks in various newspapers. First, however, the appraisers must go over the lands and make their appraisements, and that will take time, It is an immense work and all depends upon the commission and its work. for we can do nothing until the removal of the Indians is determined and we can tell exactly what to do. Therefore Mr. Hall has been sent for and is here.

We are of the opinion that farmers will get good prices for their wheat this fall. Many are claiming that wheat will be worth $1.25 a bushel and are advising farmers to hold for that price. It looks to us as if wheat would be worth from 85 cents to $1,00 per bushel in this market. The foreign demand for our wheat will be large providing it can be bought at a reasonable price. We can hardly expect the famine districts of Europe to pay a fancy price for our grain. If they can buy it at a fair price they will take large quantities, but if the speculators raises the price too high they will be compelled to eat something else. It is possible that speculation may force wheat up over the dollar mark, but if it is done our advice to the farmer is to sell. We have raised the largest crop in years and will be able to supply a large deficiency. If, however wheat falls below 80 cents in this market we think it would be advisable for farmers to hold for higher prices.

An editor died and slowly wended his way to where he supposed a warm reception awaited him. The divil saw him and said. "For many years thou hast borne the blame for the many errors the printers made in the paper. The paper has gone alas for $1, and the $1 has often failed to come in. The printers have failed to come in. The printers have divided thee on Saturday night when thou hadst not one cent to thy name. Men have taken the paper without paying for it and then cursed thee for not getting out better, Thou hast been called a dead beat by passenger conductors when thou hast shown thy annual pass to envious gaze. All All these thou hast born in silence. Thou canst not come in here," And he fired him. "Heaven is thy home and besides, if we let him come in here, he would continually dun delinquent subscribers, for hell is full of them, and create discord in my kingdom."—Ex.

This is the season when canine flesh takes on a phenominal value, Every red-headed, speckle-faced, long-legged, lop-eared dog that can lay claim to a tinge of good blood is set up as a model of the trainer's skill. Sometimes a deluded mortal fresh from the cities rushes onto the scene and anxious to plunge into the heat of the hunt, stopping not to look up pedigrees or other evidence—asks the price and pays it—what is his consternation then when his dog goes frantic over gopher holes rushes headlong through a covey or strays far off from his master! Deluded mortals. The repitition of the story does not warn them. We have many good dogs here and some poor ones. They will all be held at about even figures this year, as there is a great demand for them. Woe to the green purchaser.—Red Lake Falls News.

How the Greenback press and silver mint can put money into the farmer's pocket, Peffer and Polk cannot tell, So far as their wisdom goes the farm problem is still an unsolved riddle.

But at last the silent farm itself has spoken, and revealed that which was sealed to demagogues. Alike when the demagogues were sleeping and when they were shouting the farm was getting in its silent work and now flings upon the world a crop which taps the money tills of all nations, and, lo there is money enough for all.

The gold tides of two hemispeeres have set in for the Northwest; because here is the world's bread supply. Not cheap paper or silvar but bread was the power that brought the gold.

The things that makes crops abundant are not the government mints and presses, but good rains and brains modern methods and machines, farm institutes and experiment stations and improved breeds of live-stock and enterprise.

These, a good soil and a good market place the Northwest in command of the money supply of the world—a command which Peffer and Polk with their cheap money quackery could never have secured till doomsday.

The farmer who has plenty of hard wheat sweet butter and fat beef need never bother his head about "cheap and plenty money."

To Agent, St. Hilaire.

Signal observer at St. Paul thinks there will be frost very light in vicinity of Assiniboine and Buford but no danger tonight in Red River Valley and territory tributary. Think that there will be danger tomorrow night, and farmers ought to hold their smudges reserve, Give this information widespread,

The following was also received on Saturday,

Dated Barnsville Aug. 22.
To all agents,

Signal observer reports indications for frost in north east Dakota and northern Minn. Sunday morning.

On Thursday night the thermometer here registered 34, only two degrees above freezing point. On Saturday night the lowest point reached was 31 ½ degree below freezing point. It is certain that the frost has done some damage to the wheat, A large number of the farmers started smudges which undoubtedly did good service. Corn and garden vegitables show signs of being bitten by frost and many think that considerable wheat was injured. About one half the wheat was cut and in the shock. Probably from 15 to 25 percent of the wheat was damaged slightly.

STAMMERING A HABIT.

So Bad Is It in Germany That They Have Schools for Its Cure.

One of the most unique schools in this city is that in which Professor H. Herschfeld teaches stammerers how to cure themselves of their misfortune. It has been in existence now some five years, and in that time nearly 200 people have been made to speak straight.

"There is no mystery about my art at all," said the professor to a reporter. "I simply take a plain, ordinary, everyday view of the matter. I am a graduate of a German school, and my experience has proven that stammering is simply a habit, a bad one, if you will, but nothing more than a habit. I do not say it because of my position, but I can cure anybody from stammering who will come to me for two weeks with a bona fide intention of doing his best to overcome his failing."

"In this theory about stammering being a habit you are running counter to the general opinion entertained in Germany?"

"Yes," he replied, "to the general opinion, but not to the best opinion. I would be far from reflecting on my countrymen, but when they spread the impression that stammering is not merely not a habit, but that it is contagious, they are simply deceiving themselves. Still, that they are alarmed to a certain extent is shown by the fact that stammering is increasing to such a degree that they have public schools for its cure which are attended by more than 80,000 pupils."

"Do you find any particular nationalities partial to stammering?"

"I cannot say that I do, but now that I remember I cannot recall a single Russian who is a stammerer, nor do I have many Poles among my pupils. This habit of lisping, which some silly people believe is quite au fait, predisposes one to stammering. You will find stammering more prevalent among people of a phlegmatic temperament and in nations that have nothing else to do than try experiments with language. Character in people as a whole has a good deal to do with the habit. Where you find men and women with plenty of work you don't find many stammerers, and when you do find them, as I have, you have people of resolution to deal with and can effect a cure. I have met no man or woman in this city who cannot cure themselves."—New York Press.

The Tongue of a Toad.

The toad, which is one product of the tadpole, has some wonderful peculiarities. Did you ever see this clumsy and rather lazy looking hopper in the act of catching a fly? He darts his tongue out several inches so quickly that you can hardly see it, and with all its activity the fly hasn't a ghost of a chance to escape. How does the toad do this?

You may have heard the saying that a termagant's tongue is hung in the middle, and thus wags at both ends. In the case of the toad the tongue is hung exactly the reverse of the human tongue—that is to say, the fastening is at the front of the jaw, while the loose end hangs backward to the throat. Now, when the lazy toad sights a fly he works his way up to it slowly until he gets within range for his tongue shooter. Then he suddenly opens his mouth, the tongue flies out like a line from a fishing pole, it strikes the fly and a glutinous substance on the tongue holds the victim until it is dumped into the toad's capacious mouth. — Exchange.

The Skin of Toads and Salamanders.

A recent microscopical study by Herr Schultz of the skin of toads and salamanders has yielded some interesting results. There are two kinds of glands, mucous and poison glands. The former are numerous over the whole body, while the latter are on the body and limbs, and there are groups in the ear region behind the eye, and in the salamander at the angle of the jaw. The poison glands are, of course, protective, and the corrosive juice is discharged differently in toads and salamanders on stimulating electrically; in the latter it is spurted out in a fine jet, sometimes more than a foot in length, whereas in the toad, after long action of the current, it exudes sparingly in drops. There is no reason for supposing that the mucous glands become poisonous.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Circular Rainbow.

A correspondent of The London Times tells of what he and his party saw during an ascent of Finsterrehorn on Sept. 30, 1890: The day we mounted the Finsterrehorn we were treated to the rare sight of a circular rainbow, the phenomena lasting nearly half an hour, and forming a complete circle. There were heavy clouds lying some 4,000 feet below, on the Aar glacier, and it was on these that the beautiful, brilliantly colored ring lay. A second circle was also visible. We were near the summit of the peak when the first of the party observed it, and from that point the face of the mountain on the Grimsel side is almost perpendicular, giving us a splendid view.

Black and Yellow Striped Convicts.

The sight of a gang of convicts in prison suits of broad black and yellow stripes at work in the public parks of Richmond strikes a northern man as a peculiar feature of the Virginia reformatory system. They work even in the shadow of the state house, keeping the walks and lawn in order. They are short term men, and do not require much watching to prevent their escaping.—New York Sun.

THE PHANTOM MOUNTAIN.

Clustered about the capstan they were telling about John Muir's experience on the great South Dome in Yosemite during a snow storm, when alone there, impressed with all the vastness of the place, he saw a giant image in the clouds like the wrath of the valley's god, veering and advancing as if in menace. It was told how Muir finally ascertained that the image was merely his own reflection on the snow cloud—a duplicate of the world famous specter of the Brocken. Then up spoke Mayor John R. Glascock, of Oakland, and said:

"Have any of you seen the phantom mountain—the peak in the ocean?"

Though there were many in that company who had seen all sorts of things, from crawling vipers to pink monkeys with sea green appendages, none could ever say that he had ever seen the mountain. So the mayor went on

"I have often been on Mount Diablo, in fact I have camped there season after season. I have viewed the sun rise and set from a perch upon the summit time and time again, but once only had I the pleasure of beholding the ghostlike peak. One morning, however, after I had climbed the grade in order to see the signal service men, who were formerly stationed there, flash their heliograph signals across to an eminence on the other side of Truckee, and then over to Mount St. Helena, I was told to turn my eyes to the sea. You know it is a fact that on a clear day a person can see more country from the summit of Diablo than from any other eminence in the world.

"The great central valley spreads out on one side. All the lesser hills, generally shrouded in a fog, are beneath you, and off to the west dimples the blue Pacific. Well, this morning I could hardly believe my eyes. Right up from the bosom of the deep rose a great mountain—solid, majestic and empurpled. For a long time I believed that it was the product of some 'drastic lift of pent up volcanic fires,' the growth of a night. But as I studied it I saw it was the exact counterpart of the double cone of Diablo, a phantom of the sea. By the peculiar reflective and refractive condition of the atmosphere the mountain was made to appear as a wave washed crag. As the sun rose all its apparent stability vanished and it dissolved into thin air. I tried for the sight again and again, but the atmospheric conditions were never favorable. Ever afterward the ocean stretched away unruffled and remote."—San Francisco Examiner.

Some Long Speeches.

What is the longest speech on record delivered in parliament? That of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone in introducing his budget in 1853, when he spoke for five hours and three-quarters. Mr. Gladstone speaks at the rate of 150 words per minute, and therefore his budget speech on that occasion would contain about 50,000 words. The British parliament has rather a poor record for long speeches. A Maori member of the New Zealand legislature spoke eight hours on one occasion and seventeen hours on another when it was an all day and an all night sitting.

A Mr. Martin, a member of the Winnipeg legislature, once spoke for ten hours. Twenty-six hours of talk is a fairly good spell, yet this is what Dr de Cosmos, of the British Columbian assembly, recently accomplished. He saved the settlers an immense tract of land by talking an annexation measure out. The longest speech, however, ever made in any parliament was that delivered in 1890 by a Roumanian deputy, when he talked thirty-seven hours in support of the impeachment of John Bratiano, an ex-minister.—London Tit-Bits

Gas Manufactured from Petroleum.

A new process for the manufacture of gas from petroleum has been put into practice at Kittanning, Pa., by which it is claimed gas can be manufactured at one-half the cost of the old, and is much better for illuminating purposes. The method is a very simple one, consisting of a feeder and a system of retorts. These retorts are kept at a certain heat, and the oil forced through them into a receiving tank filled with water. When the heated oil strikes the water it turns into gas, and is conveyed from there to the supply tank, ready for use. It is said that 4,000 feet of gas can be manufactured from one barrel of Lima oil.—New York Telegram.

A Cutting Reply.

One would suppose that a consciousness of his own deformity would have made Talleyrand more lenient to the defects of others. That this was not the case is illustrated in his reply to a questioner whose misfortune it was to be crosseyed.

Meeting Talleyrand as the great statesman was leaving a council where there had been much wrangling and confusion, this person called out to him:

"Well, M. de Talleyrand, how are things looking?"

"Like your eyes, sir," was the cutting response.—Boston Transcript.

A Cure for Ague.

No disease has given rise to a more numerous and curious catalogue of charms than the ague. A common practice was to run nine times through a circle formed by a brier that grew in that direction. This was no doubt a Druidical ceremony, nine being the mystic number of high antiquity. A spider given, unknown, to the patient was a favorite remedy with some persons.—London Tit-Bits.

Ten Muses.

With many people all other considerations must yield to their notions of symmetry, which often turn out to mean mere balancing or measuring of one part with another, and not the higher harmony of parts which sometimes involves a little irregularity. The artist finds that the symmetry of his picture is helped by making the objects which he represents at one side of the canvas higher than those which he depicts on the other.

Not so, however, was it with a worthy man, by occupation a carpenter, who once had charge of the arrangements at an exhibition given at a country town in aid of a charity. A tableau was to be given in which the editor of the local newspaper, who was a poet of no little reputation in the country around, was to be shown seated in a chair and surrounded by the muses.

At the rehearsal, the young ladies representing the muses came upon the stage and took their places, five on one side of the editor and four on the other.

"See here," said the director of the exhibition, "there has got to be another of those girls."

"Another muse!" said one of the ladies; "why, there are nine of us. Didn't you know that there were only nine muses?"

"Can't help that," said the carpenter; "symmetry requires ten muses—five on each side!"

So another young lady was decked out, largely in copies of the editor's newspaper, and made to represent the muse of journalism!—Youth's Companion.

Insurance Agents' Profits.

First class life insurance agents who can approach what the companies call "big fish" earn almost fabulous amounts of money. A gentleman who represented one of the big New York companies in this city for a number of years, and who never "touched" a man for less than a $10,000 life policy, was wont to boast that his annual income never fell below $30,000. He was telling the truth, too. Mr. Gildendigit was a great success as a solicitor. His company transferred him to New York, where he had a wider field of work. There he was as successful as he was in Cincinnati, and he flaunted in every cafe and bar in Broadway between Union square and the Gilsey house the certified check for his commission. The check was for $30,000, and he boasted that he had "landed his fish" in one month.

This accomplished life insurance solicitor was sent to Berlin by his company, and reports from the German capital on the banks of the Spree are to the effect that there he is doing quite as well as the gentleman who kept the hotel. This man was "self made" in all that the term implies, for when he first came to Cincinnati he worked as a common laborer in a yeast manufactory here. He was ostentatiously liberal, offensively so at times, but it was a part of his business.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Don't be a spider and crawl in these days! Why not keep up with the nineteenth century? You would not buy a steam engine made like those of a century ago. Then why should you buy the old-fashioned, big, drastic pills that gripe and debilitate your system?

As great improvements have been made in pills as in steam engines. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are tiny, sugar-coated granules, or pills, are easiest to take, and never gripe or shock the system.

They are purely vegetable and perfectly harmless.

One little Pellet's a laxative, three to four are cathartic. They regulate and cleanse the liver, stomach and bowels — quickly, but thoroughly. They're the cheapest pill, sold by druggists, because you only pay for the good you get. They're guaranteed to give satisfaction, every time, or your money is returned. That's the peculiar plan all Dr. Pierce's medicines are sold on.

Can you ask more?

The human mind has but a faint idea of the magnitude of the sum total included in the term million. As an illustration, it may be stated that if a man should reach the age of one hundred years, he would not have lived for a million hours, the numbers falling short one hundred and twenty-five thousand of that amount.

Never neglect your fire-places. Much of the cheerfulness of life depends upon them. What makes a fire so pleasant, is that it is a live thing in a dead room.

SYRUP of FIGS

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

Miss Morland had taken her part with the fine artistic feelings she usually displayed. The play of the evening was the work of a contemporary poet and playwright, and contained much inner warmth, though it was, perhaps, somewhat lacking in scenic effects. A modern loveless marriage formed the theme of the play, and Miss Morland's rendition of the young society woman entering in such a compact was truly admirable. As the curtain dropped and the crowd surged and pushed toward the door her praise was heard from all sides, many of the ladies having been moved to tears. But the drizzling rain and thoughts of a cozy supper soon supplanted the actress in the hearts of her fickle audience, and all were intent upon adjusting wraps and seeking carriages; that is all—with one exception.

This exception was a short, insignificant-looking man with gray hair, a pale, yellowish complexion, and wearing glasses. No thoughts of supper entered his brain, nor did he heed the rain, as he walked down the deserted street, for within his breast a new world had unfolded itself. He still seemed to see the charming creature, whose silvery voice uttered words which came from his very heart—for he was the writer of the drama just played. In passing through the little out-of-the way place, his attention had been arrested at the depot by a notice of the coming performance. He determined to see it even though it cost him some delay. Here he was, wandering through the streets of a strange city, positively a changed man. The young actress had moved him greatly; perhaps because she personified his ideal to such perfection, or had she touched upon a passion long thought dead? To love and its beautiful dreams he had long said farewell, not because he was too old, but because sad memories of past delusions haunted him. The youthful ardor of a first love had been quenched, and, although he won fame and fortune, happiness he deemed beyond his reach. At an early date death robbed him of his fair young wife; a second matrimonial venture proved very disastrous, and added to these came many other disappointments and embitterments. His unprepossessing personality was perhaps often at fault. He had not the gift to make himself agreeable to others. So he bowed his head to the inevitable, and philosophically swallow those bitter drops life gave him. He found amusement, was lionized, but his empty bachelor quarters often made his heart feel sad. His thoughts now were: If the bliss this woman so vividly pictures is attainable, must not she herself be capable of the warmest feeling, acting it so powerfully? How happy the man to whom she utters such sentiments! He left town that same night, but could not shake off the impression received, and a few days later he wrote Miss Morland an enthusiastic letter, thanking her for the pleasure she had given him, and confessing that she had awakened in a skeptical man of the world new thoughts of happiness. She answered his letter in due time, in a much more correct and sensible manner than her colleagues are wont to employ. The poet wrote under the nom de plume "Oldenburg," and this signature he likewise affixed to his letter. In her letter she spoke of him with great admiration, discoursing upon his great talent and the amount of feeling his works displayed. The thought of having won his approbation, she said, made her immensurably proud and happy. But why had he not called?

"Why not, indeed?" he muttered.

He wrote her. "You would have been greatly disappointed in me." This she denied, saying, she too had seen something of the world and did not expect to find a poet always armed with a golden lyre, nor whose head was encircled by a halo of golden curls. A correspondence ensued which gave them both much pleasure. Miss Morland had the advantage of coming of refined parents and received an excellent education. The stage she regarded with something like aversion, but finding it necessary to support herself her great talent tied her to it. With her, too, the hopes of youth had fallen thick in the blast, for she had sighed for and found love, but not to her satisfaction. "And yet," he said to himself, "she can portray a living woman like my Heitha, with unequalled delicacy. What a treasure of love must lie dormant within this woman's breast!" Sweet hopes forced themselves upon him almost against his will. Could he but win her. She seemed to take a deep interest in him; was it possible that the man supplant the poet in her affections? Did not her letter breathe the hope that at last she had met a man possessing the character and mental capacity she most sought? Day by day he pondered on this, doubting, still hoping. At last he decided to put his mind at rest and visit her. "I am positively nervous at the thought of our meeting," she wrote, and he answered that not since the days of his boyhood had his heart been filled with such fond apprehension. "I am to see you again, to press your hand; what joy there is even in the anticipation."

Now they were seated in the actress' little parlor. The room was of a very ordinary type, withered floral tributes, faded photographs, souvenirs of every description being scattered promiscuously about. He was stuttering and stammering like a foolish schoolboy. Social gifts had indeed been denied him. Then, too the disappointment was really very great. He expected to find a young, dainty and graceful blonde; he found—a brunette with a powdered, sallow complexion—40 if she was a day. How he hated this particular style of woman above all when they were dressed somewhat eccentric! Her speech was short and almost masculine; in a word, she dispelled instantly every poetic delusion his imagination had conjured up. They talked of commonplaces; of a season at Banden Baden, the advantages of living in a metropolis, etc., but avoiding studiously the object of their meeting. At another time her keen wit might have amused him, now it jarred upon his nerves. She was interesting, perhaps intellectual, but not poetical, not beautiful, in fact, positively homely! Their leave-taking was very cool, and he boarded the next train for home—the picture of despondency. Miss Morland's impression of him was not much better. His disposition, never very amiable, had been positively soured on seeing her. However, being a sensible man, he soon admitted to himself that had she been as he dreamed the meeting would have been equally painful, and he therefore wrote: "I think we owe each other some explanation: I did not speak as my heart dictated, and you also seemed to labor under some restraints." In the course of her letter she wrote: "I certainly had imagined you very different, but why cannot we remain friends? I take my summer outing in the Hartz Mountains. Why not follow me?" etc. He had little inclination to follow this invitation, but could not well decline; so before many weeks had passed, behold, they meet again.

She was not powdered, and this pleased him; he felt more at his ease, and they chatted gayly for some time. Over a cozy supper they openly discussed their mutual disappointment.

"I look bilious and am far from being captivating," he laughingly said; "what a bitter revelation I must have been for you." "Speaking of looks," she replied, "I am only capable of looking well in 'make-up,' and as for any impetuous feeling, in everyday life I leave all comedy behind me." "Still," he said jokingly, "you powder at times?" "Well yes," she admitted; "but what is an old hag to do when she looks so wretched?" He became quite animated, for she pleased him wonderfully. "It is a good thing for me that you are not the curly-headed bard of my thoughts, the sight of me would have put you to instant flight."

"You are younger than I and far better looking," he replied seriously; "had you been as I dreamed you would have shown me the door." Now they became excellent friends, growing nearer and dearer to each other each day.

When the first cool days of autumn came a happy bride and groom took their departure, sincerely attached and fearing no further delusion.—Translated from German, for the Wisconsin, by Margaret Berttlingck.

The Paris Ballet Agency.

The most curious of all the agencies is certainly the ballet girls' agency, Perier's, No. 20 Boulevard St. Denis. There comes all the dancers of the continent, and thence they are shipped off all over the world. The ballet is considered to be in its decadence; but that is a great mistake. There have never been so many dancers as there are to-day. Perier has 8,000 addresses on his list. The agency is an odd sight when the engagements are being made. The rooms themselves are on the ground floor, three wee closets into which scarcely a score of people could be crammed; but the court-yard is large, and into that there crowd some sixty or eighty ballet girls, jolly, noisy creatures, full of fun and mischief, teasing any unhappy man who may fall into their mischievous clutches. They tickle him, they pull his hat over his eyes, and generally make his life a burden to him. No one can control the turbulent band but Perier himself, who, with an Olympian frown and a stern and resonant cry of "Silence!" contrives occasionally to bring the impish lot into comparative order. Lucy Hooper's Letter.

A Good Story of General Sheridan.

A good story of General Sheridan is told here. When Mr. G. W. Childs arranged for the paintings of Grant and Sherman, a well known woman artist was selected to put General Sheridan's features on canvas. She called upon the great warrior at army headquarters in Washington. "Little Phil" listened attentively to all she had to say, and then observed in that drawling, Slocum like tone: "Now, madam, I have only this to say. I have been painted in oil by a Frenchman, a German and an Italian. The French artist has made me a Frenchman, the German has made me a German, the Italian has made me an Italian. I will consent to sit for you only on one condition."

"What is that, general?" asked the artist.

"That you will not make me a woman."

The portrait now hangs in Grant hall, and of all the portraits there is manifestly the best and most characteristic.—West Point Letter.

THIS HORSE HAS SENSE.

Dodges His Turn in Pulling the Car Up the Hill.

There is a trick practiced by one of the West End tow-horses on the Cambridge street hill, says the Boston Transcript, which the Listener has no doubt been noticed by a great many people, and which is well worth being put on record.

The horses stand in a line at the foot of the hill each, when he returns from a tow, taking a position at the rear. In this way each horse gets his turn at towing.

Among the tow-horses at this hill is a big-necked gray, a stout and wise old fellow. He has been seen, when the tow-boys are temporarily around the corner, as they sometimes are, to sneak out of his position, when he has got to the head of the line, and quietly move around to the foot.

Ammonia and Alum in Baking Powders. How to Detect Them.

In view of what the Minnesota Senate has done, it is hoped that legislative bodies in other states will soon take up the subject of food adulteration. The subjoined list of baking powders containing ammonia and alum, compiled from official reports and published in a recent number of the Scientific American, is given below. "It deals in a direct manner with an evil which must be cut down" said the Chicago Tribune in commenting on the Scientific American report. Following is the list of Ammonia and alum are the most common adulterants used in the manufacture of baking powders. The Government report shows that a large percentage of the baking powders on the market contain either one or the other, or both these pernicious drugs.

What woman would use an ammonia or alum baking powder, if she knew it? Such powders not only undermine the health, but ammonia gives to the complexion a sallow or blotched appearance. The presence of ammonia or alum in a baking powder, however, can easily be detected.

TO DETECT AMMONIA.—Mix one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder with one teaspoonful of water in a tin cup; boil thoroughly for a few moments, stir to prevent burning, and if ammonia is present you can smell it in the rising steam. Or, place a can of the suspected powder top down on a hot stove for a minute or two, then take off the cover and smell.

TO DETECT ALUM.—Alum powder can be tested by putting a couple of teaspoonfulls of the powder in a glass of cold water. If no effervescence, that is bubbling or simmering, takes place, condemn the powder and return it at once.

Some alum powders, however, like the "Calumet," "Bon Bon," "Chicago Yeast," etc., contain phosphates in combination with alum, and with these brands the following test is simple and sure:

Take one half teaspoonful of baking powder in lid of say half pound can; char thoroughly over a strong alcohol flame, a good gas jet, or red hot coals. After charing, that is, burning until the whole mass is black, add a teaspoonful of water and place a bright piece of silver coin in the solution. Stir for one minute, then take out the silver. If the powder prove a cream of tartar powder the coin will be bright; if an alum powder it will have sulphur stains.

Now pour a little vinegar into the lid and smell the fumes. Alum powders give off sulphuretted hydrogen, which may be detected by its foul odor.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, Lime or any other adulterant. In fact, the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

A Remarkable Case.

"Jones is out again, I see.

"Yes, and has entirely recovered his health. There was something very singular about his case.

"Indeed! What was it?"

"It was a heavy cold he had, you know, and one of his friends who called to see him gave him a sure cure for it."

"Yes?"

"Cured him? Gracious! That is the most remarkable case I ever heard of."—New York Press.

It has been observed that advice is not disliked because it is advice, but because so few people know how to give it. Yet there are people who are vain enough to hate it in proportion to its very agreeableness.

The custom of burial in a sitting posture prevails among the inhabitants of Canara and Telinga, in India; as also among some of the Marattas. Bodies belonging to the "Stone Age" have been found buried in this singular posture. Some of the tribes of North America also adopted this mode of burial.

To be idle and to be poor have always been reproaches; and, therefore, every man endeavors with the utmost care to hide his poverty from others, and idleness from himself.

"German Syrup"

G. Gloger, Druggist, Watertown, Wis. This is the opinion of a man who keeps a drug store, sells all medicines, comes in direct contact with the patients and their families, and knows better than anyone else how remedies sell, and what true merit they have. He hears of all the failures and successes, and can therefore judge: "I know of no medicine for Coughs, Sore Throat, or Hoarseness that had done such effective work in my family as Boschee's German Syrup. Last winter a lady called at my store, who was suffering from a very severe cold. She could hardly talk, and I told her about German Syrup and that a few doses would give relief; but she had no confidence in patent medicines. I told her to take a bottle, and if the results were not satisfactory I would make no charge for it. A few days after she called and paid for it, saying that she would never be without it in future as a few doses had given her relief."

Real Estate is the Basis of all Wealth.
AN INVESTMENT THAT WILL NET.
20% to 30%

99 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money. 97 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center; has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now preeminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland. These Advantages Guarantee Constantly Increasing Values in Real Estate.

THE TAWOOD REAL ESTATE COMPANY PORTLAND, OREGON.

Has the best plan for investors yet devised. You never read anything more explicit and simple. It is absolutely safe, and cannot fail to be profitable to all who invest.

CAPITAL $300,000. 6,000 SHARES AT $50 EACH.

SHARES FOR SALE AT PAR VALUE, $50.00 PER SHARE, FULL PAID NON-ASSESSABLE.

We will not sell a share of stock at less than par value ($50 per share), as the Company's capital stock is not inflated or watered, but every dollar of its capital is backed by Solid Real Estate investment.

A FAIR OFFER.

[illegible] own stock, and at any time wish to surrender it, this company will take its own stock at $1.40 on the dollar and pay you in Real Estate at the present [illegible] which the company is selling lots to other parties.

William Ebel, of Northfield, is just now wondering if the claim of himself and brothers to valuable land in Chicago can be established. The land was owned by Charles Ebel, who lived in Chicago from 1815 to 1850. The other heirs are: John Adolph Ebel and Albert Ebel, St. Paul; Henry Ebel, Minneapolis, and August Ebel, West Superior.

Luverne attorneys claim to hold the opinion that the chicken law is inoperative this season. It prescribes a close season from Nov. 1 to Sept. 1, but having been passed in April it is claimed that it does not and cannot take effect, so far as chickens are concerned, until November. The county attorney is said to hold this opinion, and no attempt is being made to prevent the shooting of chickens, which is going on every day. If there is a game warden for this section he has not announced himself.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Wahpeton is to have a flax mill.

Len Bush, a saloonkeeper at Rolla, was given four days' notice to leave the state by the authorities of the town.

An Odell man has invented a self-feeder and band cutter which, if perfected, will do the work of five men. His name is A. A. Booth.

Miller Howard, a young man engaged in harvesting near Oakes was killed by the knives of a self binder upon which he was riding when the horses became frightened and ran away.

M. Wood, a farmer living ten miles north of Michigan City, killed a black bear weighing 400 pounds. He discharged both barrels of his shotgun in the bear's face, then finished the job with an ax.

Members of the state league for the enforcement of the prohibitory law have been in Bismarck several days, quietly taking observations on the manner of dispensing booze here, and caused the arrest of S. J. Swenson and closed his blind pig resort.

Rev. S. N. Griffith, charged with an attempt to outrage a nine-year-old daughter of Newell Morgan, had an ecclesiastical hearing at Larimore before a committee of seven ministers of the M. E. church. He was acquitted.

The Prohibitionists of North Dakota met at Jamestown and organized for the campaign. At the same time Republicans held a meeting, and after organizing a state enforcement league asked the Prohibitionists to abandon the third party movement. The action was unavailing.

The officers made a ten-strike at Bismarck when they raided Swenson's bowling alley and blind pig. The owner had boasted that he would not be caught, but the sheriff's invoice of liquors seized shows about fifteen gallons of whisky, five cases of beer, five gallons of wine and a choice assortment of various cordials.

SOUTHERN MINNESOTA FAIR.

The Opening Day One of Great Confusion.

Rochester, Minn., Special, Sept. 1.—Beautiful weather ushered in the first day of the twelfth annual Southern Minnesota fair. At the grounds as yet all is confusion, owing to an excess of exhibits in all departments over the exhibiting space.

To-morrow will practically be the first day and some fine races are promised. The following is the programme: 10 to 12 a. m., pony races, foot races, dog races and games for children. In the afternoon the two-year-old stake race for trotters, with thirteen entries, purse $425; three-year-old stake race for trotters, nine entries, purse $325; 2:28 class for trotters, purse $7,000. Among the leading attractions is the great Second regiment band, which will not only furnish music for the reunion of the Second regiment Minnesota Volunteers, Thursday, but during the entire fair.

MANY NEW CLAIMANTS.

Mrs. Hopkins-Searles' Poor Relations Will Attempt to Break Her Will.

New York, Sept. 1.—According to the World Edward F. Searles will not be allowed to enjoy Mark Hopkins' millions without a struggle.

Twenty-one new claimants o Mrs. Hopkins-Searles' estate have appeared, and a notice of contest was sent last week to Great Barrington, Mass. Several of the claimants have joined hands with Timothy Hopkins, and this probably induced him to decline recently an offer of $5,000,000 not to oppose the probate of the will. On the contrary, the adopted son of Mrs. Searles will file on Sept. 17, his claims, which will be the opening wedge for one of the most sensational will contests on record.

During the past week Lawyer Russell Wilson of San Francisco, representing Timothy Hopkins, has been in the city consulting with Butler, Stillman & Hubbard, counsel for Mr. Searles. Lawyer Frank Rogers also notified Mr. Searles' lawyers last Thursday of his intention to contest Mrs. Searles' will on the ground of insanity and undue influence on the part of her husband. He represented the Hebbard family, second cousins of Mrs. Searles. He also said he intended joining hands with Lawyer Russell Wilson. It appears that Mrs. Searles had many poor relatives, whom she occasionally assisted. Some received a regular yearly income.

"You are just as dear to me," she is reported to have said one day to William Hebbard, "as the richest of my acquaintances. You will all be remembered handsomely in my will. You are not so numerous that I cannot well afford to make you a large bequest."

Mrs. Searles frequently visited her relatives in New York and Connecticut before her second marriage. Two infirm cousins, Harriet Hebbard and Mrs. Jane Smith used to get an annuity of $300. They were equally shocked with all the other blood relations, who had been assured of something substantial, when they heard Mrs. Searles had overlooked them in her will. The annuity of $300 to Jane Smith and Harriet Hebbard was stopped and nothing was left the other blood relatives.

The contestants have united in two parties. One wing consists of the Hebbards and the other of the Sherwoods, all being either first or second cousins. The Hebbards have secured Lawyer Rogers of Bridgeport, and will co-operate with Timothy Hopkins, but the Sherwoods believe in the merits of their own case.

A BROKEN FLANGE.

Causes a Wreck in Which Four Are Killed and Sixteen Injured.

Evansville, Ind., Sept. 1.—To-day between Tell City and Troy, Ind., a mixed train, in which were twenty passengers, encountered a broken flange. The engine left the track, bumped on the ties for awhile and then took a header down a steep embankment. All the cars piled on it. The passengers were all taken out, four dead and sixteen more or less scalded from escaping steam and otherwise injured. The wreck took fire and burned up completely. Engineer Jake App and his fireman escaped injury by jumping. Conductor Gordon in the coach was badly hurt. The following is a list of the casualties:

The wreck was on the Louisville, New Albany & St. Louis railway. All the injured are in Tell City. Nearly all the passengers were from local points on the road.

A MARKET FOR ALL.

Opening Session of the International Grain Market in Vienna.

Vienna, Sept. 1.—The international grain market for 1891 was opened here today with a large attendance. Herr Haardt, from the department of the chief of the ministry of commerce, in a speech made during the opening ceremonies, dwelt upon the special importance of the present market from the fact that its task or object was to devise means of supplying the shortage of grain existing in the large countries.

The dealings to-day were limited, so there was no spot business done in wheat. Futures were firm. The best barleys sold on the spot at full rates; inferior grades were neglected. Autumn wheat was quoted at 10.67 florins to 10.70 florins; spring wheat was quoted at 10.27 florins. Autumn rye was quoted at 10.38 florins; spring at 10.58 florins. Autumn oats were quoted at 6.27 florins. New maize was quoted at 6.28 florins. Thirty trucks of old maize brought 6.35 florins.

The Interstate Exhibition.

La Crosse, Wis., Special Telegram, Sept. 1.—The interstate fair opened to-day with entries in every department considerably in excess of the splendid exhibition last year. The superintendents of the departments say there are no finer horses, cattle, sheep and swine in America than now on the grounds. The entries of poultry run up above 1,000. There is a fine display of machinery and manufactured goods in the various departments, and the exposition building is crowded to its fullest capacity. Horsemen say the track is the best for a half mile they have ever seen, and there are prospects for very fast time. In a wager race to-day between Palmer's Poco Tempo and Grattan's Michael, the latter won after a hot contest. Best time, 2:31½. The main streets of the city are illuminated by arches and devices in which 3,000 incandescent lights, 1,000 gas jets, and many arc lights are used.

It is a sight worth visiting La Crosse to see.

A Bishop's Silver Anniversary.

Marquette, Mich., Sept. 1.—The silver anniversary of Bishop Vertin has been made the occasion for a grand celebration, which begins to-day. Archbishop Katzer of Milwaukee, Bishops Richter of Grand Rapids, Rademacher of Nashville, and Ulrak, titular bishop of Antininoe, Abbot Lochikar of Minnesota, Monsignor Zininger of Milwaukee; Administrator Kersten of Green Bay; Father Englert, provincial of Franciscans, Cincinnati; Fathers Ramar, Abbelan, Keogh, Fagan, Fairbanks, Hannon and Suley of Milwaukee were among the visitors from outside the diocese.

BALMACEDA BESTED

The Insurgents Occupy Santiago and a Mob Seeks to Kill the President.

Balmaceda's House and Other Building's Burned and Anarchy Reigns Unchecked.

Valparaiso, Chili, Aug. 31.—The Chanaral regiment of the Congressional army took formal possession of Santiago tonight, and practically the last act in the bloody drama of revolution which has torn Chili to pieces for the past seven months is closed.

The capital city was in the hands of a bloodthirsty mob last night, and while it was unable to satisfy its murderous instincts, it did destroy a vast amount of property.

As soon as the news reached Santiago yesterday of the overwhelming defeat of the government troops on the heights of Placilla and the fall of Valparaiso, and the people knew that Balmaceda's power was gone and they had nothing to fear from his wrath, their enmity to his government broke forth.

The cry was raised that the president should be killed, and a mob started for his house. It grew in numbers and fury as it went through the streets, and by the time it reached the executive mansion was ripe for any bloody deed. Short shrift would have been allowed to the president had he been caught. The bloodthirsty fury of the mob was balked.

Then the mob's desire for revenge found vent in the application of the torch. Soon Balmaceda's house was a mass of flames. Before it had been destroyed the mob marched off to the house of Senor Goday, the ex-minister of the interior, and an ardent Balmacedist, and set on fire his house. Then the residences of Balmaceda's mother, Gen. Barbosa, who was killed at the battle of Placilia; Senors McKenna and Eastman, the government newspaper offices, and the houses of several prominent officials were burned to the ground.

The city was panic stricken, business was suspended and people outside of the mob kept close to their houses. The sky was lurid with the light from burning buildings. The police, the fire department and the army were demoralized and made not the semblance of an attempt to maintain order.

Balmacedo, when he heard of the fall of Valparaiso, sent for Gen. Baquedano, commander of the government troops in Santiago, to meet him at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon at Moneda. This Baquedano declined to do, but suggested that the meeting be held in the house of Gen. Valesquez.

A council of war was held at Velasquez's residence, at which President Balmaceda, the generals and other leading Balmacedists were present. The situation was thoroughly canvassed, and it was decided that the surrender of the capital was the only proper course. Baquedano was given charge of the city, and was authorized to arrange the terms of the surrender with the congressionalists. Word was at once sent to Gen. Canto that all the troops in Santiago had declared their adhesion to the congressional party and that Santiago was at his disposal. Senor Don Jorge Montt, who is in charge of affairs in the South, ordered that the Chanaral regiment proceed at once to Santiago, where they are to assist the forces of Gen. Baquedano in keeping order and also to prepare barracks for 2,000 additional troops. Accompanying the troops which went to Santiago to-day was Senor Altimirano, who act for the present as intendente of the capitol.

From those who came in on the special train from Santiago to-day, it was learned that the city is in a terrible state. In addition to the destruction by the mob last night the city is threatened by an eruption of all the desperate characters, robbers and outlaws in the country. Gen. Baquedano has posted the Chanaral regiment in a cordon about the city to prevent robbers and other dangerous people from coming into the capitol. The task is almost hopeless. Gen. Canto and staff with additional troops, left Valparaiso to-night and will reach Santiago early in the morning. A new chief of police for Santiago and a new administrator of the railroad has been appointed.

Comparative order has at last been restored in this city. It took drastic measures to do it. Rioters who were caught in the work were summarily dealt with, and many of them were shot out of hand. But rioting was not stopped until property estimated to be worth $1,800,000 had been destroyed.

Many acts of tyranny have been perpetrated here by government officials since last January, and every war ship in the bay has its quota of refugees. This gave rise to much dissatisfaction on the part of the Congressionalist leaders. The feeling was particularly bitter against the Americans, for Admiral Brown had given asylum to many unpopular officials on board the San Francisco and Baltimore.

Numerous arrests of government official have have been made. The insurgents show a moderate disposition, however, and the leaders say that every man against whom charges are made will have a full and fair hearing before the proper authorities when order is fully restored. I saw Senor Montt and Gen. Canto in company with United States Consul McCreery this afternoon. Montt and Canto say that there will be no election nor will any measure be taken relative to the formation of a new government until the arrival here from Iquique of all the members of the Junta. It is hardly probable, however, that an election will be had for some time, and in the meantime the Junta will be in control.

SENATORIAL RESEARCH.

The Cost of Producing Various Commodities Being Investigated.

Boston, Aug. 31.—For several days Senators Carlisle and Aldrich, with Secretary Durlee, of the sub-committee of the senate finance committee, have been hearing testimony at the Hotel Vendome from leading manufacturers in this vicinity, regarding the cost of producing the various commodities with which they are identified. The shoe industry of Massachusetts has occupied a good share of their attention, as has also the manufacture of woolens. Said Senator Carlisle yesterday:

"There appears to be a belief that we are in some way attempting to gather material simply to show what effect the McKinley bill has had upon values and wages since it went into operation. This is entirely erroneous. Our work comprehends the whole range of tariff legislation, both in this and foreign countries, and we go as far back in our research as practicable, gathering all the facts that manufacture, transportation, wages, etc., comprehend and apply them in the final determination in a way that shall show to us what influence they have had in increasing the value of necessary commodities. We have had before us many eminent economists and have obtained an enormous mass of statistical matter that will have its proper place in our final report.

"With regard to wages, we have an agent at work gathering statistics, and he is making a satisfactory degree of progress. Nothing that has been published or presented to congress bearing upon this subject is of any practical value, as it is lacking in the very information that it purports to give. When our labors are finished we will be prepared to give to the country a mass of data unequaled in value in the consideration of economic questions."

In reply to a question Mr. Carlisle stated that it has been found that the discrepancy between the manufacturer's price and that paid by the consumer was abnormally large in the matter of boots and shoes. The committee will remain in Boston a few days longer and then continue its work in other industrial centers.

PRODUCING RAIN.

A Thorough Test of the Rain-Making Process Promised in Texas.

Midland, Tex., Aug. 31.—The rain-making experiments inaugurated by the government and which have been operating on the Morris ranch, twenty-five miles from this place, are to be pushed to a thorough and final test, regardless of what the operations or results of the Dryrenfurth party have been. R. J. Kleiburg of Corpus Christi, Tex., and ex-Senator Collins of San Diego are here investigating to ascertain what the Dryrenfurth party has done. A reporter called on them, and the following is their statement:

"This thing must not be dropped now, as it is too important. We are here to investigate and to learn, and not to make statements. We realize that the government appropriation for this purpose was small, and probably not enough to carry it very far. We shall wait till after this party makes its final test at El Paso, and if it is not then further demonstrated as an absolute fact we propose, as individuals, backed by our own counties and many very strong financial interests, to make a similar and conclusive test. We realize that it is necessary to remove every doubt before the government can be expected to lend any further assistance, and that is what the individuals we represent propose doing. We shall go direct to Austin, interview Gov. Hogg and seek to further enlist his influence in furtherance of this undertaking, with which he is already deeply interested and favorably impressed."

The gentlemen represent the great King estate and other of the most extensive ranch and land owning concerns in the state. The world may now expect this great theory to be proved a success or failure beyond reasonable doubt.

SHOT IN THE BREAST.

A Jersey Compositor Uses His "Shooting Stick."

Orange, N. J., Aug. 31.—David Brownlee, a compositor on the Orange Journal, shot Cyrus Leeming, a decorator and paperhanger employed by David George, in Mrs. C. H. Moore's boarding house to-day. Brownlee had a daughter seventeen years old in the house with him. The men were each forty-five years old. Both were drinking men, but were sober at the time. Brownlee went to Leeming's room and found him asleep. He drew a revolver and shot him in the breast. The ball passed through the breast bone. Leeming jumped up and said: "Why, old man, what are you doing? You have shot me."

Brownlee replied: "Yes, damn you; you called my daughter a slut, and take that." With this he fired again.

The Secret of Fine Pastry.

Is wholly in using Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. The only pure Cream Tarter Powder sold on the market Other brands contain either ammonia, alum or some other adulterant. Ammonia or alum powders dry out, make the dough too porous, leaving a bitter taste, etc.

No agency has assisted so much toward perfection in cookery as Price's Cream Baking Powder. Its ingredients are simple and so blended as to exist in exact chemical proportions, so after use there is never any excess of either left in the food. Hence there can be no impurities whatever left in the finished food. No bitter taste, no taint of ammonia, but food raised with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder partakes of the natural sweet flavor of the flour and keeps moist and fresh for days. This powder possesses qualities peculiar to it alone. No other makes such delicious pastry. No other contains the white of eggs.

Crookston Aug. 31.— Six prisoners made their escape from the Polk county jail in this city Sunday night. They sawed off the steel clasp which fastened their cell door, got into the corridor, where they had previously sawed out a section in the floor, and escaped, Four of the prisoners were awaiting trial for various offences. and the other two were serving short sentances. The sheriff with a posse is now scouring the country in search for them.—Minneapolis Journal.

New York Aug, 31. Col. J, B. Montgomery of Oregon has just returned from Germany and is now at the Fifth Avenue hotel. He was asked about the crop failure in Europe and said:

The crop failure in Europe is genera and distress is sure to follow. I was all over Germany and saw that the rain had ruined the wheat and rye. In Germany there will be a shortage in the grain crops of 33 per cent or just 100,000,000 bushels. The empire generally produces 240,000,000 bushels of rye and 80,000,000 bushels of wheat annually. With the great falling off mentioned the people will have to look to this country for relief Russia is short and can't supply Germany, and France is not much better off. The potato crop in continental Europe has been more or less a failure and the people look with longing eyes toward America. I am not a speculator in grain but I predict that by Christmas wheat in this country will sell at $1.50 per bushel owing to the great demand in Europe.—Pioneer Press.

We are informed that some of our farmer friends are laboring under the false impression that our new game law allows the owner of land to shoot all hunting dogs found on their land, when posted. Now this impression is dangerously wrong. The new law allows the shooting of dogs only, when found hunting deer, elk and moose, but not when hunting winged game. A farmer has no more right to shoot a bird dog than he has to shoot the hunter himself; and also the hunter has as much right to defend the life of his dog as his own life. We hope no one will be foolish enough to shoot another man's hunting dog, for it would certainly bring trouble.—Battle Lake review.

In speaking of the effect the rye shortage will have upon wheat values Bradstreets makes the following very pertinent remarks.

"While it is impossible to wholly supply this deficiency with rye the production of wheat and corn in this country is relied upon to supply the demand. wheat is too dear a product for the great mass of the European population, and though they have a dislike for American corn, necessity will force its use. With the exception of Great Britain and Ireland its use in Europe has hitherto been confined mainly to the feeding of cattle. As a food product it is cheaper and just as serviceable as rye and it is believed that they will begin to use it just as redily as our foreign population has done. If its consumption by the common people can once be established, increased exportation is assured."

Minneapolis Journal: The facination that surrounds a country hitherto unexplored exerts itself as strongly over the United States engineer as over any other mortal, at least so says Engineer Jackson, of the recently returned Red Lake expidition. Fanciful writers have painted weird pictures of unknown lands, and though, as Mr. Jackson says, he didn't expect to meet Rudyard Kipling's phantom rickshaw, or a race of hot-potters after Rider Haggard's idea, in the wilds of Minnesota, yet he did feel the curious sensations that befall explorers of a country hitherto trodden only by savages. The object of the expidition as set forth in the Journal a few days ago was to discover whether or not Red Lake could be made available as a reservoir for supplying the Red River of the North in such a manner as to maintain the latter at a navigable depth throughout the open season. There seems to be no doubt from conversations with the returned explorers that the plan is practicable, and, in fact, easy of accomplishment. Civil Engineer F. L, Douglas, of Minneapolis and W. F. Hunt, of St. Paul; were also of the party. Red Lake—that is the southern half of it and the only portion explored so far—is 27 miles wide from the south shore to the narrows and 33 miles long. It has six large rivers feeding it in the east, south and west, with the outlet to the Red River of the North on the western shore a stream 40 feet wide and an average of 7 feet depth, known as the Red Lake River. At this point the work of the government will be concentrated.

The feeders referred to are most of them good-sized rivers. On the north east side is Battle River, 150 feet wide and 10 feet deep on an average, On the southeast is Black Duck river the largest of them all, 200 feet wide, and with an average depth of 20 feet. A tour up this river from its mouth demonstrated that a uniform depth of 20 feet was maintained for six miles from its mouth and thence for an unknown distance 15 feet. Milk Creek on the south shore is 20 feet wide and at its mouth is the Chippewa Indian agency in charge of Agent Reed. This gentleman has very little taste for exploration and is surprisingly ignorant of the country thereabouts, He goes on an occasional duck hunting expedition up the sloughs but was unable to give the explorers any very valuable pointers on the country. Sandy river on the southwest, is about 40 feet wide and 7 feet average debth. Ten miles to the north directly in the west of the lake, is the Red Lake river which traverses the marshy country between the lake and the Red river. The entire west shore as far as the eye can reach is one vast marsh teeming with all sorts of water fowl, and covered with rank slough grass growing to the height of 10 feet, At the northern extremity are the narrows, an isthmus 100 feet wide connecting the lower lake with the upper. The latter has only been explored by Indians so far as any record of its proportions is concerned. On the northwest of it is the Tamarac river, which the Indians describe as larger than any of the lower lake tributaries. On the east side of the isthmus is an Indian village of about 200 Chippewas whose sole occupation is moose and deer hunting. They received the exploring party kindly and gave valuable information.

Engineer Jackson thinks the solution of the reservoir problem will be in the dredging of Red Lake river to such a depth as to increase the flow into the Red river. This he says can be done without danger of lowering the lake level to any appreciable extent, for the reason that its sources of supply are many and adequate to furnish material for a much greater outlet. It is pointed out that no course has as yet been decided on but the one referred to is regarded as the one most practicable the effect of improvements such as are proposed in the Red river country will good. Most of the farmers in the country it traverses, ship their grain by river in barges. It is to admit of the passage of boats of greater capacity for the carrying trade that the improvement is contemplated. Mr. Jackson cannot at present furnish an estimate of the cost of dredging Red Lake river the required depth but from the very nature of the stream and the work proposed to be done in it, the expense cannot be great.

There is heavy pine and tamarac timber in the northeast and south of the lake, It is just as wild today except for the marks of Indian habitation as it was when Columbus set foot on the coast and thanked his stars for getting ashore somewhere. An interesting point on the east shore of the lake is the mouth of Battle river which is thus named from the fact that there the Chippewas and the Sioux fought their last battle. The Indian mounds on the river banks proclaim that many a dusky hero has found his last resting place here by the Red Lake of the North.

A well posted man sizes up the situation like this: "It is my opinion that the financial depression reached its lowest notch last year and that we are now on the beginning of a new prosperity never equaled in the history of the Northwest. From one end of the state to the other come the reports of big crops, and the present outlook is that we will receive at least a dollar a bushel for wheat. This with the severe lesson in economy the people have had the last three years, means a great deal. They are really in a position to get along as they never would had it not been for the seemingly disastrous crop failures. This year's magnificent crop will not only infuse new life and hope into those who are already in the country, but will be the means of bringing large numbers of new settlers to the Northwest."—Ex.

COURT YOUR WIFE.

Oh, middle aged man, I've a word with you,
As you sit in your office this morn;
Has the worry of life, with its folly and strife,
Pierced your heart like a festering thorn?
Does the touch of your gold feel too clammy and cold,
Are you weary of flattery's scorn?

Alas, for the days when the passions of youth
Burn low in the desolate heart!
When the laughter and tears of our innocent years
Never more from the sympathies start,
And the hideous mien of indulgence is seen
'Neath the flattering mantle of art!

Perhaps you've tried friendship, and only have found
Deception and selfishness rife;
Perhaps you have poured to the needy your hoard,
To be pricked by ingratitude's knife;
And perhaps you have been through the whole round of sin—
Did you ever try courting you wife?

No! Then take my advice and I think you will find
'Tis a pleasure as charming as new,
Follow memory's track till at last you are back
To the days when you swore to be true—
Yes, dream more and more till she seems as of yore
To be watching and sighing for you.

And when you go home to-night buy a bouquet
Of the flowers she used to admire.
Put them into her hand when before her you stand,
With a lover like kiss of desire.
And oh! watch her eyes when they ope with surprise,
And flame up from a smoldering fire!

Then all the long evening be tender and kind,
Hover near her with eager delight:
Call her "Darling" and "Sweet," the old titles repeat
Till her face is with happiness bright—
Try it, world wearied man, 'tis an excellent plan,
Go a-courting your dear wife to-night!

Sharks' Teeth as Weapons.

The natives on some of the Pacific islands, being provided neither with metals nor any stone harder than the coral rocks, of which the atolls they inhabit are composed, would seem badly off, indeed, for material of which to make tools or weapons were it not that their very necessity has bred an invention no less ingenious than curious and effective. This is nothing less than the use of sharks' teeth to give a cutting edge to their wooden knives and swords. The mouth of the shark contains 300 teeth, arranged in five rows, all closely lying upon each other, except the outer row, and so constructed that as one tooth is broken or lost another takes its place. The teeth are not only pointed and keen edged, but are finely and regularly serrated, so that the cutting power is greatly increased. Indeed, so great a faculty have these teeth for wounding that the implements and weapons upon which they are used have to be handled with great care. The Kingmill islanders make many strange articles of sharks' teeth.—Frank Leslie's Newspaper.

The Science of Food Supply.

Every product is coincident with a want and its distribution opportune. So certain is the average man of this that he eats his pork without any care as to the supply of hogs, and spreads his butter with no reflection on a possible mortality among Iowa cows, and yet a simple change of crops in Russia will starve the poor of London, and a decrease in the pig product of Illinois leaves a Briton without his bacon. In days to come, when populations are dense and the areas of available land limited, and the world has a mouth for every loaf, the science of food supply will be of more gravity than any other in the range of economics.—Economist.

Teaching the Art of Entertaining.

Thoughtfulness of others is the chief mark of good breeding, and nowhere does it show plainer than in the hostess Some of the schools in this country have adopted a course which teaches girls to enact the part of the hostess. One of the exercises requires the students to enter the room with ease and to be received by the hostess, who in turn presents them to the guest at her side. They are taught to walk, sit, stand, stoop, bow, to move with ease, precision, flexibility and the grace that is the natural result of proper physical training.—Lewiston Journal.

Let the Best Man Win.

Thurlow, when attorney general, was traveling from London to York with "a very saintly, good man," who undertook to while away the time by reading aloud "Paradise Lost." The good man began to read out his Milton. Presently he came to the passage where Satan exclaims, "Better to reign in hell than serve in heaven." Upon which Thurlow exclaimed, "A fine fellow, and I hope he may win."—Macmillan's Magazine.

Louis XVIII, complimenting Talleyrand one day upon his abilities, asked him how he had contrived first to overturn the Directory, and finally Bonaparte. The wily diplomat replied, with charming simplicity: "Really, sire, I have had nothing to do with this. There is something inexplicable about me which brings ill luck on the governments that neglect me."

Amber costs from $5 to $50 per pound, according to the size of the pieces. Pieces of amber large enough to make a 1 1-2 inch mouthpiece cost $7 a pound. After that every eighth of an inch counts in price. A piece of 10 or 12 inches long is rare and expensive.

Sir Walter Scott was 34 when he made his first draft of "Waverley," and was 44 when he rewrote and published it. Nearly every one of those tales which conferred immortality upon him was composed after he had reached the age of 46.

The skylark sometimes sings during winter, and there is a Scottish proverb which runs to the effect that if it be heard before Candlemas there will be bad weather after that period.

RAISING GEESE FOR MARKET.

They Are Easily Brought Up, and Fattening Them Is No Work at All.

The thousands of geese which arrive in this city between Nov. 1 and Feb. 1 attract little attention, as but few of them are seen in the markets, and their many excellent qualities are little known. The geese come from different points along the Chesapeake bay and its tributaries, and they weigh from twelve to twenty-four pounds each, and bring from $1.25 to $2.25. Kent island is a famous place for raising geese. They are shipped here usually in large crates, but when put out on the wharf many of them have their legs doubled over their backs and secured, by which means they are rendered helpless and possible goose chases are prevented.

Before the goose is brought to market its rearing is simple. In fact, geese are the easiest poultry to raise when the surroundings are favorable. In early February the geese begin laying. They deposit seven or eight eggs, but will lay several lots of eggs if the first are removed when laid. They are careful of their young, which grow fast and do not require more than a week or two of feeding before they are ready to hustle. Grass fields around the water shores are their delight, and they will grow and thrive while grazing like cattle. If they get into a wheat field while the wheat is green they play havoc.

In August, September and October they are picked, an ordinary goose yielding about two pounds of feathers, which are worth fifty cents per pound. Before the universal use of metallic pens goose quills brought quite a profit to poultry raisers. About four weeks prior to the time for shipping the geese they are put up and fattened on corn. In the fattening process the goose is boss. The avidity with which it accomplishes the task set is wonderful. When the geese reach market they are surprisingly heavy, and look with disdain on other fowl which are not so fat.

The largest buyers of geese are citizens of the Jewish faith. After making a purchase they put the goose in a pen and give it unlimited nutritious food. Then the goose is put in a pen that is too small to allow any other motion than that absolutely necessary for seizing and swallowing the food. At this stage men who make a profession of goose fattening play a little joke on the goose, that is, they put it through a stuffing process.

The goose is taken by the head, its mouth forced open, its throat moistened and the food stuffed in. The goose is then left to convert the food into fat. The goose which is intended for a Jewish family dies an aristocratic death. The owner must not kill it, as that is the function of some one of the congregation empowered by the rabbi. —Baltimore Sun.

Always Paid Five Dollars for a Shave.

"I have seen some pretty high rollers in my time," said Manager Bennett, of the Arlington, "but the late President Barrios was easily the prince of all that class. When he stopped with us he sent down a draft one day by his secretary that called for $10,000, and he wanted the money instantly. I suggested going to a bank, but the president didn't relish any such formality. However, I took his secretary and got it, explaining to the latter that few hotels kept that much money lying about in the till. He said nothing to his chief about our visit to the bank. Whenever a barber went to the president's room to exercise his art he was presented with a $5 gold piece. On leaving Gen. Barrios distributed among the servants who had waited on him about $300. I fear we shall not look upon his like again."—Washington Post.

The Atlantic Laid Bare.

Figuratively speaking, the bed of the Atlantic ocean has at last been laid bare. English, American, German and French sounding expeditions have mapped every section of the ooze that lies at the bottom of the great watery waste. According to these maps and diagrams the Atlantic is a huge water trough of varying depths, extending from pole to pole. Here and there rocky peaks, like that of Teneriffe, or huge mountains of sand, like the bank of Newfoundland, reach up to or beyond the surface. Between Ireland and Newfoundland there exists a remarkable submarine plain, always referred to as "the telegraphic plateau," which is evidently a continuation of the great watershed, which between latitudes 40 and 50 degs. north surrounds the earth and divides the waters flowing south from those flowing north. —St. Louis Republic.

The Member Sees Hades.

An Amherst secret society rigs up a very realistic hades for the entertainment of a candidate, and if his nerves are not pretty strong his hair is apt to rise. His satanic majesty is remarkably true to tradition, the society having gone to the expense of having a costume of the brightest red, including a cloven hoof and a well developed forked tail. In one society at Union college the neophyte is led through a small brook, but as he is allowed to change his shoes after the ceremony it doesn't hurt him any. At one of the large colleges not many years ago the guides lost their way, walked the freshman off a precipice, and he was killed by the fall.—New York Star.

Schliemann was 34 years old before he knew a word of Greek, and it was not until he was 41 that he began the study of archæology, in which he was destined to achieve so much distinction.

A Cure for Ague.

No disease has given rise to a more numerous and curious catalogue of charms than the ague. A common practice was to run nine times through a circle formed by a brier that grew in that direction. This was no doubt a Druidical ceremony, nine being the mystic number of high antiquity. A spider given, unknown, to the patient was a favorite remedy with some persons.—London Tit-Bits.

Opals Are Lucky Now.

Two men went into a State street jewelry house the other day. One of them pointed to a stone in a tray and said, "There is an opal; please let me see it," and the salesman handed it out. The second man was horrified.

"The superstition about misfortune or bad luck lurking somewhere in this beautiful stone," said the salesman, "has well nigh vanished. The fact is there is a notion now extant that the opal is a talisman. So you see there is nothing in this idea of stones being one thing or another so far as good luck or bad is concerned. If there had been anything in it the opal would be as unlucky now as it was in the beginning."

"What you say may be true," said the man who had asked to see the stone. "I have no superstition about the opal, and never had any. But I know a brother merchant of yours, not far from here, one of the largest dealers in the city, who would not carry an opal in stock. If a customer wants one he will order it, but he won't have one in his house on sale. And yet he is a sensible and successful man in business."—Chicago Tribune.

A Writer's Methods.

Every writer would seem to owe it not only to himself, but also to his profession, to conceal from the knowledge of the public the methods of literary composition; the exposition simply belittles the work and cheapens the workers. It is folly to suppose that the public can be hoodwinked, but it is true that the public can be handled to better purposes when it is in a condition of suspense. Our reverence for the conjurer is dissipated when, for a small extra fee, he explains the exceeding simplicity of the trick which has imposed upon our senses, and we can have precious little regard for any artisan or artist who, however deft he may be, gives the snap away either to confound folk with their own credulity or to put a few paltry pence into his own pocket. The practice is alike opposed to the first principles of business, of honor and of delicacy.—Chicago News.

An Indian Delicacy.

The choicest delicacy known to the Indian epicure is the tongue of the elk, which is getting to be exceedingly rare. A gentleman who had been hunting quite far north returned during the dancing season of the Indians. He brought with him an elk's tongue to the agency. It was stolen in a very short time. During the trance of one of the Indians, after long hours of dancing, the Messiah brought him an elk's tongue, so he said. The Indians never doubted the Messiah afterward.—Chicago Herald.

A LUCKY CATCH.

The Trout Caught the Diamond and the Angler the Fish.

This is the way the latest fish story is told hereabouts: Joseph S. Frey, saloon-keeper on South Third street, and William Bercaw were trout fishing up in Monroe county on Saturday. While forcing his way through a thick clump of bushes overhanging the stream Bercaw saw a good-sized trout dart out from a bank of the creek and pass directly beneath him. Working his way to a secluded nook a few feet above, the anxious angler cast his fly with such skill that in a few seconds he caught and safely landed a speckled beauty about 10 inches in length. He made a second effort but could get no more trout there. Well, the fishermen continued on their way until their sport had ended and they seated themselves to clean their fish, of which, of course, they had a fine lot. On opening one of the trout the fish was found to contain a diamond shirt stud. This caused Bercaw to look for his diamond, when it was found to be missing. Then it flashed to the fisherman's mind how fortunate he had been that in passing through the brush his diamond had been forced from his shirt front; the trout he had seen dart in front of him had swallowed the jewel, and then he had succeeded in capturing the fish. To a reporter of the Express, who inquired of Mr. Bercaw concerning the truthfulness of the story, the latter declared it to be a fact in every particular.—Easton Express.

"Right about face!" as the man said when he asked his friend to publish a treatise on physiognomy.

It is a great pleasure to watch the self binders cutting down the golden grain, an I watch the smile on the happy farmer's face as he thinks of all the good he can do with the money he derives from this year's crop. Although the crop is the best we ever had in Towner county, not a kernel will be purposely wasted. And this is proper for it is by saving we make, and if a farmer can save by shipping his grain he would be very foolish if he did not. If he has 5,000 bushels of wheat to sell and saves five cents a bushel by shipping it, it would make him $250. We know of farmers that shipped their grain last year and got 20 cents a bushel more than they could have got here. Last year we shipped to Woodward & Company, of Minneapolis, and every time got good prompt returns.

Happiness depends upon the prudent constitution of the habits.

THE SHEPHERD'S LAMENT.

As the song of the lark
In the bright summer morn,
When the dew's on the heather,
And the bloom's on the thorn—
My heart it was lightsome
And merry with glee,
For dearer than life
Was young Jeannie to me.

The sun it still shines
In the long summer days,
And the daisies still bloom
On the green sunny braes;
But the sun shines coldly
On meadow and lea,
And though flowers still bloom
They bloom not for me.

For Jeannie now sleeps
With the turf o'er her breast,
In the churchyard old
They have laid her to rest;
And the green grass grows,
And the willow is weeping,
O'er the lone, shady spot
Where Jeannie is sleeping.

—Argonaut.

A STORMY NIGHT.

Quiberon is a small French fishing town in the department of Morbihan, at the extremity of a long, slender peninsula Southwest of Vannes. As I wandered along the rocky shore far beyond the outskirts of the village a storm burst upon me with such fury that I hastily sought shelter in the nearest fisherman's cottage. The fisherman's family made me welcome, and as the night was coming on begged me to stay with them until morning.

I saw their faces turn pale at the blackness of the gathering clouds and the loud roaring of wind and waves. Pierre, the father, had gone out as usual that afternoon in his little fishing boat, taking with him his youngest son, a lad of fifteen. They had not yet returned, and it was now nearly 9 o'clock. I tried to cheer them as we sat watching and waiting, but the hours passed by and still the fisherman and his son did not come. The raging of the wind over the barren peninsula seemed to increase with each fresh blast that tore its way out upon the open sea. The crashing of the waves upon the beach was awful to hear, and the dreary darkness and gloom terrible to behold. The longer my companions listened to the storm and the oftener they looked out at it the fainter grew their hopes for the safety of Pierre and Francois. The scene in the cottage grew impressive even in its simplicity. On one side of the great, ragged, black fireplace crouched two little girls, the younger half asleep with her head in her sister's lap. These were the daughters of the fisherman, and opposite to them sat their eldest brother, Victor. His right arm was bandaged and supported by a sling hung from the shoulder. Just to the left of the fireplace was a truckle-bed. On this lay a very old man whom they called "grandfather." His haggard face was covered with deep wrinkles; his long white hair flowed over the coarse lump of sacking which served him for a pillow, and his eyes deeply set and piercing, wandered incessantly from person to person; and from object to object, in all parts of the room.

The people and the articles of furniture in the cottage were strangely and wildly lighted up by the blaze of the fire and by the still brighter glare of a resin torch stuck in a block of wood in the chimney corner. The red and yellow light played full upon the weird face of the old man as he lay opposite it, glancing restlessly toward the young man's seat. Great gloomy shadows rose and fell, grew and lessened in bulk about the walls like visions of darkness, animated by a supernatural specter life, while the dense obscurity outside, spreading before the uncurtained windows, seemed as a wall of solid darkness.

At last the child by the fire broke the oppressive silence. "It is time to change the bandages on your arm, Victor," she said, in a voice just below a whisper.

The old man started uneasily at the sound, and his harsh, hollow voice mingled with the last soft tones of the young girl. "Do you hear them, Victor? Listen! The terrible storm spirits are abroad and they tell me they are dead! Both dead! I hear the waves saying: 'Drowned! Drowned! Both drowned!'"

"Hush, grandfather," the youth replied, in a voice trembling with dread. "There may yet be hope, for God and the Blessed Virgin will surely protect them."

"Silence!" exclaimed the voice from the bed in such harsh tones that we all started in our seats. "Don't you hear the wail of the dying men, Victor? Their cries sound out above the sea's wailing! I hear the devil's psalm-singing roaring louder than the storm wind! Be silent and listen! Alas! Pierre drowned! Francois drowned! Hark!"

A terrific blast of wind burst over the house as he spoke, shaking it to its center, overpowering all other sounds, even the deafening crash of the waves. The slumbering child awoke with a scream of fear. The girl kneeling before her brother, binding the fresh bandages on his wounded arm, paused in her task, trembling from head to foot. The youth did not heed her, but was trying to quiet the fears of his young sisters, kissing them and saying: "Do not be afraid, nothing shall harm you. It is but the wind that we hear."

Suddenly one of the girls cried out in affright: "Oh, Brother Victor, look at grandfather!" The old man had raised himself into a sitting posture, his eyes were dilated and his whole face rigid with terror, while his hands were stretched out convulsively toward his grandson. "Look! Look!" he screamed. "The spirits who dig the graves of the drowned are out on the sea. They are digging deep, deep into the waves. At the bottom I see the poor, pale faces of Pierre and little Francois."

The young man turned to the children saying: "Grandfather is very ill to-night. You had better go into the bedroom and leave me alone to watch by him." They obeyed at once, crossed themselves before the image of the Virgin, kissed their brother, bade me "good-night" and softly entered the little room on the other side of the partition.

We still sat and watched together. I could utter no word of comfort, for I knew the fate of the two out on the storm-tossed sea admitted no longer of a hope. The youth knew it, too, as he listened to the dashing waves and thought with superstitious awe of his grandfather's words. The old man lay still now, as if sleeping, and his face looked so ghastly in the flickering light that it might have been the face of death. Very dreary was the moaning of the night storm, very sad the vigil we were keeping.

Again the old man awoke, trembling and shivering. "Victor, do you hear the slow dripping of the water on the floor at the foot of my bed?"

"I hear nothing, grandfather, but the crackling of the fire and the roaring of the wind outside."

"Drip—drip—drip! Faster and faster! Take the torch, Victor! Look with all your eyes down on the floor there. Is the place wet or dry? Does the rain of heaven come with its warning, also?"

Victor took the torch with trembling fingers and knelt down on the floor to examine it closely. He started back as he saw that it was quite dry; the torch dropped upon the hearth; he fell on his knees before the statue of the Virgin and hid his face.

"I hear it still," the old man said. "It tells me my weary time in the world is over at last."

Victor shuddered at these words but in spite of the storm, the darkness and the distance, he thought not for a moment of neglecting—the duty that had been taught him from childhood—the duty of summoning the priest to the bedside of the dying man. As he began to pull on his coat, the old man cried out: "Stop, Victor, you must not leave me! I command you to stay by me."

"But, grandfather, the priest—your confession. Would you die without the holy comforts of the church?"

"I shall not need a priest before morning my son. My life will last until daybreak. You shall not leave me!"

The clock was already striking 4, and the storm had begun to lull at last. Suddenly the sound of footsteps was heard outside the door. It opened, and a man appeared on the threshold, pausing for a moment in the dim, uncertain light.

Victor gazed at him with starting eyes; then, springing to his feet, he gave a loud shout of joy: "Father! Father! Have the waves given back the dead to us?"

It was the fisherman Pierre himself, dripping wet, but uninjured. In his arms he carried the almost insensible form of little Francois. The glad cry awakened the children, and the old man started up in his bed, and with streaming eyes stretched out his arms toward the little shrine by the fireplace, murmuring prayers of thanksgiving to the virgin. Victor quickly took the boy from his father's arms and laid him where he could get the full warmth of the fire. He was simply numbed and chilled by the wind and waves soon reviving and eagerly telling of the storm that had again and again nearly swamped their little boat. "We gave ourselves up as lost," the fisherman said, "and escaped after all only by a miracle."

It was a happy group that gathered around the table, which the youth had quickly prepared for the hungry father and brother. They placed a chair for me, with apologies that they had nothing better to offer me than black bread, smoked herring and coffee. I ate with such a relish as made that breakfast the one of all my life the most enjoyable. When I bade them "Good-by!" the old man was chatting quite cheerfully from his bed, with no more thought of priest or confession. The last glimpse through the open door, showed me the little girls, one in her father's lap, his hand resting on her curly head; the other with chair drawn close to that of the lad's who had escaped the cruel waves and storm, her arm clasping him around the waist. So I left them.—Russell L. Osborne.

THE WOUNDED SPARROW.

The Bird's Sympathy for Each Other, and the Kindness of a Family.

Two families in adjoining houses in the upper part of Brooklyn were recently treated to a little drama in bird life, says the New York Sun. Four sparrows had built their nests under the eaves, and when it came time for the young to go out into the world one was unable to fly. It hopped about on the grass of one of the yards, and several times came near being the prey of the neighboring cats. One of the neighbors, a kindly old lady, took compassion upon it, and hung it in a cage on the clothes-line. The parent birds soon discovered the new abode, and the rest of the day flew back and forth with dainty bits for their nestling, which they fed to it between the wires. At night the cage was taken in, and more than one puss cast longing eyes at the tempting morsel and kept prowling about, much to the distress of the old birds. The old lady spent the greater part of the morning driving the intruders out of the garden. In an evil moment, however, a large tiger-skinned cat gave one spring, and, bringing the cage to the ground, pulled the little bird out between the wires with his claws, and was over the fence with it in his mouth before any one could interfere. At the approach of the cat the father and mother had flown away, but they now came flying back. They hovered about the empty cage for a while and then disappeared. In a few moments they returned, perching on the clothes line. To the astonishment of the spectators they were followed by as many as twenty-five or thirty others. They flew about the cage and then to the mother bird, touching her beak with theirs, expressing their sympathy in the most marked manner. A few days later another young bird was found in the grass unable to fly, and the finders, taking warning by the misfortune of its brother, shut it in the cellar-way under the bars, where the old birds could fly in and out to feed it, and where it could still be safe from harm. When it was strong enough it was taken up into the garden, and it flew away.

New Stamps for Russia.

A new kind of stamps will soon be introduced in the postal telegraph service of Russia with a view to securing the inviolability of the privacy of letters. The new stamp is printed on very thin paper, and cannot be used again if it is once put upon a letter. When used wet and taken off the envelope it leaves an indelible impression upon the spot where it was attached, so that if a new stamp is put upon the same spot the impression of the first stamp can be seen through it.

HE COWED THE AUDIENCE.

An Actor Who Was Hissed Removes His Mask and Cries for Revenge.

'Tis seldom that an actor is hissed, but recently the patience of an Albany audience gave way, and the soul-stirring efforts of two mediocre actors not long since received well-merited hisses, according to the Argus of that city. For a moment the artists were dumb, then one of them, advancing to the footlights, said in tremulous tones: "Friends, I'm sorry. We've done the best we could to amuse you. We've thrown ourselves about the stage and worked hard, and is this the return we get?" He stopped for a moment. Then his anger and resentment overmastered him. "This is the first time," said he, in a ringing tone, "that the American Macks have ever been hissed. I'm sorry that you show such little courtesy to a fellow man, but if there is any one among you," he cried, tearing off the beard and wig, revealing the close cropped head and square jaws of a prize fighter, "who wishes to back up what he did let him step up here."

The nerve of the man captured the audience. Those who had hissed him now cheered and applauded. They admired the pluck of the man. The applause emboldened him, and as he threw aside his coat he called again for any person in the audience to meet him, but he must have a parting shot, and as he turned to leave the stage he yelled: "If any of you want to see me after the performance is over you will find me at the entrance!" But no one saw him. His brutality captured more applause than his acting.

AMMONIA OR ALUM

Baking Powders,

HOW TO DETECT THEM.

Ammonia and alum are the most common adulterants used in the manufacture of baking powders. The Government report shows that a large percentage of the baking powders on the market contain either one or the other or both these pernicious drugs. Ammonia particularly is in very general use.

This wholesale use in an article of daily food, of one of the most injurious poisons is simply criminal. Slow ammonia poisoning produces diseases of the stomach and is particularly injurious to the complexion. The presence of ammonia in a baking powder, however can easily be detected.

TO DETECT AMMONIA.

Mix one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder with one teaspoonful of water in a tin cup; boil thoroughly for a few moments stir to prevent burning and if ammonia is present you can smell it in the rising steam, or place a can of the suspected powder top down on a hot stove for a minute or two then take off the cover and smell.

TO DETECT ALUM.

Alum powder can be tested by putting a couple of teaspoonfuls of the powder in a glass of cold water. If no effervescence that is bubbling or simmering, takes place, condemn the goods and return them at once.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from alum, ammonia, or any other adulterant.

Fruits in Summer.

Contrary to the popular notion, the free use of good, ripe fruit in summer does not tend to give rise to bowel trouble. It really tends to prevent it. Fruits when rightly indulged, are easy of digestion; they promote the health of the organs which dispose of them, and keep the intestinal canal free and open. Of course unripe or spoiled fruits are a menace, and liable to excite summer complaint; but beyond a doubt, this is far the most often caused by milk and meats that have undergone poisonous changes.

The fact is universally recognized that flesh of all kinds decomposes very rapidly on keeping in hot weather. It cannot be as well known that the same kinds of food also decompose more quickly within the body during that season than they do in cold weather. The poison which results from decomposition acts powerfully, both as an emetic and a purgative; in a word, it causes severe cholera morbus. Fortunately, the liver is able to destroy some of the poison. There is however, a limit to such power; and if too much enters or is generated with the system, the liver cannot turn back, but some passes into the general circulation, where it does serious mischief. To forego meats entirely, and live upon fruits, vegetables and farinaceous foods, is the wisest and safest plan to follow during the hot season.—Boston Journal of Health.

A Would-Be Joker Squelched.

Been a deacon in a church for fifteen years!" echoed the passenger in the check suit. "That's a long time. I dare say you have passed the contribution basket through the congregation a great many times."

"And I suppose—ha!—ha!—you have found a great many—eh!—what's this?"

The deacon, with an intensely weary look on his face, had drawn from his pocket and was holding out for inspection of the man in the check suit a time-stained card, on which was printed in large letters the following inscription:

"Never found in the contribution-box a button of any sort or kind in my life."—Star Sayings.

Confederate Navy Buttons.

The buttons adopted by the confederate navy have been very highly prized in the south since the war as relics, and have, where they could be obtained, been used as vest and cuff buttons. Owing to their scarcity they have been in very active demand, but they now seem destined to become a drug on the market, as a resident of Norfolk, W. Va., has received a letter from the firm in London which made them during the war, stating that they still have the dies and can furnish the buttons in any number.

FAMOUS FOR AN HOUR.

A Case of Mistaken Identity Makes a Man Famous.

It is not often that a nonentity is mistaken for a notability for several days. Yet that is what happened quite recently at a small watering place in upper Austria. All of a sudden the town was convulsed with the delightful intelligence that Girardi, the famous Viennese comedian, was in its midst. A charity concert was in process of organization, and forthwith a deputation waited on the great man to solicit his assistance. It was graciously accorded and the deputies withdrew in high feather, one of them remarking how strange it was that an actor should have so fine a beard. "Why, don't you know," replied an omniscient colleague, "that actors always let their beards grow in the holidays?" On the eventful night the concert room was packed to suffocation and a vigorous round of applause greeted the appearance of the famous actor. What followed may best be described in the words of the Vienna News: "Instead of the excruciating funny song expected by the public Herr Girardi began a sentimental ditty in a very hoarse tone of voice. This rather astonished the audience at first, but they rapidly came to the conclusion that it must be a first-rate imitation of some opera singer. The object of the mimicry they did not know but they roared with laughter all the same." Girardi was encored and sang a romantic Italian aria, and once more the audience was convulsed at the subtelty of the imitation. Next morning it happened that the official visitors' list was published, from a perusal of which it appeared that, barring a certain Samuel Girardi, described as "merchant," nobody of that name was stopping in the town. The actor's name being Alexander, the extent of the blunder was soon apparent.—London Globe.

THE BUTCHER OF PALMYRA.

Why That Title Was Given to the Late Gen. McNeil.

Gen. John McNeil, who dropped dead in St. Louis a few days ago, was known as the "Butcher of Palmyra," a name given him for his slaughter of prisoners at Palmyra, Mo., in 1862. He was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, in 1814, learned the hatter's trade in Boston, was in business in New York, and came West to St. Louis. At the breaking out of the war he responded to the call for troops, and was elected colonel of a regiment of the reserve corps.

In 1862 he was placed in command of a cavalry regiment and ordered to Northeast Missouri to operate against Sterling Price. In October, 1862, Andrew Alsman was taken prisoner and carried off by a band of guerillas. Col. McNeil arrested ten of the most important people of Palmyra, and without a trial of any kind ordered them shot to death. One of these victims was a lad about 17 years old, and all of them were non-combatants. The stain of this atrocity clung to him all his life, though he claimed to be acting under orders from Gen. Hallock and Gen. Schofield.

When news of this bloody affair reached Richmond, ten Federal colonels were ordered held as hostages, and a demand was made on the United States for the surrender to the Confederacy of McNeil to be tried for inhuman warfare. He was never given up and the colonels were released. McNeil served through the war and fought with distinction, but was always under the cloud of the Palmyra butchery.

Since the war McNeil has been in politics, but never elected to any office, though often a candidate. He has held many appointive offices, however.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Chinese Bone-Setter.

An American mining engineer in China writes to the New York Sun an interesting and curious description of a Chinese bone-setter. A man had fractured his leg, and insisted on being attended by a bone-setter. Accordingly that functionary was summoned, and after looking at the man he mounted a mule and started off. Three days later he returned. Without making any attempt to put the bones in place and bandage the leg, he made the Chinaman drink about a gallon of a mixture he had prepared. Then the patient died.

The great street car deal by which the State Electric Company, of Clinton, proposed to become possessors of the Joyce street car lines of Lyon is off. Joyce's terms were too high, so it threw the sale. Such is the report.

J. R. Morin & Co.'s creamery at Vanhorn, was destroyed by fire. Much of the machinery was saved. The amount of loss and cause of the fire are not known. This is the second creamery loss by the firm in two weeks.

Mike Raymond and Bill Ryan, two more professional crooks, were arrested at Sioux City for complicity in the Leeds postoffice robbery. In their room were found two valises full of watchcases and jewelry to the value of $2,000, which have been identified as property of a traveling salesman of a Chicago jewelry house, who was robbed at Le Mars a month ago.

R. H. Moore, an Ottumwa editor who was assaulted a few weeks ago by Attorney Lynam, was assaulted by S. M. Stancliff, proprietor of the Baker house, for alleged reflections on his hostelry. He went before the mayor and paid his fine. Moore was refused admission to the opera house, because of a continuous attack on the manager.

Alcander Briller March, one of the pioneers of Dubuque, died and was buried in the old Third street Catholic cemetery 19 years ago. The other day his remains were taken up to be reinterred in Key West. The body was found to be perfectly preserved and looking as fresh as when placed in the ground. Even his shrowd showed no decay. The body was petrified.

Just the Same.

A writer in the New Orleans Picayune gives an interesting portrait of an old negro who describes himself as "mos' er hundred," and is devotedly attached to the people who once owned him, and with whom he still lives. He declares that nothing can shake his belief that, in some way, he does belong to his beloved mistress. Though she has married, and brought up children of her own, she was still "Miss Carrie" in his eyes, and one of his pet theories is that she looks exactly as she did years ago, when she and her little bondman were children together.

One day he was looking on at a dance, and declared proudly to one of the younger members of the family:

"Miss Carrie could dance better than that when she was young."

"Do you remember how she looked at a ball?" some one asked.

"Oh, yes, honey." he said, "Miss Carrie looked jes' as pretty as a rose, she wus jes' beautiful."

"Well, isn't she beautiful now?"

EXTREMES.

Leading actor,
  Lots of money,
Generous flow of
  Milk and honey.
Poker parties,
  Parlor cars,
Dry champagnes
  And best cigars.
Company busted—
  Not a cent;
All his money
  Has been spent.
Pawns his watch,
  Pawns his chain,
Reaches home,
  Broke again.
Summer clothes,
  Weather freezing,
Heavy cold,
  Coughing, sneezing.
On Broadway,
  On the square,
Borrows money
  Everywhere.
Gets a job,
  Starts all over,
Once again a
  Pig in clover.
Of his debts
  He seldom thinks,
Needs his money
  For his drinks:
For his cards,
  And for his suppers,
Summer finds him
  On his uppers.

An Excited Dutchman.

A Chicago German, who got excited over an account of an elopement of a married woman, exclaimed:

"If my vife runs away mit anoder man's vife, I vill shake him out of his preeches, if he be mine fodder, so help me gracious."

BECAUSE REJECTED.

A Montana Man Stabs a Young Lady Because She Refused His Offer of Marriage.

The Girl Will Probably Die and the Murderer is Likely to Be Lynched.

For some time he has been courting Lillie Dunkley, but when he proposed a few weeks ago she refused him. He then determined to go East, but delayed his departure day after day, in the meantime continuing his attentions. Last night he called on the lady and persuaded her to go walking. When in a quiet neighborhood the couple took seats on the stoop of an unoccupied residence. Snyder again proposed and was again rejected. Becoming enraged, he whipped out a large knife and cut the girl twice—once across the back and again in the side, just missing cutting an artery.

The girl's screams brought to the scene the judge of the district court, who took her to his residence and summoned medical aid. The girl is terribly hurt, and may not recover. Soon after the occurrence the sheriff and posse began searching for the would-be murderer, and strong threats of lynching are made. He is a short, thick-set German, twenty-eight years of age.

A NEWSPAPER BEEHIVE.

It Will Be Built at Great Cost by William B. Hearst.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—W. B. Hearst, the proprietor of the San Francisco Examiner, contemplates erecting here, in the vicinity of Newspaper Row, a commodious structure that will cost nearly $2,000,000. It will be named the Examiner building, and will be designed and built with a view to the accommodation of press associations and newspaper correspondents, with rooms specially adapted to their business wants, and to make it the headquarters of the correspondents of Washington. The Examiner Indian depredations and claims bureau will also be located in this building.

Mr. Hearst is now in the East, having recently come from the Pacific coast, stopping at Chicago, St. Louis, Cleveland, New York and Boston, where he is negotiating with a number of leading journals to join the San Francisco Examiner, the St. Paul PIONEER PRESS and Omaha Bee in the prosecution of Indian depredation claims against the government. The originator of the idea of a combination of leading journals to prosecute these claims was the late Senator Hearst, and Mr. Hearst, in establishing this gigantic claims bureau, is carrying out a long cherished scheme of his father, the California senator, which found full fruition in the bill passed by the last congress transferring Indian depredation claims from the interior department to the United States court of claims.

KNOW THEIR BUSINESS.

Men in Charge of Land Cases Are From Western States.

WASHINGTON, Special, Sept. 7.—There is less talk about fraud in connection with the disposal of lands to settlers than there was under the last administration. All of the men who have immediate charge of the land cases in the interior department are from the West. They know something about the struggles of settlers on the Western plains, and they do not hold as their Democratic predecessors, that every man who was attempting to get a home in the West was a rascal. The thousands of people who were charged with fraud by Sparks were subjected to a great deal of trouble, and even yet they are not through with it. But the present administration of the department has done a great deal to clear up the dockets and remove from the records the charges of fraud against honest settlers. The law passed by the last congress has done a great deal to clear up the clouds upon titles, especially where the lands had, after final proof, been sold to innocent purchasers.

In this law a good move was made looking toward making the receiver's receipt good for the land. It certainly ought to be. The register and receiver of the land offices are sworn officials of the government. When a settler makes final proof before them, or which is approved by them, and a receipt issued to him for the money he pays for the land, his title should be good and not open to attack by any person who desires to put him to expense and trouble.

BUSINESS REVERSES.

Assignments Made by Several Firms in Different Cities.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 7.—James A. Chambers, the prominent glass manufacturer of this city, has made an assignment. There are mortgages to the extent of $97,000 against Mr. Chambers' real estate. The judgments against him aggregate $144,250. Outside of this the claims of Mr. McKee, his partner, amount to $200,000, and indorsements of Standard Plate Glass Manufacturing company paper to $20,000. Mr. Chambers says he cannot at present give an estimate of his total liabilities.

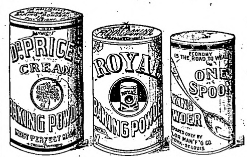
BALTIMORE, Sept. 7.—The firm of Robert Moore & Co. has made a deed of trust for the benefit of its creditors to Carl Vieler of New York. The bond filed by the trustee is for $100,000; assets are stated at $143,000, while the liabilities are $97,000.

Preferring the Weighing System.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The internal revenue bureau has been considering for some time advisability and practicability of adopting what is known as the weighing system for the official determination of the quantity of spirits placed in casks and packages. The spirits absorbed into the wood add to the weight of the packages, so the commissioner has requested distillers throughout the country to assist his office in arriving at some conclusion as to the average amount of spirits that will be absorbed, and it is probable that a deduction will be made from the gross weight of packages on this account. The present system is regarded as undesirable for the reason that it only approaches accuracy when the casks are made in a regular form and the inside surfaces completely smooth.

South Dakota Y. M. C. A.

MITCHELL, S. D., Special Telegram, Sept. 7.—The first state convention of the Y. M. C. A. of this state closed its four days' session to-night in the court house with a largely attended and interesting session. The work done during the past year, as shown by various reports from all localities, has been extensive, and plans were matured by the executive committee for even more aggressive work the coming year and placing the association on a more solid footing than ever. The officers for the coming year are: R. N. Kratz, Mitchell, president; F. T. Thwing, Yankton, vice president; T. G. Brown, Sioux Falls, secretary; F. M. Clark, Yankton, assistant secretary.



40 years the standard.

A Pure Cream Tartar Powder

ROYAL, Contains Ammonia.

TAYLOR'S ONE SPOON. Contains Alum and Ammonia.

Dr. Price gives larger and fuller cans than those of any other Baking Powder manufacturer.

Above cut represents the comparative size of one pound can each "Dr. Price's," Royal" and "Taylor's One Spoon." These cans were set side by side, then photographed down in exact proportions to admit the plate in this space. Ask your grocer to set a one pound can of any other brand alongside 1 lb. Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, and observe the difference, as illustrated above.

Adulterated powders may usually be detected by their heavier bulk, as shown by the small cans, and these scantily filled, often containing a circular to help fill out the cans. It is a singular fact that many of the ammonia and alum baking powders are advertised as "Absolutely Pure." All official examinations prove that it would be safe to reject all powders labeled absolutely pure.

The economy in using Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder does not consist alone in the fact that much larger and fuller cans are given, but Dr. Price's is a stronger, purer and more wholesome baking powder than any other known. Does better work, and goes farther, hence more economical in every way.

What woman would use an ammonia or alum baking powder if she knew it? Such powders not only undermine the health, but ammonia gives to the complexion a sallow and blotched appearance.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from ammonia, alum, lime, or any other adulterant. The purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

HALF FARE TO STATE FAIR.

The Great Northern will sell tickets to the Minnesota State Fair, September 5th to 12th, at one fare for the round trip.

Surveyor General James Compton of St. Paul, and Cashier George Evans, of the First National Bank of Fergus Falls, were here a couple of days this week, hunting prairie chicken. They succeeded in bagging over one hundred birds and seem well pleased with their trip.

Do you know of any goods, either in twine, leather, iron, woolen or anything outside of agricultural products higher in price today than they were a year ago? Can you not buy identically the same kind of a tin pail for 35 cents today that you could a year ago? Do you pay more for shoes or harness? How are wire nails in comparison with last year? And finally bretheren, you can get a suit of clothes for $10 just as good as you could in May of the year of our Lord 1800.—LeSuer News.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

Mr. M. Dauser wishes to announce that he will be here again the first part of October and will take photographs of all kinds, Announcement of date will be made later.

MINNEAPOLIS EXPOSITION.
AUG. 25 TO SEPT. 26.

Reduced rates via the Great Northern Railway every Tuesday and Friday, beginning August 25th, and daily from September 5th to 12th.

E. T. Spafford and wife, Geo. Birch and wife, of Thompson N. D., Chas. Morse, Geo. Morse, Samuel Gladding and David Goodrich of Minneapolis, formed a pleasant party that spent last week hunting east of here. They had a well equipped camping outfit, with cook and teamsters. They report having killed over 3.0 chickens. All seemed exceptionally well pleased with their week's outing. One of the party informs us that Samuel Gladding successfully negotiated to perpetuate his name in this country having induced one of the settlers to name his next boy Samuel Gladding, for a consideration of an overcoat and a pair of boots. The party returned home last Monday. They will probably come again next year as Mr. Gladding is especially interested in seeing that his contract is fulfilled.

CHEAP EXCURSIONS.

Let your friends in the east know that the Great Northern will sell round trip tickets August 25th, September 15th and 29th from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and West Superior in connection with eastern lines at reduced rates, See Agent C. W. McKallor for particulars,

Among the many attractions which will be presented for the delectation of the public at the Minneapolis Exposition, will be a representation of a linen mill in full operation. The mill will show the process of manufacturing different kinds of linen such as were, only a few years ago, made only in the old country. There are only a few persons who know that linen is made in the city of Minneapolis. The mill has been in operation only a few months and the management is glad of the opportunity of showing the people how the industry is carried on, The mill will be kept running several hours each day so that everyone can have the opportunity of seeing how it works. The linen mill management have competent attendants at their exhibit to instruct the farming community how to prepare their flax fiber,

Crookston Times. Albert J. Anderson, of Fosston, a young man of 20 years was examined by the insanity board this week and committed to the Fergus Falls Asylum, whence he was taken by sheriff Grundyson. During his examination he spoke in the most quiet matter of fact way and by his manner or appearance one would not think him insane. But his words were far from being in accord with quiet demeanor. He claimed that he had been on earth for centuries although his name had never appeared in history he had taken an active part in many noted historic events. For instance he was on board the ship when Jonah was cast overboard to be swallowed by a whale; he was the engineer on the Monitor during the combat with the Merrimac and had been one of the leaders in the celebrated Jesse James gang. After his committal to the Fergus Falls asylum he positively refused to go until he had got the consent of the sheriff to run the engine on the train. The sheriff finally compromised by consenting to let him act as engineer between Fergus Falls and St. Paul and in this way landed him safely in the asylum.

Prof. Otto Lugger, State Entomologist, will issue a report on the grasshopper situation very soon now, if it is not already out. From an advance review of the paper we learn that he believes there is great danger of an invasion from teem next year, or rather that they will breed here in dangerous numbers unless steps are taken to check them. In Polk and this county the variety of hoppers present is one that seeks light or sandy soil more particularly for depositing their eggs, while in Kittson county a hopper is present that favors a heavy soil. This latter feature is one not generally known and should be well borne in mind.

The hoppers can be easily disposed of by taking care to plow every foot of and either this fall or next spring that is already broken. They will not breed on native prairie land,

Copies of the bulletin containing the report of Prof. Lugger may doubtless be had by addressing the State Experimental Farm at St. Anthony Park,

HOW TO KILL YOUR TOWN.

Buy of Peddlers as often and as much as possible,

Denounce your merchants because he makes a profit on his goods.

Make your town out a very bad place and stab it every chance you get.

Refuse to unite in any scheme for the betterment of the material interest of the people

Keep every cent you get and don't do anything of a public nature unless you can make something out of it directly,

Tell your merchants that you can buy goods a good deal cheaper in some other town and charge them with extortion.

If a stranger comes to your town tell him everything is overdone and predict a general crash in the town in the near future.

Knife every man that disagrees with you on the best method of increasing business.

When you have anything to say of your town, say it in such a way that will leave the impression that you have no faith in it.

If you are a merchant don't advertise in the home papers; buy a rubber stamp and use it. It may save a few dimes and make the paper look like it was printed in a one-horse town.

If you are a farmer curse the town where you trade as the meanest place on earth. Talk this to your neighbors, make them think the business men robbers and thieves. It will make your property much less valuable, but then you don't care.—Ex.

One of the schemes to impress upon the World's Fair visitors the immensity of some of the pacific coast lumber has been evolved in Tulare county, Cal. It is proposed to cut down a certain tree in that county which is 390 feet high 96 feet from the but to the first branch and 26 feet through at the very base, A log of clean smooth wood that will measure 98 feet in length and average 20 feet in diameter can easily be cut out of it. This is what the Tulare people propose to do, and having the log they will utilize it to the benefit of the World's Fair and the glory of Tulare. The tree grows well up towards the headwaters of the Kaweah river and the great log will have to be carried or moved in some way to the railroad at Visalia, a distance of nearly sixty miles. To do this the log will have to be cut in sections. It is proposed when this is done and the logs delivered at their destination to make two lengths each forty-five feet long. Each of these lengths will then be hewn into the shape of ordinary railway passenger coaches. The rough bark of the tree will be the roof of the car, and on the sides and ends the natural wood will be left unpolished. The inside will be hollowed out, windows and doors put in, and the interior finished after the fashion of Pullman cars. One will be a buffet and dining car, with apartments for bath, barber-shop and kitchen. The other will be a sleeper with an observation room. Platforms will be put at the ends and ordinary trucks underneath, and to prevent the transformed tree from falling to pieces under any circumstances, heavy bands will be put around the body of the car. The scheme looks well in print; how it will succeed when put into practice, if it is, remains to be seen.—Lumberman.

The experiment made at Midland, Tex., on the 18th inst. by Gen. Dyrenforth in producing rain by the explosion of dynamite bombs at an altitude of one and a quarter miles, seems to have been in every way successful, says the Washington Post, A very important point is that there was no indication of rain at the time of the experiment. Accurate observations of barometrical conditions showed the atmosphere to be dry with only 60 per cent of humidity.

The Post has lately called attention to the fact that in the cases that are generally relied upon to sustain the theory that rainfall is immediately and invariabely caused by concussion, rainfall was not actually produced. But the circumstances of Gen. Dyrenforth's explosion show that his experiment is not liable to that objection. His baloon exploded among the clouds with a report like thunder. Cattle, gazing up at a cloudless sky, stampeded. Kites charged with electricity gave their challenge to the heavens, rendrock powder was distributed and exploded at a distance of nearly three miles from headquarters. The rain instantly began to fall, and fell for nearly five hours. The explosions were heard twenty-five miles away, ranchmen and trainmen say the rain extended many miles, and Prof. Curtis, the meteorologist of the expidition estimates that it covered an area of not less than 1000 miles.

When all the circumstances are considered closely it is difficult to resist the conviction that the rain at Midland was occasiond by Dyrenforth's altitudinous explosion. It may be suggested that the rainfall might have been a coincidence but coincidences rarely fall so pat to all the features of the situation. This is announced as a preliminary experiment but if that which is to follow is equally successful there will be little hesitation in accepting the concussion theory of rain production as established beyond peradventure.

Minneapolis Exposition and State Fair Rates Via Northern Pacific Railroad.

Low rate tickets will be sold to Minneapolis, account of exposition, September 4, 15, 18 22 and 25th, at one and one-third fare for the round trip. And to St. Paul and Minneapolis, account of state fair and exposition September 5th to 12th inclusive at one St. Paul fare for the round trip. Tickets will include admission cupon for which 25 cents additional will be charged, account of the exposition and 50 cents account of the fair.

WHISPERS ABOUT WOMEN.

Vassar's most popular instructor is Miss Mary W. Whitney, who is the professor of astronomy.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe began Greek at seventy, and now at seventy-two she has just read the plays of Sophocles in the original.

Miss Katharine Drexel's convent, which is soon to be built at Andalusia, Pa., will be equipped with all modern conveniences, including electric lights.

Mme. Barrios, the beautiful and wealthy widow of a president of a South American republic, may give her hand in marriage to a member of the English nobility.

One of the great American beauties of olden times was Sally Ward, of Louisville. She married many times, and at fifty was as invincible as any ordinary Venus is at thirty.

The late Duchesse de Croy-Dulmen was one of the last of the grande dames of the Second Empire. She was a beautiful woman, and in the forest of Ardennes she was famous as a huntress.

London has a hospital for women which was established by a woman and is now officered by women and maintained by them. The hospital was established through the indefatigable exertions of one woman, Mrs. Garrett Anderson.

Mrs. Carrica Le Favre is trying to establish societies of vegetarians in New York, Chicago and Boston. She believes that a diet of fruit and cereals promotes health and longevity, and condemns meat intemperance as worse than whisky intemperance.

BREVITIES

CHATS ABOUT MEN.

Secretary Foster is fond of whist, pool and horses, especially horses.

Mr. R. R. Postans is the only surviving founder of Punch. He is eighty-five, and is said to be in abject poverty.

Ex-Congressman William McAdoo, of New Jersey, is handsome, intellectual, eloquent, a fine stump speaker and an inimitable story teller.

Stanley is reported to have made $181,000 from his American tour. One half of this sum came from his book and the other half from his lectures.

Lord Sackville has stocked his great park in Kent, England, with wild boars for the purpose of indulging his friends in a boar hunt of the true mediæval order.

Dr. M. A. Holmes, of Waterville, aged seventy-eight, has a grandfather still living in England at the great age of 114 years. The latter is a surgeon by profession.

M. Flammarion believes that certain lights which have been seen on Mars may have been signals to us, and that we may ultimately discover a means of answering them.

Lafcadio Hearn writes to a friend that he has become professor in a college in the interior of Japan, married a fair Japanese and renounced the white man's world and all that appertains thereto.

Sir Arthur Haliburton, newly appointed assistant under secretary of state for the English war office, is a son of the famous Nova Scotian judge, best known years ago by the name of "Sam Slick."

Young William Rumford, of Los Gatos, Cal., ran away from home, and explained, when found, that he was "tired of eating hay and grain." His father is a leading vegetarian of the Pacific coast.

Captain S. S. Hansen, of the Danish steamer Lolland, has received a beautiful gold watch, with the donor's portrait and dedication, from the emperor of Germany as a reward for his bravery in rescuing the crew of the steamer Heimat.

Major A. S. Nicholson, of the United States army, claims to have spent more years in active service under Uncle Sam than any other officer now living. He has been forty-five years in the service. The major is tall and straight, with a gray mustache and very soldierly.

TURF TOPICS.

The trotting meeting at Burlington, Ia., did not prove very successful, the receipts being about $900 and the expenditures $2,200.

If Major Dickinson, of New York, secures Miss Alice, 2:17¼, he proposes to hitch her with Marie Jansen for a tilt against the team record.

Lakewood Prince, 2:17, the Chautauqua county, N. Y., stallion, will be a starter in the 2:20 $5,000 guaranteed stake to be trotted at Lexington, Ky., in October.

Some great record breaking was recently done at Independence, Ia., when Allerton lowered his record to 2:12. Mary Marshall went in 2:12¾, and Manager, a pacer, went in 2:14½.

Nettie Time, the dam of Temple Bar, 2:17¼, the winner of the $10,000 stake at Detroit, is now the dam of a producing son, as Fred K. by her son Shadeland Onward, 2:20½, has secured a record of 2:28½.

James McLaughlin is quoted as saying that he will not again train down to ride. If a mount comes to him at 130 pounds or above he will accept it, but will not bother himself about anything below that weight. McLaughlin is to establish a racing stable of his own. He has purchased Walcott and Take Back.

Major B. G. Thomas, breeder of Ban Fox, is very enthusiastic over the proposed international horse race, to be known as the American cup, with $100,000 added money. Says he: "It seems to me that the foreign owners would make many entries. It should be for 4-year-olds, $1,000 entrance, $250 forfeit." Horsemen generally do not believe the scheme practicable.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Germany publishes more periodicals than all the rest of Europe.

A Sorosis club on the American model has been started in Bombay.

Teachers' salaries in the United States annually amount to more than $60,000,000.

Paris requires every vehicle traversing its streets at night, if only a wheelbarrow, to carry a lighted lamp. Safety is secured, and the avenues glitter as if swarming with giant fireflies.

There is an island near Menominee, Mich., which is literally alive with worms that swarm over everything, and another one that is so infested with snakes that no one will visit it.

The proportion of insane to sane persons in the United States is one in every 283; in Scotland it is one in every 574; in the agricultural districts of England it is one in 820; in London the proportion is one in 400.

A Maine farmer who recently sent ten cents to a man who advertised to send for that amount directions how to run a farm without being troubled with potato bugs got this reply by postal card, "Plant fruit trees instead of potatoes."

An old table in the waiting room of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad depot at Wilmington possesses a peculiar interest for people fond of relics. It is the table on which the body of Abraham Lincoln rested while being conveyed to Springfield, Ills., for burial.

On the Wrong Scent.

First Little Girl (at fashionable summer resort)—I'm awful glad to get 'quainted with you, 'cause you're nice.

Second Little Girl—So'm I with you. That's what we come for. Mamma says so herself.

"To get 'quainted?"

"Yes, with nice people—people in society, you know."

"Why, that's just what mamma wants. We're to get 'quainted with people in society."

"Ain't you in society in the city?"

"No. You are, aren't you?"

"No. We've been rakin and scrapin the whole winter to come here and get 'quainted with people in society, you know."

"So've we."

"Then your folks ain't anybody at home!"

"No."

"Neither are we."

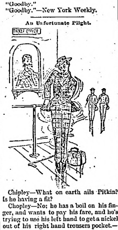
"Guess there ain't much use in us gettin 'quainted."

"Guess not."

"Goodby."

"Goodby."—New York Weekly.

An Unfortunate Plight.



Chipley—What on earth ails Pitkin? Is he having a fit?

A German Wit.

A very poor actor having played the part of the ghost in "Hamlet" for many years, Saphir, the German wit, on seeing him, said:

"It would be a good thing if this man gave up the ghost so that somebody else could take his part."

A young poet once sent the humorist an "Ode to Immortality," requesting his opinion of it. Saphir returned the manuscript with the message, "This package will never reach its address."

"Three persons," remarked the wit, "sleep soundly—a child, a corpse and a night watchman."

During his sojourn in X Saphir was frequently in the society of a well known theatrical manager whose dullness was notorious.

"How strange it is that my legs go to sleep every day," he remarked upon one occasion.

"How can you wonder?" returned Saphir. "They are always in your company."—New York Ledger.

Looking Citiward.

Magistrate—You are charged, sir, with killing six of our oldest and most respected citizens. What have you to say?

Prisoner—They were all of 'm rich old penny grabbers wot was leavin the best buildin sites in town lie idle waitin fer a higher price.

"Well?"

"Well, yer honor, I belong to the village improvement society."—New York Weekly.

Getting Even.

"Ah, play a little before you go, professor."

"I would like to, Miss Emma, but it's rather late and I might disturb the neighbors."

"Oh, don't bother about the neighbors. Besides, they poisoned our dog last week."—Fliegende Blatter.

No Fear of It Getting Wet.

Miss Summer—I'll take a piece of this cloth. It will make a lovely bathing suit.

Saleslady—But I am afraid, miss, that it won't wash.

Miss Summer—Who wants it to wash?—Hoosier.

A Well Trained Voice.

First Passenger (after a western stage robbery)—I never heard anything so imperative as that highwayman's voice when he commanded the driver to stop.

Little Boy—I guess he used to be a schoolmaster.—Good News.

Too Brisk.

Quester—How has business been with you this week, Jester? Active?

Jester—Active! Well, I should remark! It's been so allfired active that it's completely got away from me.—Boston Courier.

Customary with Waiters.

Dyett—That waiter seems to have an excellent memory.

Hungerford—Yes. He seems to remember our orders exactly, and for such a long time.—Chicago News.

To Be Expected.

Hotel Clerk—That woman in No. 13 is a regular crank. She kicks at everything.

Proprietor—That's quite natural. She's a skirt dancer.—Dramatic Mirror.

A Diabolical Innuendo.

Bellows—My new wife is color blind.

Fellows—(gazing long at Bellows' face)—One would have thought she was blind altogether.—New York Herald.

Sudden Rise in Live Stock.

"Cattle come high nowadays," said the man in the moon as the cow jumped over it.—Brooklyn Life.

A Cure for Ague.

No disease has given rise to a more numerous and curious catalogue of charms than the ague. A common practice was to run nine times through a circle formed by a brier that grew in that direction. This was no doubt a Druidical ceremony, nine being the mystic number of high antiquity. A spider given, unknown, to the patent was a favorite remedy with some persons.—London Tit-Bits.

IT WAS ALL RIGHT.

The Crowd Was Badly Worried, but Finally Moved On.

A man dressed in the garb of a workman stood on the roof of a four story building in Hudson street and waved his hand and appeared to say something to the people passing on the other side of the street. In a minute or two a dozen pedestrians had caught sight of him and stopped.

"Some one has closed the scuttle on him and he can't get down," said one.

"Perhaps he's been taken ill and needs help," suggested a second.

Three or four others had observations to offer, and one man started to cross the street to inform the people on the ground floor that something was wrong on the roof, when a boy stepped out, looked up at the windows and then called out:

"There hain't nothin the matter with that feller up there! He's only flirting with a gal in the fourth story on this side of the street!"

And the crowd heaved a sigh of relief and moved on.—New York Evening World.

Why He Does Not Play Poker.

"Ever played poker?" asked the sport.

"Not any more," responded the quiet man.

"Have played, then?"

"Yes, but I've learned better."

"Lose much?"

"Not such a great deal, but it was more than I care to lose again."

"Fall in with sharpers?"

"Oh, no; lost to a person to whom I had taught the game," and he related the following story:

"Two weeks' salary went in two hours, and I could never get a cent of it back. I made up my mind that I was too unlucky for a poker player, so I swore off. Haven't played since. I guess it's just as well I lost the money. It taught me a good lesson—may have saved me from losing a lot more some time."

"That's so; better keep out if you're unlucky. Who did you say it was beat you?"

Why He Was a Hero.

In the west corridor of the postoffice the other day two newsboys got into a wrangle, but after the first few words one of them stood back and let the other call him a liar, thief, robber and a dozen other things without making any reply. A woman paused on her way upstairs to listen to the quarrel, and by and by she came back down and said to the boy who was holding himself in:

"My lad, I want to compliment you. You are a real hero."

The other boy took a skip at this and she continued:

"It was a notable exhibition of self restraint, and if I ever write a boy's book I'll make you the hero of it."

When she had departed I asked the boy, who stood looking very foolish, why he didn't resent the insult put upon him, and he whispered:

"I was mad 'nuff to bust, but I knew Jim could knock the stuffin right out o' me!"—M. Quad in New York Evening World.

BROADWAY ST. HILAIRE,

They poulticed her feet and poulticed her head,
And blistered her back till 'twas smarting and red,
Tried tonics, elixirs, pain-killers and salves,
(Though grandma declared it was nothing but "narves.")
And the poor woman thought she must certainly die,
Till "Favorite Prescription" she happened to try.
No wonder its praises so loudly they speak,
She grew better at once and was well in a week.

The torturing pains and distressing nervousness which accompany, at times, certain forms of "female weakness," yield like magic to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, and adapted to the delicate organization of woman. It allays and subdues the nervous symptoms and relieves the pain accompanying functional and organic troubles.

It's a legitimate medicine—an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nervine, and a positive remedy for "female weaknesses" and ailments. All functional disturbances, irregularities, and derangements are cured by it. There's nothing like it in the way it acts—there's nothing like it in the way it's sold. It's guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or the money paid for it is promptly refunded.

Real Estate is the Basis of all Wealth.

AN INVESTMENT THAT WILL NET.

20% to 30%

99 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money. 97 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center, has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now pre-eminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland.

UNCLE JOB'S PLAN.

BY ASA GLANNAL.

Uncle Job Forester was like a great many other American parents—he had perfect children.

"Them boys," he was wont to say, "wouldn't marry ary woman in the county; not but what there's plenty good enough, an' better, but they have other plans an' projec's!"

But even perfect children sometimes give trouble, and Uncle Job's boys at the ages of 20 and 22, were no exception to the rule.

A pretty school-teacher boarded at the Foresters', and it was her apparently innocent self that was making all the trouble. Lew Forester, the younger of the boys, was hopelessly in love with her, and as he was young, with his life's work scarcely mapped out, and as May Derning was poor, with an abundance of poor relations, the marriage was deemed highly inexpedient. Uncle Job ruminated upon the subject as he followed his lazy, fat team along the corn-rows.

"Seems to me," he soliloquized, "ef I'd jes' speak to her father—drat the weeds! I do wish I'd a check-rowed this! the cockle-burr is a goin' to jes' plum teetotally take hit—he'd stop hit, being so poor and high-minded. But like's not Lew'd get mad at my interfering an' marry her anyhow, jes' to teach me a lesson and not a aimin' to marry at all, before. I've knowed parents to put they foot in it mightily afore this, an' I've wondered if Mahaly Ann Briggs would a been a better chance than Mary Ann, though I wouldn't have nuther one of 'em a supposin's that I riclect anything about them times. No, I reckin I'd better not call on her pap for any help, seeing as I spilt his prospec's in our young days. Oh, you get up there, you lazy heifer! Looks like the more you feed 'em the lazier they git! No, but if I don't hatch up something 'thout showing my hand, why, I'll jes' let 'em marry for being a fool."

"Lew," said Uncle Job, the following Saturday morning, "I want you to take the one seated-gig an' go to Chillicothe on business, an' I want you to not pick up any passengers either goin' or comin', for that left wheel ain't any too strong, an' watch an' don't go into any ruts. I'd like for that gig to last till I feel able to get another one."

"Can't Dan go?" Lew asked petulantly. "I do hate to ride to town all by myself over the hills an' through the red bresh. I'd rather plow hard all day."

"Well plow, then," Uncle Job answered with a merry twinkle in his eye. That medder piece needs plowin' monstrous bad. You and I can plow an' Dan can go just as well as not."

"If I was him I wouldn't drive the gig," Lew remarked, uttering the words before reflecting upon what might follow.

"I ain't a-goin' to," Dan answered with the confidence of a young man who owns a good team of his own. I'm a-going to drive Stell and Grace—the buggy needs a little fixing up."

Lew hitched up his team and went to work. He despaired of having a chat with May so early in the morning, but he could come in at half-past 11; she was not busy then.

Uncle Job hung around the barn and managed to engage Dan's attention, thus retarding his start until Lew had gone to work.

"Now see here, Dan'l," he began as soon as Lew was out of earshot, "anybody can see that Lew is soft on the teacher, and the jilt will marry her ef he aint stopped; not but what she's plenty good enough for him, an' too good as to that, but you know we've allus had other plans for Lew. I never saw sich a hard-hearted creetur as he is. He can cut an' slash on live animals, an' I think he'd make a good doctor. That's what me an your maw wants, an' of course if he ever marries the school-teacher, he can't never be nothing but a farmer, for you know he can't more'n write his name now, though he's learnin' considerable from her, God bless her! She's a good little thing. Well what I was going to say is this: you make up to her. You've got your new horses and buggy and lots of nice clothes, and you can cut him out quick as wink."

"Then s'pose I take her to town today," Dan suggested, not at all displeased at the prospect of a twenty-four mile ride with so pleasant a companion.

"Yes, yes! You hitch up an' I will go tell her. I'll fix it."

With that he hurried to the house, elated with the working of his plan.

"Miss May," he said in a loud whisper from the front door, "you come here a minute."

"In a moment, uncle," a pleasant voice answered.

"Come out into the yard," he murmured, "I want you to do a favor for me. I want to get the old lady two new gingham dresses, an' I want you to pick them out an' pay for them. I'll give you the money. I want you to go with Dan'l."

"Yes, certainly," May answered with a suspicious pink mantling her cheeks, "Could you tell me anything about what kind of gingham you want?"

"You jest use your own jedgment—get something becomin' to old women—an' cut an' make it, an' I'll knock off a week's board for one, an' another week for another. We like to have mother look nice."

At about 10 o'clock Mr. Forester went over to see how Lew was progressing with his work. He found him busy, and cheerily whistling "Marble Halls."

"It's a plumb shame to tease the boy," his father soliloquized, as he approached the grassy turning row. "But all the evils of life must be keoved with some suffering. I know I'd better keep him free to go on an' make something out of hisself than to have him tied down to hard work with a wife and a passel o' little children. I see you've been a-humpin' yerself," he said, as Lew approached. "No need to kill yerself and the team, too."

"We've taken it easy; nice dirt this; never seen better; wish you'd give me my sheer on this side when you divide up."

"Maybe—but you'll be a-selling your'n," his father answered, looking with pride upon his various fields stretching away in the distance, some with wheat, some with oats, besides small patches of castor beans, flax, cane, millet and pasture and meadow.

"No, I'm thinking of buildin' an' settlin' right here," Lew replied, while a boyish blush dyed his downy cheek. "I've been thinking ef you and maw was willin'—"

"Yes, a mentionin' of your maw puts me in mind that I sent by May this morning to get her a couple o' new dresses. Seems to me we don't lay enough store by the way she looks."

"Where'd May go?" Lew asked with a sinking of the heart.

"She went with Dan'l," looking over his fields and mercifully turning his back. "May's a mighty likely girl; there aint none better."

Without a word Lew turned his team into the corn and began to plow. His father noticed that he was unusually gentle with the horses, and his conscience troubled him not a little as he walked toward the house.

"Ef I hadn't a-tole him," he said, contemplating the variegated sod with unnoting eye, he would a-come in at 11, and when he found she want here, he'd a-went out agin quick's he could git his dinner an' a-plowed till dark, an' that's too much on the horses."

Lew came in at a quarter past 12, ate his dinner in silence, and was for starting back to the field.

"You mustn't take the horses out till two, Lewie," his father said. "You go lie down and sleep under a shade tree—you'll feel lots better."

"I don't want no sleep," growled Lew.

"Ef you don't the horses does," said his father. "But if you ain't sleepy let's go out here under the trees. I feel kinder ristless an' lonesome with Dan an' May gone, and I know mother doesn't like to have men folks around till she gets her work done. You an' Dan is young and free, an' I just saw Jim Lucas pass, an' I couldn't help a-contrasting ye. Jim was young about ten years back, an' so was Sallie, and they had ambitions. Jim was purty good schollared for the country, an' he wanted to be a Congressman or somethin'. Sallie was purty and sweet, an' most any man in his senses would ha' loved her, an' he did, an' they married, an' now they have six children, and Jim can't do nothin' but jes' dig for them. He ain't able to hire a hand, an' he rents, and he don't get no richer every year, even if Sallie does contrive an' save an' scrimp until he's old, and maybe longer."

"I suppose he loves Sallie," Lew suggested.

"Oh, yes, kinder sorter; but his life ain't what he bargained for. Married life lacks a good deal of bein' a picnic when people looks high and is poor. This everlasting grind for somethin' to eat is awful hard on a fellar with ambitions. Your maw an' me want you to be a doctor, an' I was a-thinkin'—"

"Paw, I don't know enough." Lew sat up and looked resolute. "You know I never was fond of books, an' I don't like nothing but turning up dirt and handling stock. I'll never make a Doctor nor a Congressman, nor nothing but a plain farmer, and I want to marry May an' go to housekeeping as soon as I'm of age, which will be in ten months an' seventeen days."

"Wait till you're 21, and then, ef you want to marry her, why, all right; but I'll tell you now that the day'll come when you will wish you hadn't. May's as good a girl as ever lived, but I'm afraid you'll be overrun by her kin. They're great folks to come an' stay all night an' bring the whole family."

Mr. Forester arose, brushed the whittlings from his trousers, and remarking that he'd see to the "hitchin' of the horses," went off to the barn.

That afternoon he confided his doubts and misgivings to his wife, and received some very sharp advice about the adversity of minding his own business.

"Well, my heart jest bleeds for other people's boys," Mr. Forester asseverated, "an' when it comes to my own it 'pears like I would do anything to keep 'em from a-running their heads in nooses that'll keep 'em choked down the rest of their days."

"You'll see, paw," Mrs. Forester replied with the confidence of an observing mind. "I've knowed and heerd of a good many matches a-bein' broke off, and very few of 'em ever come to any good."

"Stuff!" scornfully replied Uncle Job "You know the girls in this countr. are engaged lots of times 'fore they marry. Why, I know a young fellay that'd jest set down and write to a girl an' ast her to marry him an' he didn't have the least intentions that way. Don't you think that engagement ought to be broken off?"

"I'm not talkin' about that kind—I'm a-talking about where they love an' want to marry."

"Well, we wont quarl." And they didn't.

During the rest of the term Dan paid May the most marked attention. Scarcely a day passed that he did not take her driving or horseback riding, and she sat on a horse with the utmost grace. May brightened and looked her prettiest during these happy days, while Lew at first sulked and then became genuinely indifferent. He kept to his work in all weathers, and it began to be noticed that his crop looked much better than Dan's, although Lew had helped him more than once.

"I will plow this afternoon," he would say, "and you may help mother and May with their yarn," or "I'll go after the cattle and you and May can drive down to Springhill and get the mail.

At first this indifference was assumed to hide his wounded pride, but it soon came to pass that he found himself happier and nearer real contentment than ever before.

Not so with Uncle Job. At first he rubbed his hands complacently, and smiled to think how easy it was to manage boys so well brought up as his were. But Dan was continuing his attentions too long, and they were too marked and too ardent. He resolved to speak to him.

"Look here, Dan!" he began, one day, when they were building the new rail-fence around the pasture. "Don't you think you are carrying this thing too far? May might fall in love with you."

"I hope she has, paw," Dan replied, with a sheepish laugh, "for we are going to marry when her school is out, and if you will let me, I'd like to build on the west eighty."

"Yes, Dan'l, jes' as you like," meekly. "May's a mighty fine girl, an' I've got everything to be proud of. Thankee, Dan'l, for bringin' us sech a nice darter."

He turned away for some rails, and paused a moment, looking at their splintery cleanliness.

"Out of the frying pan into the fire," he muttered, "an' I done it, shore's fate!"

An Educated Fly.

Prof. Thomas J. Murray, of New York, tells a wonderful tale of the results of his kindness to a common house fly: "For two weeks the fly flew around my house without much notice being taken of him; then he began to make advances, and soon permitted me to handle his wings. We called him 'Dick'; at breakfast every morning Dick was fed with sugar to his hearts content, and would sit on my finger and corkscrew his legs and rub his head.

"Presently I made endeavours to teach him various tricks, which at first were somewhat of a failure. Soon he had advanced in the art until he would allow me to lift him up on a toothpick. Soon after I could place two of the little splinters under him and by a deal of patience and coaxing induce him to stand on his hind legs. Then again I could place them on the table and have him jump over them successively, like a circus rider jumps the hurdles. One of the most singular habits he has is to fly at my finger like a bantam cock at an enemy whenever he becomes enraged."

The Color of Royalty.

It is always interesting to know what colors are used or selected by royal families as being their very own. To England, the only royal family of modern times which has selected it, belongs scarlet, and it must be confessed that it is a most effective color. The royal households of Portugal, Prussia, Sweden and most of the German princes, wear blue; Russia chooses dark green; Austria delights in black and yellow. According to the usual belief, scarlet, as the royal household color of England, was chosen because of the red rose of the Plantagenets, but this is not true; it was taken from the field gules of the royal standard and from Henry's adaption of the scarlet dress of the yeoman of guard. In days gone by it was the privilege of the alderman's wives to wear scarlet gowns, but Englishmen having announced in song and story that they will never be slaves, the general English woman of to-day is never so happy as when she has an entire red gown or coat or some touch of the glowing color about her.

Advice on Airing Houses.

An exchange gives the following advice: Too many houses are built up at the back for want of space. There are no through draughts. Front and back open, and a current set going—that's fresh air. As it is, with the air stagnating, curtains drawn, blinds down, carpets on floors, doors closed, and one bit of a window just open, where are the lungs that can breathe in so many cubic inches destitute of oxygen? Now, in the morning open your street door for an hour, and set something stirring and send some current into these stagnant air layers that close each other up, and can neither move up nor down, nor in nor out. Women faint, children droop, babies die, and all for the want of a little fresh air just passing through the house. Look to it, and open your house door the first thing in the morning, and if you can get a current going, do so.

SALLIE M'GEE.

It was only a few short years ago,
At a hotel by the sea,
That a maiden I met whom you may know
By the name of Sallie McGee.
I fell in love and she fell in love,
At this hotel by the sea,
And we bathed ev'ry day in the salt sea spray—
I and my Sallie McGee.

That Sallie was as sweet as a peach
'Most any blind man could see;
And this is the reason that all and each
Were gazing at Sallie McGee—
So that a dude from Boston came
And took her away from me.
I was in love and she was in love,
At this hotel by the sea;
Sallie was struck on the Boston duck,
And I on Sallie McGee.

But my love was stronger by far than the love
Of the dude from the Hub could be;
And neither the angels in heaven above
Nor the dandies down there by the sea
Could ever dissever my soul from the soul
Of my sweet little Sallie McGee.
So I hit him a spat with a base-ball bat,
Which made him afraid of me;
And he never bothered me after that
At the hotel by the sea.

The Good Derived From Hood's Sarsaparilla

Burlington, Vt., June 6, 1891.

"Six months ago I was badly run down, unable to attend to business because of indigestion and Dyspepsia

I was very nervous, had no appetite, and what I did eat distressed me. I grew worse, lost flesh and almost hope. Was told that if I wished to live I must go away for change and rest. I felt Too Weak To Get Away. But finally went, and came home feeling about as bad as ever. Then I took two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and feel better than for 5 years. I am as hearty as when a boy. Have regained my flesh, have good appetite, sleep well, and My Nerves are in excellent condition. I would not value $1000 for what did for me." T. A. WHEELOCK, Burlington, Vt.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

People Who Make You Tired.

In the ups and downs of hithers and thithers of an eventful life, shall I tell you the people who have made me the most weary? It is not the bad people, nor the foolish people; we can get along with all such because of a streak of common humanity in us all, but I cannot survive without extreme lassitude the decorous people; those who slip through life without a sound or sparkle those who behave themselves upon every occasion and would pass through a dynamite explosion without rumpling a hair; those who never have done anything out of the way and never will, simply for the reason that a fish cannot perspire—no blood in 'em! Cut them and they would run cold sap, like a maple tree in April. Such people are always frightened to death for fear of what the world is going to say about them. They are under everlasting bonds to keep the peace. I wonder that they ever unbend to kiss their children. If one of them lived in my house I should stick pins in him. Morality and goodness that lie no deeper than "behavior" are like the veneering they put on cheap tables—very tawdry and soon peeled off.—Chicago News.

Webster's Ready Wit.

More or less sportive artifice enters into the parry-and-thrust of lawyers' combats in court. Fancy the drollery of a man like Webster playing upon the word "doctor." Harper's Magazine says:

Daniel Webster, when in full practice, was employed to defend the will of Roger Perkins of Hopkinton. A physician made affidavit that the testator was struck with death when he signed his will.

Webster subjected his testimony to a most thorough examination, showing, by quoting medical authorities, that doctors disagree as to the precise moment when a dying man is struck with death, some affirming that it is at the commencement of the disease, others at its climax, and others still affirming that we begin to die as soon as we are born.

"I should like to know," said Mr. Sullivan, the opposing counsel, "what doctor maintains that theory."

"Dr. Watts," said Mr. Webster, with great gravity:

> "The moment we begin to live
> We all begin to die."

This reply convulsed the court and audience with laughter.

Character in Cigars.

A man's thoughts may be read in his cigar. The way he holds it between his lips will give the observer a suggestion as to what manner of man the smoker is. There are men who don't smoke at all, but who always have a cigar in their mouth. In fact, they continually have what is called a "cigar mouth."

The man who presses his teeth through a cigar and chews more than he smokes is a determined fellow.

He who rolls it about in his mouth takes life easy, and never finds fault.

He who points it upward at an angle of 45 degrees is mild-mannered and content but would be pig-headed if the circumstances of his surroundings should require it.

To hold the cigar straight out and send puffs of smoke along either side shows the smoker to be of a meditative turn of mind.

A Natural Washing-Tub

The water of Mono Lake, in Nevada is full of soda, borax, and other minerals in solution. The dirtiest and greasiest of linen is made clean in half a minute by rinsing the article in the lake. The water lathers naturally when agitated, and during a high wind a wall of suds, three or four feet high, is seen on the shore where the waves beat. This quivering wall, in which are seen all the colors of the rainbow, would grow to a height of ten or twelve feet before toppling over but that when it attains a certain height the wind catches it up and wafts great balls of it far inland. Some of these floating balloons of lather are as big as a flour barrel.

Justice in Georgia.

Justice, to prisoner—"I see you have a jug there. Is that the whisky that made you drunk?"

Prisoner—"Yes, your honor."

Justice—"Pass it here I'll sample it."

Bailiff—"Pass the jug to his honor."

"Justice, after a long pull—"The prisoner gets twelve months on the chain gang. Any man who would get drunk on good whisky like that and run the risk of losing the jug is irresponsible and should be taken care of. Clear the court!" Atlanta Constitution.

Cairo's Unhealthfulness.

Cario for a long time has been notorious as one of the most unheathful cities of her size in the world and is likely to remain so unless the French can be induced to abandon their present obstructive policy in Egypt. The town is practically without drainage and year by year the necessity of remedying the evil becomes more urgent. Some time ago the government took the matter in hand, employed a number of distinguished sanitary engineers and prepared a scheme for a system of sewerage which is generally admitted to be the best and cheapest that could be devised. It was proposed to pay for the improvements by half the octroi receipts of the city, but France will not consent and demands the appointment of an international commission of three experts to study the question, to invite plans and to decide which is to be adopted unless accepted by all experts unanimously. The object of this proposition is clear and unless it is modified the drainage plan must be abandoned at least for the present.—Boston Transcript.

A Subordinate.

"Why do you permit such impudence? said the Pullman traveler to his companion after a quarrel with the porter.

Can't help it. He's the porter. I'm only a director in the company."—Epoch.

"The Century's" Life of Columbus.

The Century Magazine will celebrate the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by publishing a Life of Columbus written especially for that magazine by Emilio Castelar, the famous Spanish orator, statesman, and author. The work is written in Spanish, and will be carefully translated. Senor Castelar, whose interest in and admiration for America are well known, has made a careful study of the new historical material bearing upon the subject, and it is said that his papers will be very richly illustrated. Other articles dealing with the discovery of America are in course of preparation for the same magazine.

"German Syrup"

J. C. Davis, Rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, Eufaula, Ala.: "My son has been badly afflicted with a fearful and threatening cough for several months, and after trying several prescriptions from physicians which failed to relieve him, he has been perfectly restored by the use of two bottles of Boschee's German Syrup. I can recommend it without hesitation." Chronic severe, deep-seated coughs like this are as severe tests as a remedy can be subjected to. It is for these long-standing cases that Boschee's German Syrup is made a specialty. Many others afflicted as this lad was, will do well to make a note of this.

An enthusiastic convention was held at Deadwood for the purpose of arranging the Black Hills exhibit at the World's Fair. Resolutions were adopted asking the commissioners of the different counties to call a special election on the same date as the congressional election for the purpose of seeing if a majority of the people of the state favor calling a special session of the legislature to make an appropriation. Should the vote be negative the Black Hills companies will spend $400,000 for a special exhibit of their own resources. Delegates were present from all over the hills.

WISCONSIN.

Racine is being worked by horse thieves.

Ex-City Clerk E. S. Hayden, of Oshkosh is dead.

W. H. Huntington has charge of the new signal service station at Durand.

Green Bay business men have incorporated a stock company with $20,000 capital for the purpose of running a table factory.

E. L. Brockway, has been appointed examiner of timber lands on the White Earth Indian reservation.

The corn and buckwheat crops will be a total failure in the vicinity of Osseo, Trempealeau County, owing to frost.

P. H. White and Nelson Rust secured sixty pearls on a pearling trip to Waterloo. They live at Monroe.

Wausau authorities have caused the arrest of A. Pollock, on suspicion of wrecking the St. Paul train in that city.

City Marshall Day, of Baraboo, accompanied by an officer, is scouring the country for the burglars who visited Baraboo a few nights since.

The report at Madison that Miss Antoinette Abel, a young and favorite soprano singer of the Capital City, was likely to lose her eyesight, proved groundless.

The cyclone and hailstorm reduced the crop of oats at the Outagamie County poor farm to 760 bushels, which otherwise would have been nearly 2,000 bushels.

Chicago and Green Bay parties will establish a candy factory at the latter point. They have incorporated with $15,000 capital.

A burglar entered the house of J. M. Yorgey, of Horicon, and, picking up a revolver belonging to the latter, demanded his money. But Yorgey had none to give. The thief then went through his pockets but found only 72 cents.

IOWA.

The Linn county veterans held their annual encampment at Center Point. Two hundred were present.

Corn in Northern Iowa is maturing in good shape. The frost has had no serious effects and a great many fields are out of danger. The yield will be large.

The grand chapter Order of the Eastern Star convened at Clinton, and about two hundred and fifty delegates were present from all points.

Eddie Creger, the 12-year-old son of Gus Creger, was accidentally shot and killed by Frank Zalesky at Cedar Rapids. They were out hunting when the accident happened.

A New Hampton special says no material damage has yet been done to the corn by frost in this part of the state. Some fields in low places have been slightly injured, but it is safe to say that 20 per cent will cover the loss thus far.

The fifth reunion of the 21st Iowa Infantry was held in Mason City. About 200 old veterans are present. The city was in gay attire. Mayor Duncan delivered the address of welcome, which was responded to by President M. W. Harman, of Independence.

The oil factory of Mark & Mellinger, on front street, Burlington, was partially burned. Three hundred barrels of oil were stored in the building, and the entire block of valuable business houses was threatened for a time. The loss is about $3,000, with no insurance.

The fifth reunion of the 21st Iowa closed at Mason City. It has been the largest reunion held for years, about 1,250 of the gallant survivors of Champion Hills, Port Gibson, Black River Bridge, Vicksburg, Spanish Fort, Jackson, Blakely and a score more of hard contested battle fields being present.

Fifteen archbishops and bishops of the Catholic Church have accepted invitations to be present at the celebration of the jubilee of Bishop Hennessy, of Dubuque, which occurs Sept. 30 and Oct. 1. Among them are Archbishops Ryan, of Philadelphia; Feenan, of Chicago, and Ireland, of St. Paul. Preparations are making for the most imposing religious display ever seen in Iowa.

Manufacturers' day at Clinton was celebrated the other day, and mills, factories and business houses closed at noon for a general holiday. The chief event was the auction sale of 400 building lots in the new Manufacturers' addition. They brought from $225 up to $425. Three huge furniture factories, which will employ 600 men, are being erected there. There were fully ten thousand people at the sale. The electric street cars are running for the first time in the history of the city.

FRENCH REPARTEE.

Some Clever Answers By Clever Frenchmen.

The late Chinese Minister in Paris is credited with a reply as skillful as it was courteous to a great lady who besieged him with questions concerning his creed. He evaded them adroitly until she demanded to know whether it was true that his religion permitted a plurality of wives.

"Of necessity, madame," he replied, "a man must have several wives in order to secure all the virtues which are nowhere combined but in you."

The lady blushed and smiled, but was silenced. Less civil was the answer of the young French minister who, while preaching in a chapel in a French hamlet, where the men sat on one side of the aisle and the women on the other, was annoyed by the sound of whispering and paused in his sermon to reprove it.

"Your reverence will observe," interposed the principal woman that it comes from the men's side."

"So much the better, madame. It will end, then, some time."

A sharp reply or a finely-turned bon mot is never forgotten in France. It is a treasure in which the people take eager delight, as do other people in their crown jewels. Someone who had a keen perception of national characteristics referred to this trait when he said: "In Spain men ask of a new-comer. 'What is his birth? In Germany, 'What has he read? In France, 'What has he said? In Holland,' How much money has he?' 'In Great Britian, 'Is he English? And in America, 'What kind of a man is he?"

"Who are these?" asked Louis Philippe, when several fat noblemen seeking places at Court kept bowing low before him.

"Only jugs, your Majesty," was the answer, "that are lowered in order to be filled."

Jested His Life Out.

The Berlin papers are amusing themselves with saddling a good story on a popular Berlin physician who died there recently. A number of his medical colleagues assembled in his bedroom to consult about his case, which was altogether hopeless, a fact of which the dying man was thoroughly aware.

Suddenly the doctors, who were gravely whispering together were startled by a boisterous peal of laughter from the patient. Being asked the cause of his hilarity, he gasped forth:—

"Funny—story—occurred—to—me; —battlefield — Waterloo — French — Grenadier — lying—bleeding—many—wounds — feeling—death — near—he—counted — wounds — proudly—said,—'Parbleu—takes—eight—Englishmen—kill — one—Napoleon's—Grenadiers.' Well," continued the dying doctor, his voice growing still more feeble with his effort. "I have just—counted—you —and I see—takes eight of my medical friends—to—kill me."

And, still laughing, he turned on his side and passed away.

LATEST NORTHWEST

Several Localities in Minnesota Visited By a Very Heavy but Welcome Rain.

Pasturage Greatly Benefited and the Land Put in Shape for Fall Plowing.

Mankato (Blue Earth County), Minn., Special, Sept. 15.—The hot wave that passed over the city to-day put much of the corn out of danger, and if no frost occurs this week the entire crop will be saved. Some of the corn has already been cut, and will yield an average crop. The flax harvest is in progress, and the average will be from twelve to fifteen bushels.

Northfield (Rice County), Minn. Special, Sept. 15.—Threshers were compelled to stop work this morning on account of the high wind which prevailed. It blew a hurricane for nearly an hour, and light things flew in every direction. The end of threshing is rapidly approaching now, and a little over a week will now bring it into sight. The last of the wheat will be finished the latter part of this week, and then only a little oats and flax will be left. The most sanguine expectations in the beginning of the season are now being realized, and as a prominent politician said to-day, "Good crops and good prices are the best kind of campaign work for our party." There have been a few rumors of chinch bugs being found in the stubble of oats and in the corn. This excites the fear that next year will see a repitition of the year 1889, when whole crops were destroyed. But as some farmers say, if they are only the old bugs nothing is to be feared, as they will perish during the winter. The younger bugs usually leave a place before the end of the summer, and this is probably what they did in this vicinity.

New Prague (Scott county), Minn., Special, Sept. 15.—The weather is dry and cool, which is very much liked by the threshers, but is poor for the corn. A farmer threshed from forty acres of land 1,515 bushels of wheat, or an average of 38 bushels per acre. Corn may turn out all right if no frost strikes it.

North Branch (Chicago county), Minn., Special, Sept. 15.—In this locality as yet we have had no frost. Corn is beyond harm, so are potatoes that were planted in the right time and well tended.

St. Cloud (Stearns County), Minn., Special, Sept. 15.—This region was visited by a heavy fall of rain this morning, and its benefits cannot be overestimated, as it was badly needed in the country for fall plowing and also for pasturage. It was accompanied also by quite a hail storm.

Alexandria (Douglas County), Minn., Special, Sept. 15.—Reports from Holmes City, in the western part of this county, are that all the wheat averages over thirty bushels to the acre. This is the best it has been for fifteen years. A large majority of the farmers, as far as can be learned, are somewhat staggered by what seems an unexpected drop in the market, and there is much talk of holding the wheat until spring, hoping for a better market then. A new elevator is to be built by parties in this vicinity to compete with buyers from the Southeast. A large warehouse for storing grain will be put up in connection. Local farmers are watching preparations with a great deal of interest.

Lake City (Wabasha County), Minn., Special, Sept. 15.—The farmers generally in this section are engaged in threshing. But little grain has yet been marketed here. Following is a revised estimate of the general averages of grain, per acre in Wabasha county as based upon the threshing returns—thus far made: Wheat, 15; barley, 30; oats, 45. Hon. P. H. Rahilly of Mount Pleasant has finished his threshing and reports an average yield per acre as follows: Wheat, 27; barley, 50, oats, 60. He says that in twenty-one days with one machine he threshed 10,800 bushels of wheat, 13,000 bushels of barley and 12,000 bushels of oats. Corn in this section has been doing quite well of late, and there is likely to be a fair crop if frost holds off a few days.

THEY WON'T GET IT.

Turtle Mountains Indians Have a Slim Claim for North Dakota Land.

Bottineau, N. D., Special Telegram, Sept. 15.—The beginning of the trouble with what is known as the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewas dates almost from the earliest history of the Dakotas.

Shortly after Dakota was organized into a territory, and while still the home of countless buffalo and other game, numbers of Indians from the White Earth reservation in Minnesota obtained permission from the government to roam over these hunting grounds without limit as to time, coming and going at pleasure. Encroaching settlers in the Red river valley drove the game farther west, and the red man followed into that ideal region of the sportsman, the Turtle mountain country.

Not contented with the privilege of hunting, they laid claim to a large tract, embracing what is now Rollette and a large portion of adjoining counties. The government, to avoid trouble, recognized their claim so far as to grant them two townships in what is now Rollette county, but they have never ceased to claim what they had originally blocked out.

CONDENSED TELEGRAMS.

In Chicago: J. H. Drake and daughter, Almene H. Paget, St. Paul; John W. Knight, Minneapolis.

The third annual convention of the grand lodge of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers is in session in St. Louis.

The fifth annual convention of the Harness Manufacturer's Protective association has convened in Philadelphia.

Dr. Edward Eggleston, the well known author, was married at Madison, Ind., yesterday, to Miss Fannie Goode, of that city.

THE CONTEST ENDED.

Close of the Rifle and Carbine Competition at Fort Sheridan.

Chicago, Sept. 15.—The army rifle and carbine competition for 1891 is over.

In the distinguished class Blacksmith Keiser won first prize, the "Buffalo gold medal." The second and third prizes, called "Tepee" from the design, were won by Corporal P. M. Hoke and Corporal E. H. Steiner respectively. The three scores were 563, 552 and 530. The army carbine team will be as follows:

Sergeant H. H. Heuser, 541; Corporal M. E. Mitchell, Sergeant J. Jackson, Sergeant M. Rohrers, Sergeant F. Foy, Private J. B. Foley, Capt. W. P. Hall, Sergeant G. J. Henry, Sergeant J. Holtman.

The first four will be awarded gold medals and the last six silver ones. The Chicago Tribune purse of $100 was won by Sergt. Rose; the Inter Ocean purse of $100 by Sergt. A. C. Austin, Company "E," Fourth infantry; the James S. Kirk purse of $50 by Sergt. Bowerin, Company "E," Fifteenth infantry; the Herald gold medal by Lieut. O'Brien; the Tribune gold medal by Lieut. W. H. Hughes; the Inter Ocean gold medal by Lieut. Ramsey; the Shirley company's gold medal by Lieut. O'Brien; the Montgomery, Ward & Co.'s shotgun by Lieut. Col. Hotchkiss, of the Illinois National Guard.

RUPTURE IN THE ALLIANCE.

A New Non-Political and Anti-Subtreasury Organization.

St. Louis, Sept. 15.—Messrs. W. S. McAllister and U. S. Hall, members of the national executive committee of the Farmers' Alliance, held a conference to-day to consider whether or not the meetings of the antis' convention, which begins to-morrow, will be secret or open. It was decided to hold the convention with open doors and the public is invited to be present.

The decision has been reached to go into a new national organization. The idea is to create an industrial alliance and adopt the policy as to eligibility that will admit a powerful class heretofore excluded from membership. The order is to be non-political. Delegates from Texas, Mississippi, Arkansas and Minnesota have arrived, and every train brings representatives of the anti-subtreasury and anti-third party wing of the Alliance. The probabilities all point to attendance of between 400 and 600 delegates.

The Texas delegation, where the Alliance originated, is a unit for the new organization, and a lot of hard work is being done in that direction. The consensus of opinion seems to be that the new national alliance is a certainty.

STILL UNSETTLED.

Gen. Sanborn May Be Compelled to Take His Case to the Courts.

Washington, Special Telegram, Sept. 15.—The department of justice has not yet rendered an opinion in the case of the claim of Gen. Sanborn to 10 per cent of the Sisseton and Wahpeton money, which he claims as fees.

The whole hinges on the question whether a contract with an Indian dates from the time it is made or from when it is approved by the Indian office. Sanborn's contracts were not approved until five years after they were made. If that is the time they begin he is entitled to the money. The assistant attorney general of the interior department has already held that it was not a contract until approved by the Indian bureau, and consequently dates from approval. The lawyers of the department of justice are finding a very difficult thing to decide, but it is probable that although an opinion will be rendered it will not be final, and the courts will have an opportunity to pass upon the case before it is finally settled.

It is understood that an opinion is now being written which will advise the secretary of the interior that Gen. Sanborn is not entitled to the money, but will recommend that the 10 per cent now withheld from the Indians be still withheld in order to give the general an opportunity to try the case in the courts.

The Title Perfect.

Washington, Special Telegram, Sept. 15.—There is now no trouble about the Sioux Falls, S. D., public building site and the title has been declared perfect. The jurisdiction ceded to the United States is sufficient, although not exactly in conformity with the law of congress, in the matter. There never was any question raised as to Mankato or Fargo, N. D.

Confronted by His Victims.

New York, Sept. 15.—Robert Bell, assistant sexton of Calvary church, was arraigned in the Yorkville police court today, charged with rape, abduction and a revolting crime, and six of his victims, little girls in age from fourteen to sixteen years, confronted him. The story reveals a series of heinous crimes extending over a period of ten months. The prisoner was held for examination.

Legislating Against Prize Fighting.

Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 15.—The upper house of the general assembly passed on third reading to-day the anti-prize fight bill. There was a red-hot discussion but it went through by a big majority. The senate bill making it a high misdemeanor was substituted for the house bill making it a felony.

One Pure Baking Powder.

Like Telling a Secret.

A story is told and it is a true story that over seventy per cent. of all the baking powders sold contain either alum or ammonia, and many of these powders contain both. The ill-effects upon the system of food raised by alum or ammonia powders are the more dangerous because of their insidious character. It would be less dangerous for the people were it fatal at once, for then such food would be avoided, but their baneful action because imperceptible at first and slow in its advances, is no less certain.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is declared by all authorities as free from alum, ammonia or any other adulterant. Its purity has never been questioned, and while it does finer and better work, it costs no more at retail than many of the adulterated powders.

Very little wheat is being marketed here at present the farmers evidently believing in doing their fall work before taking their wheat to market.

Our merchants have been busy lately getting their fall stock of goods marked and in place. They are getting in large stocks and expect a large fall trade.

Those who are well posted say that there will be more frosted wheat in the country this fall than was at first supposed. Very little has been damaged very much.

It would be a good plan for the farmers to get their fire breaks in readiness as it is poor management to allow prairie fires to burn up hay stacks and buildings every fall.

The railroad graders have all moved out of town and are now camping on the line. Work is progressing rapidly and the grade will be finished in thirty days more, when the iron will be laid.

The contractors here claim that it will be almost impossible for the contractor at Red Lake Falls to finish his contract this fall. He has some very heavy cuts and men and teams are very scarce It is thought that the road will not be completed further than the Red Lake River this fall on this account.

Secretary Noble has appointed Otis Staples, Harry Miller, A. C. Rienhart; and Fred Krebs, of Minnesota, G. A. Lawrence, of South Dakota, William Bull, of Virginia and E. L. Brockaway of Wisconsin, to be examiners of timber lands on the White Earth Indian reservation, under the act of January 14 1889.

Artificial frost prevention is now suggested as an outgroth of Senator Farwell's scheme of artificial rain production. L. G. Kniffen, of Chicago, has written a letter to Secretary Rusk on the subject. His theory is that clouds or artificial mists prevent the radiation of the heat from the earth. He suggests that the machinery and materials used by Col. Dyrenforth in causing rain be tested as a means of bringing the clouds closer to the earth and of creating a sort of fog, which will be a preventive against the ravages of frost.

Boston Herald: They seem to be mixing up piety and politics with a good deal of freedom out in Kansas. The formal declaration by the Free Methodist brethren of their indignation of Senator Peffer's statement, that the Farmers' alliance has largely taken the place of the church, is accompanied by a request to the republican leaders that, in view of this repudiation of Peffer, the republicans assist the church in a financial way. Let us unite in prayer for the worldly minded Free Methodists.

The commissioners for the Chicago exposition have visited Stockholm, Gothenberg, Copenhagen and Christiana. From all these they received the kindest assurances that the three countries will participate in the World's fair. The minister of civil affairs in Stockholm stated that Sweden would take part in the World's fair, at Chicago, but the matters remained to be settled was the appropriation. When the commissioners visited Christiana they were greeted royally. The prominent officials and business men gave them their warm support and stated that Norway should be well represented. King Oscar was seen by the commissioners on board his yact, and the Queen and he expressed their joy and sympathy over their success in Norway and Sweden. While in Copenhagen, King Christiana lunched the commissioners and on their departure hoped that the promises made by the prominent men in Copenhagen in regard to Denmark's department would be realized. After a most enjoyable visit in Norway, Sweden and Denmark, the world's fair party left for Berlin.

As a result of our new tariff law many European manufacturers have come to this country and are employing American labor, and they are selling their goods for less than before. Here is one instance: "Our esteemed contemporary, the Dry Goods Chronicle says the plush goods manufactured by the Sir Titus Salt & Co., at Bridgeport, Conn., have already met with signal success, so much so that they are enabled to offer the American goods at 10 per cent discount from last year's prices with a prospect of a further reduction as their help get better accustomed to their work. It is satisfactory to note that the new goods are fully equal to the English make in every respect.—Ex.

Hugh Thompson, of Fisher, has been appointed Register of the Crookston Land office in place of H. H. Dickmann. While we are of the opinion that Mr. Thompson will make a good official, we think the President could have made an appointment which would have done the party more good, at least, Mr. Thompson has been in politics in this part of the state for a long time and while he has made many friends has made plenty of enemies who are resenting his appointment with considerable vigor. The Republican party in this section of the state at present has need for every man and can ill afford a fractional fight, and we think the party's interests would have been better served if a man had been appointed who was not so prominent in the "late unpleasantness."

CHEAP EXCURSIONS.

Let your friends in the east know that the Great Northern will sell round trip tickets August 25th, September 15th and 29th from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and West Superior in connection with eastern lines at reduced rates, See Agent C. W. McKallor for particulars,

Minister Phelps has been appropriately thanked for his services with respect to the reinstatement of American pork in German lands, but the German government would not have acquiesced had it not been for the application of the Blaine retaliatory principle. The obdurate Von Caprivi and the Kaiser suddenly remembered that this country is a pretty large customer for Germany's beet sugar and that a continuance of the exclusion of hog meats would be met by placing the German sugar in the dutiable schedules which would mean that German beet sugar would have to go elsewhere to find a market.

We have been taking sugar from Germany at the rate of about $16,000,000 a year This was too much to throw away and the Kaiser and Von Caprivi, after much profanity, had to yield as to pork.

It was the hand of Blaine which worked this result Ten years ago we shipped $12,000,000 of hog products to Germany. The raising of the embargo means that we shall add at least $15,000,000 a year to our hog meat exports.—Journal.

This is a debt-paying year says the Northwestern Agriculturist. The northwest has a habit of disappointing people who do not expect much of it. For the last two or three seasons it has been paraded in the east as a drouth-stricken region, worthless for agricultural purposes, and yet it has, with the exception of a comparitively small percentage of its acreage, gone right on raising big crops of wheat, and this season almost every county is in line with the largest wheat crop ever grown Not having anything else to say the "calamity" shriekers mourn because the proceeds of the crop go to pay debts. Now there is no better use for money than to pay debts and the fact that the proceeds of one or two crops will pay off all the debts a farmer is likely to incur is one of the best recommendations of this new country. After the crop is sold the farmers of the northwest will owe less money than those of any other state in the Union.

Warren Sheaf.—Senator L. G. Wood returned on Tuesday from the Red Lake Indian reservation where he has spent several weeks examining government surveys and battleing with the aborigines, that is, the mosquitoes. The Senator says that he found the surveys mainly correct, but that the surveyors have been careless in placing the stakes in several townships. Mr. Wood's work has been in the southwestern and southern portions of the reservation extending from range 41 eastware to range 36 north of the 12th standard pareilel, In reply to our query as to the land in that part of the reservation, the senator said that it looked very much like "succotash" all kinds, good, bad and indifferent. Some parts are covered with pine and there are also large tracts of magnificent hardwood timber. Many years ago a great deal of the timber was destroyed by fire and since then a second growth has been destroyed in the same way and these places are now covered with dead and decayed logs lying helter skelter and by a thick underbrush. There are many good localities for stock raising. There are also numerous muskegs that are almost impassible. Mr. Wood visited the Agency at the lake on his way back and says there are many beautiful locations in the vicinity of the lake.

There be "Gold Bugs" and there be "Silver Kings." Just now there is a disposition to boost the latter under the plea of "free coinage of silver." According to the proposed scheme an ounce of silver (480 grains Troy weight) worth 98 cents, coined into dollars without charge, would be equivalent to $1.29. But to the farmer, wage-earner and tradesman the dollar composed of 371¼ grains of silver is worth only about 76 cents. To make the matter plainer, the silver miner or speculator who has 100 ounces of silver bullion can sell it to the government (at current rates) for $98. If the "free coinage of silver project should become law, he could deposite at the mint his 100 ounces of bullion and receive in exchange therefor—without expense to himself—about $129, But the farmer wage-earner or tradesman could only receive 76 cents worth of silver (coined into dollars) for 100 cents of produce or services rendered. In other words (and we desire our readers to test the assertion by the well-known rules of arithmatis] if 480 grains of silver bullion are worth on the market 98 cents, the 371¼ grains of which the silver dollar is composed are worth only about 76 cents; yet it passes current as being worth—that is to say as representing —100 cents! Yet those who clamor for free and unlimited coinage of silver under the existing standard complain of a depression of values and that the products of toil are not adequately requited.—Grand Forks Herald.

CHATS ABOUT MEN.

George Westinghouse, Jr., is a large, good looking man with side whiskers, about forty years of age. He is very affable.

Herr A. Noll, of Beringen, in the Black Forest, has invented a clock warranted to go without winding until A. D. 9999.

Sir Edward Malet will be raised to the peerage very shortly and it is probable that he will choose the title of Lord Woburn.

Henry Ward Beecher's son lives in a charming Queen Anne mansion overlooking Puget sound, upon the outskirts of Port Townsend, Wash.

Leland Stanford is reported to have announced his intention of endowing the University of the Pacific with $20,000,000 over and above its present resources.

Verdi has purchased a piece of land close to Milan on which will be erected an asylum for aged and impoverished musicians. The building is already begun.

Leslie F. Morgan, of London, England, who died lately, left $250,000 to be distributed in four equal shares among the poor or any deserving charities of Philadelphia, St. Louis, Chicago and San Francisco.

Addison Cammack, the Wall street magnate, appreciates the quiet coziness of a country life where there are no fashions to follow or frills to put on. His little cottage at Tuxedo is an illustration of this. It is an unpretentious $100,000 affair.

An adventurous young man named George C. Curry has recently earned a measure of distinction by rowing from Alaska to Vancouver in a dugout. No one had ever attempted to make the journey in this precarious manner before.

Dr. Konrad Brunner, of the University of Zurich, has proved by a series of experiments that micro organisms are discharged through the perspiration as well as through the blood. The bacteria can be seen in the drops of perspiration by means of a microscope.

Count Holstein-Holsteinberg, chief court marshal of the king of Denmark, whose recent marriage with a singer of a dancing hall created such a sensation in Copenhagen, has been placed under guardianship. The count enjoys the respectable age of eighty years.

The son of General Isidro Urtecho, commander in chief of the Nicaraguan army, is the only foreign cadet at West Point. He is a young man of twenty, tall and active, with swarthy skin and flashing black eye. He is a nephew of Minister Guzman, the Nicaraguan representative at Washington.

RAILROAD JOTTINGS.

There are nearly 6,000 pieces in a modern locomotive.

The Wabash, Chicago and Eastern Illinois and the Peoria, Decatur and Evansville railroads will build at Sullivan, Ills., a union depot of stone.

General Manager Robinson, of the Atlantic and Pacific railroad, has resigned. He will assume charge of the San Antonio and Aransas Pass railroad.

A Brooklyn cable road has employed a welding machine to join the sections of its cable, and it has been found that the tensile strength of the cable is greater at such junctions than anywhere else.

A party of New York, Philadelphia and London capitalists inspected the lines of the Northern Adirondack, Carthage and Adirondack and Austin Corbin's railroad, with the view of building a link connecting them with a Canadian property.

In France four stretches of strategical railway have been opened recently. They extend from Aurillac to Saint-Denis-les-Martel, Lons-le-Saulnier to Champagnols, d'Estrees-Saint-Denis to Saint-Just-en-Chaussie, and d'Estrees-Saint-Denis to Fraissy.

One of the London street car companies has in use an automatic "starter." Two powerful spiral springs fastened to the front axle are wound up through being applied for the car's stoppage, so that when it is desired to go on again they are capable of starting it.

The extension of First street, Elizabethport, N. J., across the New Jersey Central's track at its yard was accomplished without trouble. Seventeen tracks are crossed at this point. It was thought that the railroad company would oppose the opening up, but it offered no objection.

AROUND THE THRONES.

Queen Victoria wears the blue ribbon of the Garter.

The crown prince of Roumania has abandoned his proposed marriage to Mlle. Vacaresco.

The Princess Alois Liechtenstein, the beautiful wife of the well known Prince Alois, has become totally blind.

The shah of Persia is an enthusiast with the camera, and takes good pictures with it when he condescends to do so.

The Duchess of Fife is devoted to her little baby and conducts herself like a model mother. She is frequently seen on the streets of Brighton with the infant in her arms.

The usual tipple of the Prince of Wales is a mixture of gin and champagne, which is somewhat of an improvement on Bismarck's favorite shandygaff of beer and champage, and rather more potent as well.

The commander in chief of the British army drives through the Kew gardens and smokes in the plant houses, contrary to the regulations publicly posted in those places, and when reminded of the rules by vigilant attendants he serenely answers, "I am the Duke of Cambridge."

SELECTIONS

THE MYSTERIOUS EMERALD.

Story of a Valuable Gem Picked Up by a Boston Woman on the Common.

There is the theme for a romance in the experience of a Boston lady in the matter of finding a ring about a year since.

She came across the common, and just as she was about to leave it by the Boylston street gate her eyes caught the glitter of a gem on the pavement, and stooping she took up one of the most superb emerald rings ever seen in this part of the globe. It is not necessary to describe it too accurately here since in answer to her advertisements there has been more than one attempt by pretenders to get it fraudulently; but it is sufficient to say that it is literally such a ring as might be the gift of a king. It is the sort of jewel which figures in romances of the Disraeli sort, where no expense is spared, and it was naturally worth a sum of money which to ordinary mortals is something pretty big in any light and really tremendous to have locked up in a single ring.

The lady took the jewel to all the leading dealers in gems in the neighborhood and they all agreed in saying that they had never seen it, but it was impossible that a ring of so much value should long want for an owner. The jewel has been advertised in all the papers, and the finder has kept a careful lookout for advertisements in her turn.

The police and the dealers in gems are fully informed about it, and yet for more than a year the ring has been in her possession without a sign of its owner appearing to claim it. It is true that there have been a number of applications for it, but no one who has come to claim it has been able to come anywhere near a correct description of the ring, and what its history was before it landed in the dust of Boylston street is still a mystery

Since the ring is of so great a value it would be supposed that the owner would endeavor to find it for its pecuniary worth, even though there be no sentimental value attached to it, but nothing of this sort seems to have happened Some day the mystery may be solved but at present there is no clew to prevent the romancer from weaving about the jewel any web of fancy which his brain can spin.—Boston Courier.

The North Dakota Cactus.

Several specimens of the cactus plant have been obtained from the prairie by amateur botanists. The general impression prevails that this strictly American shrub is a native of tropical countries and of arid, sandy regions, but as long ago as the Lewis & Clarke expedition this fallacy was exploded by the discovery of cacti in even higher latitudes than this. Darwin refers to the fact that the cactus plant grows in 47 degs. south latitude, and he describes a specimen which he found in the cold and inhospitable climate of Patagonia.

The cactus which is found in North Dakota is a small species, growing low on the ground, seldom exceeding two or three inches in diameter. The most noticeable feature is the flower, which is of a beautiful pink color, about the size of a half dollar, and spreads out over the center of the prickly and spiney surface of the plant. The flower is short lived, and in several of the night flowering species endures only for a single night.

In the cactus the spines take the place of leaves. The multiplicity of its forms exceed the imagination. Several species grow on the trees and some flourish near the snow line on mountains. The plants of this order where they chiefly abound are tapped by Indians and the insipid but wholesome juice is drank by both men and animals.—Jamestown (N. D.) Alert.

Churches That Recognize Women.

The Baptist church, except the Free Will Baptist division, has taken no steps looking to the admission of women to its ministry. The Presbyterian church has been very conservative in the matter, but in 1889, at a synod of the Reformed Presbyterians, it was voted that the ordination of a woman is in harmony with the New Testament. The Protestant Episcopal church has women as lay readers, deaconesses and members of sisterhoods. The recent opening of the Hartford Theological seminary (Congregational), and the fact that last year Oberlin college, which graduated Antoinette B. Blackwell forty years ago, printed her name for the first time in its list of graduates in its triennial catalogue, are regarded by some people who believe in the ministry of women as noteworthy signs of the times.—Chicago Tribune.

Electricity and the Bicycle.

A mechanical genius is at work on an interesting bicycle attachment. A small electric machine is to be placed under the saddle, and operated by a connector with the tire. The electricity thus generated is reserved in a storage battery and used to assist the rider in climbing hills. No power is lost, as the device is to be so arranged that the connection with the tire can be made when descending the hills. This acts as a brake and utilizes the surplus energy. The contrivance is not intended to be powerful enough to drive the machine alone, but will furnish enough assistance to the rider to make hill climbing very easy.—Boston Herald.

An Ox's Queer Predicament.

A few days ago a Georgia veterinarian was called upon to extricate an ox from a singular predicament. The ox had poked his tongue through one of the rings on a bridle bit and got it fastened about the middle. His tongue began to swell, and he came near choking to death. The ring, which had to be filed off, was not more than an inch and a quarter in diameter, and the surgeon cannot understand how the animal got so much of his tongue through so small a space.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Cure for Ague.

No disease has given rise to a more numerous and curious catalogue of charms than the ague. A common practice was to run nine times through a circle formed by a brier that grew in that direction. This was no doubt a Druidical ceremony, nine being the mystic number of high antiquity. A spider given, unknown, to the patent was a favorite remedy with some persons.—London Tit-Bits.

As Shown.

"Music," said the eminent pianist, as the reporter to whom he had kindly accorded an interview ran his pencil rapidly over the paper, "is the most elevating of sciences. It moves the deeps of one's nature, refines the sensibilities and enlarges the heart. It—what were you about to ask?"

"I should like to know, sir, how you regard the distinguished virtuoso, Professor von Bergstein, as a musician."

"He is nothing, sir, but a cheap, vile imitator, a base counterfeit, a tenth rate keyboard banger, sir!" exclaimed the eminent musician, scowling fiercely. —Chicago Tribune.

Very Serious.

Old Lady—Doctor, do you think there is anything the matter with my lungs?

Physician (after a careful examination)—I find, madam, that your lungs are in a normal condition.

Old Lady (with a sigh of resignation) —And about how long can I expect to live with them in that condition?—Pharmaceutical Era.

A Surprise.

"Did you hear that banker Meyer has failed? The one whose daughter has just married a count? He's utterly ruined."

"You don't say. Won't the count be astonished when he finds that he has married Miss Meyer for love!"—Fliegende Blatter.

Not So Very Lucky After All.

Triumphant Husband—Just see this fish I caught.

Skeptical Wife—Now that fish are so cheap, Charles, I really think you should have caught two at least.—Texas Siftings.

Naturally.

Simmons—You say things are high in Lima, but there is a place where they are a good deal higher.

Chronic Kicker—Don't believe it. Where?

Simmons—Pike's Peak.—Lima Times.

Bicycle and Trotting Horses.

The mile record of the trotter, Maud S, may be beaten by a bicyclist before it is toppled over by a horse. It is six years since the 2:08¾ mark was made at Cleveland, and, judging by the present outlook, the record will stand undisturbed during the year 1891. On the other hand, the bicyclists have been each year clipping off the seconds, until now the best English record has reached something like 2:16. But in 1885 we all thought Howell was doing something wonderful when he made his mile in 2:43 over the Hampden Park bicycle track in this city. While the horses have been at a standstill the men have advanced by over twenty seconds.—Springfield Republican.

How to Roll an Umbrella.

"Certainly, but you don't need any," said a salesman in a Chapel street store recently, to a customer who had just bought an umbrella, and who had asked for a rubber ring.

"But I want to keep the ends of the ribs from spreading when the umbrella is rolled up," and the customer held up for inspection the umbrella he had just rolled.

"Let me show you," said the salesman, as he unfastened the band and shook out the folds. Grasping the stick so that his right hand held the ends close to the wood, he began folding the silk with the curve of his left hand. Whenever he gave the umbrella a turn he kept the ribs in their original position, and when the rolling was complete, he held up the umbrella, and showed that the metal tips pressed as closely to the stick as if riveted in place.—New Haven Palladium.

Ruvel Dumski, an Austrian, aged 41 years, was among the steerage passengers who arrived at New York by the steamer Spaarn Dam. On being examined at the barge office it was found that he had in his possession $10,000. The average amount of money possessed by steerage passengers is between $5 and $10.

A DEAD SHOT

right at the seat of difficulty, is accomplished by the sure and steady aim of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Don't fool around with a pop-gun, nor a "Flint-lock," when this reliable "Winchester" is within reach!

Dr. Sage's treatment of Catarrh in the Head is far superior to the ordinary, and when directions are reasonably well followed, results in a permanent cure. Don't longer be indifferent to the verified claims of this unfailing Remedy.

The worst forms of Catarrh disappear with the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties effect a perfect and permanent cure, no matter how bad the case, or of how long standing. It's a remedy that succeeds where everything else has failed. Thousands of such cases can be pointed out. That's the reason its makers back their faith in it with money. They offer $500 reward for a case of Catarrh which they cannot cure.

It's a medicine that allows them to take such a risk.

Doesn't common sense lead you to take such a medicine?

"An advertising fake" you say.

Funny, isn't it, how some people prefer sickness to health when the remedy is positive and the guarantee absolute.

Wise men don't put money back of "fakes." And "faking" doesn't pay.

Real Estate is the Basis of all Wealth.

AN INVESTMENT THAT WILL NET

20% to 30%

99 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money. 87 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center; has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now pre-eminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland.

MEMORIES.

How often trifles remind us
Of the old days long passed by;
And how often we live them over
In dreams dispelled with a sigh.

How the sight of an old worn letter
And it's loving words within
Will recall the sad, sad story,
The story that "might have been."

And oft as we sit by the fireside
Watching its dancing flame,
Something hovers about and whispers
An old familiar name.

A name that was once so enchanting
'Twas like the lay of the morn,
When in vapors all laden with perfume
To the rising sun is borne.

Then again in the glow of the blaze
A vision haunts our brain,
And whirls us back to our childhood,
Unspotted from worldly stain.

Thus lost in the book of memory
We turn each faded leaf,
While mournfully rustling they fill us,
With feelings akin to grief.

Yet we cling to the fragile thread
That holds us to those days,
Before fate's curtain had risen
On the scene of life's sad plays.

But soon the spell is broken
Tho' the hot tears fill our eyes,
And the past seems clothed in sorrow
But that sorrow makes us wise.

WRECKED IN A CAVE.

A True Story of Newfoundland.

BY S. G. W. BENJAMIN.

THERE were six schooners at Petipas ready to put to sea. Petipas is the trading settlement at the head of navigation in the Bay of Islands on the west coast of Newfoundland. It was already late in the season, and if those schooners delayed there much longer they would have to remain all winter, as there is no navigation there after the autumnal storms begin; the harbors are few and the entire coast is rocky, one great cliff, offering not shelter, but only destruction.

Yes, it was high time for those six schooners to start for home. The wind was at the north-east and fair for them, although the sky was overcast, and out in the gulf it was doubtless blowing hard. But if they could once get clear of the land before the wind shifted to the west, as it was sure to do, they could manage to work their way home. Anyway, this was their chance, and they had to risk it. He who goes to sea must be ready to take risks. No fair-weather sailor ever succeeded in his vocation.

The six schooners started in a bunch, and the rapid current, with the fitful squalls, took them past the narrows into the middle of the Bay of Islands. Had the wind held they would have cleared the land long before night. But the tremendous cliffs which surrounded them often shut off the wind, which would again sweep out of the narrow gulches with the quickness and force of a cannon-ball. Under the vast cliffs of Blamidan the squalls and calms were exceedingly trying.

What made the matter worse the wind was gradually shifting to the south, which showed that it was working around to the west, the very thing the skippers of the little fleet most dreaded.

Late in the afternoon the schooners found themselves near Ouibal, or Guernsey Island, an inaccessible rock 1,300 feet high, which stands just in the entrance of the Bay of Islands. There is a passage on either side, although the southern channel is preferred. The question for each captain to decide now was which passage to take. From habit as much as any reason five of the schooners took the southern passage. The Sea Foam took the northern channel, and the schooners parted never to meet again. Every one of these five schooners were lost that night with all on board. Jack Fowler was on the Sea Foam. His father was captain and part owner of the stanch little clipper. He was as smart a man as ever sailed a schooner on the Gulf of Lawrence. It was the custom at the opening of the season to load up his vessel with "notions" and start on a trading cruise on the coast of Newfoundland. In the hold were barrels of flour, kerosene oil, rice, oatmeal, fishing nets and the like. The cabin was fitted with shelves like a country grocery store, and it was packed with ginghams, sea boots, oil coats, woolen caps, hoods, thread and needles, looking glasses, combs and brushes, fish-hooks, cheap dolls, jewsharps, accordions, plug tobacco, three-for-a-cent cigars, and in fact, every sort of knick-knack likely to be needed by the simple folk in that out-of-the-way corner of the world. There was also good store of poor tea and ardent spirits. On dropping anchor in port Captain Fowler would hire the largest available room and give a dance that would be the sensation of the season in the settlement. Thus a pleasant understanding would come about and a brisk trade would follow; he took his pay chiefly in salt fish.

The trade that year had been good and the hold of the Sea Foam was well loaded. There was a good store of silver in the captain's chest as well, and he looked forward with lively satisfaction to a comfortable winter at home with his family. He had never stayed as late as this in Newfoundland, perhaps because he had a larger vessel than usual and more goods to dispose of. It was intensely dark when the Sea Foam finally cleared the vast, vague mass of Guernsey Island, whose head was wrapped in driving scud. There was a furious tumult among the clouds in midair as the little schooner met the mighty swell rolling in from the west. A gale of wind was piping up from the south; the gloom was appalling; a spiteful dash of rain occasionally added to the wilderness of the scene. The only ray of hope seemed to be in the northwest, where a streak of clear sky on the horizon; a mere seam under the brooding canopy of night and storm, promised fair weather. But to the experienced eye of Captain Fowler that streak of light was filled with inexpressible dread. At that season of the year following a northeaster it meant to them in that spot a tempest, a lee shore, and in all probability destruction.

The Sea Foam ought to have been under close reefs. But a press of sail was carried on her with the hope of making an offing before a shift of the wind. She leaped from wave to wave like a mad steed, buried in a smother of foam that swept the decks fore and aft and shook every timber in the ship. Her lee rail was awash; every rope and timber and spar creaked and groaned under the pressure. Not an eye on board was closed. The westerly swell making a cross-sea with the southerly surge showed that a shift of the wind could not long be deferred. And when it came how many of them would see another dawn.

When the schooner had cleared the northern head of the Bay of Islands Captain Fowler eased her off a point or two to the north'ard to increase her headway. His aim was to place a safe distance between them and the land. If they could but hold that course until after midnight they might then in case of an emergency be able to run for the Straits of Belle Isle. But we can never quite tell when the southwester will shift northwest and what will be the force of the latter.

Jack was on deck clinging with a firm grip on the companionway. He did his share at steering and handling the sails, but just then there was nothing to be done but watch and wait. He was somewhat anxious, but not half as anxious as his father, for he was too young as yet fully to realize the power and the terror of the seas.

There came a stronger blast than usual, and a smart shower. The change of wind was at hand. The schooner lay over almost on her beam ends.

"Luff," cried the captain; then rang out the order to shorten sail instantly. The bonnet was taken off the jib, the fore and main sails were close reefed. It was a hard job and done none too soon. For hardly had everything been made snug when there came a very heavy shower, followed by a lull. For a moment there was a dead calm. The little vessel wallowed helplessly, and nothing was heard but the dreary wash of the sea.

But the light streak in the west was broadening rapidly. The lower edge of the rising mass of clouds was fringed with a thin, ragged mist and smoke, indicating a violent agitation of the elements.

Captain Fowler sprang to the helm himself and cried, "Ease off your mainsheet; flatten your weather jib sheet." A cold puff from the west shuddered through the west sails.

"Let go the foresale; lively there, boys, lively!" Hardly were the words out of his mouth when a roar was heard approaching the ship like a thunder of a cataract. The men sprang to the ropes, and as the foresail came down a terrific blast struck the schooner and laid her side under to the hatches. She all but went over. As she gathered way Captain Fowler eased her by slowly putting down the helm as she leaped away with the fury of a fiend.

The wind and sea arose. It became impossible to carry anything but trysails. But even with those there was no hope; and when the mainmast parted near the partners the game was indeed up. The plaything of the storm, swept by every sea, the schooner drifted swiftly toward the land. The deadly boom of the surf roaring down above the howling wind soon announced the vicinity of the implacable cliffs. In a few moments the fated men on the schooner expected to be beaten to death on the rocks.

There came a tremendous breaker. It lifted the doomed ship on its mighty shoulders and rushed with it toward the land. The cliffs literally towered overhead. But when the crew gave themselves up for lost the surge suddenly retired and the ship settled down on a ledge above the rest of the shore within a vast cavity in the face of the precipice. To their amazement when day broke the crew found their vessel comparatively uninjured. The waves came into the cave, but rarely with their full force. The first sensation of all on board was one of relief and gratitude. They were all safe but two, who had been washed overboard and lost. But when they were able to examine their situation, more calmly despair took the place of hope. They were surrounded with inaccessible cliffs. Far as they could see north and south the land stretched away like a stupendous wall.

There was no access by the shore, for there was no beach to speak of, and their boats had both been lost. Ships never passed during the winter. The only prospect before them was to exist in that horrible situation until spring. What fearful sufferings were before them with all the rigors of cold and starvation! Would any of them live to see another spring?

And yet to think that only a few miles away, perhaps only a few rods on the cliff above them human beings were living who might devise some way to save them if they knew! So in our very cities men and women die of suffering and want which might be relieved by those living in the next street if they but knew!

The only thing to be done was to take account of all the provisions on the schooner and proceed at once to arrange matters for a long, hard winter.

The vessel was victualled for only a few days, and they had expected to get across to Nova Scotia in that time, and what provisions they had were damaged by the sea. Some of the codfish in the hold remained unsoaked by the sea, some biscuit, a little salt beef and pork and half a barrel of flour. There was some tea, but this was little use without water, and of that the supply was scanty. There was a small stock of spirits, which was reserved as a last resort. What gave them perhaps the most apprehension was the question of fuel, of which there was very little left. How long would the spars and ship timbers hold out against the severity of winter?

Captain Fowler made a careful calculation of everything. Each article was measured off into daily rations. This distribution all agreed to abide by. Jack was also appointed to keep the log and each day to make note of what passed, even if only to set down the date.

There was a Bible and a prayer-book on board, which had not been often read. But the solemnity of the occasion caused them to reflect as they had never done before, and every morning and evening a chapter was read with prayers. The supply of candles and oil was so short that most of the long evenings they sat and talked in the dark around the stove. The fuel gave out in December and they began to break up the spars and fore part of the ship for wood.

Christmas and New Year's were anything but festive days. This little band of lonely men did their best to be cheerful. On Christmas the last of the flour was made into a plum duff that was conspicuous for the absence of plums. They drank in whiskey to the health of the folks at home, but on the whole they were glad when the day was done. Early in January the mate, made desperate by these terrible hardships, thought he would try to reach some accessible spot where he might climb the cliff by walking on the ice. He was never seen again. Another of the men soon yielded to a chronic disease. This left only three survivors. The supply of water gave out early, but as long as they were able to keep up a fire they could melt the snow which drifted into the cave and robed the vessel in a mantle of ermine. But for this resource they would all have perished before Christmas, and perhaps it would have been better for them if it had been so.

In February they had the good luck to kill a pair of seals which ventured too near the ship on the ice. This supply of fresh meat kept them alive awhile longer. But their hardships told fearfully on the three who remained, and in March the cook died.

Jack and his father alone remained. Jack had an iron constitution and inexhaustible hope. But for him his father might have died earlier. He lived for his son. The open season was now approaching, and although near the last gasp, he might have weathered these cruel sufferings if he had not been struck down by a piece of rock falling from overhead. This was, as it were, the last straw. He lingered in his berth, tenderly nursed by his heroic boy. April had come and if he could only live a few days, a few hours more, help would come to them. But it was of no avail to care about him his strength was ended.

"Jack," said he, calling the boy to his side and feebly grasping his hand, "Jack, my boy, you will live to see them at home again; tell them I thought of them to the last. Be good to your mother. God bless you."

"Oh, father, not yet; not yet; you will be all right again, I know you will. I am sure we shall be saved yet," sobbed Jack, with streaming eyes. But while he spoke a slight spasm shook his father's frame, and he passed away with a deep, gasping sigh. For the first time Jack gave up all hope. Who would not, situated as he was? It was appalling. Without strength, without food, without fire, alone with the dead. The second day after his father's death, Jack lay on the cabin floor wrapped in a blanket, his emaciated hand clinched over his last biscuit, and his teeth set in the last agony. A noise was heard and then an old man and a boy stepped into the cabin. They started back in amazement and horror.

Then recovering themselves they approached and found Jack still breathing. The old man pulled out a flask and poured a few drops down his throat. They also chafed Jack's hands and feet. The boy then went out and in a few minutes brought back some warm tea, and a little porridge from the cuddy in their fishing boat. It is enough to add that Jack was brought back to life just at the moment when his soul was fluttering on the bounds of the spirit world. The spring had returned indeed, but after what a winter.

The Old Santa Fe Trail.

Thirty-five years after Columbus discovered this continent Alva Nunez Cabeza de Vaca sailed from Spain and landed in Florida, or in the region now called by that name. From there he made a wonderful overland journey to the City of Mexico. On that journey a part of the way he traversed a route which ever since has found great favor with travelers to New Mexico. Just think of it! There is a road 800 miles long, rising so imperceptibly for over 600 miles of the distance as to seem absolutely level, and without a single bridge from end to end! What wonderful tales that road could tell—of the bearded followers of de Vaca, thin and worn by privation and the fatigue of their long journey through a wilderness until then pathless—of the after settlement of the neighborhood by the Spaniards—of the coming of the hardy American pioneer, traders, soldiers, settlers and last, but most important of all, the railroad engineers. Many an exploit of soldiers, scout and Indian warrior has that ancient trail witnessed. Phil Kearney knew it well, for had he not fought over nearly its entire length? Kit Carson achieved much of his fame in its vicinity, and in the early fifties F. X. Aubrey, a young man, made a famous ride against time over the same route, from Santa Fe to Independence, Mo.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Elephant's Memory.

The elephant has an excellent memory. It recollects friends well and it rarely forgets an injury. It is recorded of one that it smashed a coconaut upon its driver's head, and smashed the man's head at the same time because the lazy, thoughtless fellow had broken a coconaut on its skull the day before. A quartermaster engaged in superintending the removal of baggage in the camp by means of an elephant, became angry at the creature's refusing to carry more than a certain weight, and foolishly flung a tent peg at its head. Some days afterward the elephant overtook the quartermaster as he was going through the camp, seized him with its trunk and neatly placed him among the branches of a tamarind tree, leaving him to reach the ground again in the best way he could.

Got His Discharge.

A most remarkable incident has occurred at the City Hospital. It is the custom there every afternoon at 2 o'clock for one of the clerks to visit the various wards and tell the patients who are able to go home that they are discharged. Several days ago the clerk entered M ward, and, walking to the side of Henry Juelg's cot, said: "You can go out today. Your name is on the discharge list." Juelg who was suffering from heart disease, leaned upon his elbow, and turning to Dr. Wolf, who was standing near by, asked in an anxious tone: "Doctor, am I discharged?" "Why, no," was the answer, "you are not well enough." Before the physician could utter another word the patient dropped back—dead.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

FRENCH REPARTEE.

Some Clever Answers By Clever Frenchmen.

The late Chinese Minister in Paris is credited with a reply as skillful as it was courteous to a great lady who besieged him with questions concerning his creed. He evaded them adroitly until she demanded to know whether it was true that his religion permitted a plurality of wives.

"Of necessity, madame," he replied, "a man must have several wives in order to secure all the virtues which are nowhere combined but in you."

The lady blushed and smiled, but was silenced. Less civil was the answer of the young French minister who, while preaching in a chapel in a French hamlet, where the men sat on one side of the aisle and the women on the other, was annoyed by the sound of whispering and paused in his sermon to reprove it.

"Your reverence will observe," interposed the principal woman that it comes from the men's side."

"So much the better, madame. It will end, then, some time."

A sharp reply or a finely-turned bon mot is never forgotten in France. It is a treasure in which the people take eager delight, as do other people in their crown jewels. Someone who had a keen perception of national characteristics referred to this trait when he said: "In Spain men ask of a new-comer. 'What is his birth? In Germany, 'What has he read? In France, 'What has he said? In Holland,' How much money has he? 'In Great Britian, 'Is he English? And in America, 'What kind of a man is he?'"

"Who are these?" asked Louis Philippe, when several fat noblemen seeking places at Court kept bowing low before him.

"Only jugs, your Majesty," was the answer, "that are lowered in order to be filled."

Tough on the Couple.

A pretty girl from out of town had been staying for some time with a young lady friend in Buffalo, and as the time for her departure drew nigh a young man from out of town turned up and volunteered to attend the young girl on her homeward journey. The hostess put up a liberal lunch for the travelers and then filled in all the crevices with rice. She also put some in the young man's coat pockets, slid some into the young lady's parasol, and likewise deposited some in the depths of the young man's umbrella. Both boarded the train without noticing these suggestive additions to their traps. The result is not yet known, but as the young man is slightly bashful and the young lady is known to blush on slight provocation, the consequences, when the rice fell all over the car floor, can be imagined.—[Buffalo Enquirer.

Ex-Gov. James A. Beaver, of Pennsylvania Gen. D. H. Hastings and other Eastern capitalists have formed a company to manufacture a new fuel gas the, invention of James R. Ross, of Allegheny City. By the new process it is claimed that gas can be made for five cents per 1,000 feet and that iron can be puddled for $1 per ton. Andrew Carnegie has secured the right for the process.

How About Your Mother?

Scrofula or Kings Evil is the most stubborn of all Skin affections. Whether inherited or otherwise, it is a blood disease and cannot be permanently cured by anything but S. S. S.

A GRATEFUL DAUGHTER.

My mother was sorely afflicted with Scrofula for three years and a half; during that time the glands on her neck burst open in five places. Three of the openings were small and healed right up, but the other two would fill up and break open anew, about every two weeks, always causing severe pain and often prostration. She was so reduced in strength, that tonics and cocoa wines had to be generously used to keep her alive. She commenced taking S. S. S., and improved from the start; the first bottle gave her an appetite and by the time she finished the fourth bottle her neck healed up. She is now entirely well. Mrs. E. J. Rowell, Medford, Mass.

WINGED MONSTERS.

A Remarkable Bird Seen Recently in California.

At the last meeting of the Amalgamated Association of Fish Liars the member from the north side who goes out twice a year with rod and gun but never unpacks the former, asked and received permission to read the following from San Francisco: "A well-authenticated story comes from Selma, Fresno County, of the appearance at that place of two huge-winged monsters that resemble the fabled dragon. They live on ducks and chickens and have been seen by a score of persons. One party watched for them on several nights and at last got a close view. The birds are said to have wings fully twelve feet long. Their bodies are six feet high when they walk about. They are not covered with feathers, and instead of a bill they have a hogs snout, with sharp teeth. Watchers saw two birds descend to a pond and chase mud hens in among the grass, crunching and devouring those they caught. Their eyes are very prominent. As soon as the men could get a shot they fired. One bird was wounded, but escaped by running through the marshes. The track which it left was like an alligator's, with five toes and strong claws on each foot. The track is eleven inches wide and nineteen long. It is thought the birds might be survivors of extinct species like the pterodactyl which lived on the shores of Tulare Lake, which has never been thoroughly explored."

Sight Restored at Ninety-Five.

The Welsh newspapers report a remarkable event at the village of Llanon, Cardiganshire, where the Rev. William Herbert, late rector of the parish, entertained 500 of his parishioners at tea in commemoration of the restoration of his eyesight in his 95th year. The reverend gentleman, who is the oldest clergyman in the principality, had held the living of Llanon for half a century. Six years ago, however, he lost his sight and resigned the rectorship in consequence. During the last few months he has been under the treatment of an eminent Manchester oculist, and the cataracts being removed from his eyes, his sight has been completely restored, and he is now enabled to read the service in church.—London Graphic.

NORTHWEST NEWS.

Fears That the Tug, Lady Ellen, Has Been Lost on Lake Winnipeg.

She Had a Sailboat in Tow and Is Eight Days Overdue at Her Destination.

WINNIPEG, Man., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—It is feared the steam tug Lady Ellen has been lost off Long point in Lake Winnipeg. She left Grand Rapids with a sail boat in tow on the morning of Sept. 7 bound for the Little Saskatchewan river and should have reached there on the morning of the 8th, but up to the morning of the 16th there were no tidings of her. The Ogema was sent out that morning to search for her. There were six men on the Lady Ellen and the sail boat, and fears are entertained for their safety.

A Ferocious Storm.

ALEXANDRIA, Minn., Special, Sept. 22.—One of the worst storms ever witnessed in this vicinity occurred Saturday evening. It came up from the southwest, accompanied by rain and hail at 7:30 p. m., and raged with terrible ferocity for an hour. Luckily for the city the path of the storm lay outside and in the northwest, and here its track is marked with all kinds of debris. Gigantic trees are broken like twigs and hurled into the lakes and roads. The woods is a mass of net work caused by fallen branches. Persons coming in and going out of town are obliged to hew their way through. Outbuildings and grain stacks are scattered about and contents ruined. So far nothing has been heard relating to any person being injured. No damage was done in the village.

An Unfortunate Farmer.

ALEXANDRIA, Minn., Special, Sept. 22.—Ole Rollifson, a farmer living near Hoffman, had a narrow escape from instant death, and his present condition is anything but enviable. While passing by the drive belt of a threshing outfit he was caught and carried into the fly wheel. Both arms were broken below the elbow, and so badly lacerated as to render amputation necessary. His right shoulder is dislocated and the shoulder blade fractured. The terrible strain caused strangulation of the bowels, for the relief of which a surgical operation will be necessary. Dr. McEwan, who is attending him, does not think he can survive the double operation.

A Defiant Daughter.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—Ida Hanson, aged sixteen, ran away from home recently. She was arrested in St. Paul last night, and to-day was arraigned here on the charge of larceny, preferred by her own father. He accuses Ida of stealing some money from him the night she fled from home. The girl was very defiant, pleaded not guilty, and was placed in jail to await trial, telling her father that she would make more trouble for him than he could for her. She is a sister of the girl who had Daniel Gurnee arrested on the charge of rape. Gurnee, who is out on bail, is seriously sick in St. Paul.

Ended Her Troubles.

ELDORA, Iowa, Special Telegram, Stpt. 22.—At Ackley yesterday the body of a woman was found hanging in a room in the Commercial house. She is supposed to have come from New York, and had been in Ackley a day or two canvassing for and selling ladies' cloaks. She met with very poor success, and, as a letter was afterwards found in the room where she had hanged herself, it is supposed she was insane. The letter was addressed to the Christian people of Iowa Falls. The contents have not been made public.

The Best Ever Held.

NEW ULM, Minn., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—The Brown county fair closed here this evening after three days of successful show. Over $9,000 were paid out in premiums and the exhibits were among the best ever shown here. Among them were those of the Cosgrove Live Stock company of Le Sueur; Willard & Fuller, owners of the famous coach horses; the Northern Pacific, Jewell Nursery company, and A. W. Latham of the horticultural society.

Careless Driving.

AUSTIN, Minn., Special, Sept. 22.—A party of young people from Lansing, who went out Saturday night to a party north of Rose creek, had just started to return Sunday evening when the wagon was tipped over by careless driving, and the whole load were thrown out. All escaped with slight injuries except Mary Vaughan, aged sixteen, who is badly hurt about the shoulders and neck.

Straight but Strong.

GARY, S. D., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—News has reached this city that a tornado struck the northern part of Duel county, South Dakota, and passed into Lac qui Parle county, Minnesota, unroofing buildings, blowing down barns and scattering grain stacks Saturday. We hear of no lives lost. The gale passed from northeast to southwest. It was not a twister.

The Reservation a Blackened Waste.

MANDAN, N. D., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—The fire which swept over the Sioux reservation Saturday proves to have burned nearly everything in the shape of hay, wheat in stacks, and range from the Cannon Ball river to Moreau river. Parties in town this evening from the scene of the fire say the reservation is a backened waste. So far no fire has done any damage in this county.

OPPOSED BY METHODISTS.

The West Wisconsin Conference Against All Sunday Labor and Amusements.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—It was expected that the West Wisconsin Methodist Episcopal conference would be in sympathy with all moral agencies of the country and that a resolution sympathizing with the World's Columbian association in its crusade against Sunday opening of the world's fair, but it was a surprise to our citizens when in such a resolution the conference said this morning that it was against any and all amusements or anything that might be termed labor on the Sabbath day, such as church or Sunday school picnics, the traveling on the cars of the bishop or elders except in case of extreme necessity, mail service on Sunday and many similar things that to the average man to-day seem like necessities. The present antagonism against the liquor traffic was endorsed and each member of the conference pledged himself to use his utmost endeavors to spread the cause of temperance. The educational progress of the state the past year was reported to have exceeded that of any previous one. An Epworth academy within the boundary of the West Wisconsin conference was recommended and five trustees were named to receive propositions, plans, donations, etc. for such an institution and to report at the next annual conference. Oct. 27 was set apart as a day for "self-denial," and each church member was asked to give on that day 25 cents or more for the cause of home missions.

Rev. J. E. Irish, D. D., was named delegate to visit the Lawrence university during the year. The church extension board reported an expenditure of nearly $4,500,000 for the upbuilding of the Methodist church within the past twenty-five years.

J. D. Searles, W. J. McKay and W. H. Troy were selected a committee to arrange with the East Wisconsin conference for an annual state convention of the Epworth league.

The reports of the officers of the conference were next received, and, after the secretary had read the appointments, the conference adjoured to meet at Dodgeville, Grant county, next September.

COLD WATER POLITICS.

Prohibitionists Cause Trouble in a Republican County Convention.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—One of the hottest Republican conventions in the history of this county was held to-day, and if all the delegates who went way swearing vengeance, continue in the same mind between now and election, the results will be disastrous.

The old chestnut prohibition as usual caused hard feelings, where the play should have been to allay them. The antis had a good working majority, but they were not satisfied with their ability, and applied the gag law.

An attempt to table a resolution reaffirming Republicanism, and congratulating the party on redemption of its pledges, was made because it was introduced by Hon. Robert Buchanan, who fought resubmission in the last legislature.

Met Instant Death.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—Rolla Swyer, employe of the Daniel Shaw Lumber company, fell from a wagon load of shingles to-day. Two wheels passed over his chest and killed him almost instantly.

Jumped His Bail.

MILLER, S. D., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—Dellef Strellion, the German held in $1,000 on the charge of rape, has made his escape, and his bondsmen will have to pay the $1,000 to the county.

Wife Murder and Suicide.

PORT ANGELES, Wash., Sept. 22.—Last night August W. Shultz shot and killed his wife and then blew his own brains out. The couple had lived very unhappily together for two years past, and Mrs. Shultz recently applied for a divorce.

Attempted Wholesale Murder.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., Sept. 22.—Lewis York, said to be an insane anarchist, attempted to commit wholesale murder yesterday. Several young women were visiting at York's, and in the afternoon two gentlemen called. York went into the cellar and ignited a fuse attached to a jug containing dynamite. A terrible explosion followed, which broke the window glass, tore off boards and demolished the floor. The greater force was spent downward, and the lives of those above were saved. It is said that York will be placed in confinement.

Mrs. Fitzsimmons on Trial.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 22.—The trial of Mrs. Lucy Fitzsimmons in the celebrated murder case in which she, with her husband, Frank C. Fitzsimmons, who escaped from jail here last Monday, killed Defective Gilkinson Maach 24, 1891, began in the criminal court here to-day. The police officials have as yet no trace of her escaped husband.

A Cyprian's Fatal Overdose.

PIERRE, S. D., Special Telegram, Sept. 22.—Julia Rivers, a woman of the town, was found dead in her house Sunday evening. The coroner's inquest showed she had met death by accidentally taking an overdose of morphine. Deceased was an educated and formerly a beautiful woman, and had prominent relatives living in Chicago.

Drowned in a Mine.

NEGAUNEE, Mich., Sept. 22.—Sarah Ackin, a young Finnish girl, was discovered drowned Saturday in the Grand Central mine. The coroner's inquest is in session and the evidence given points to foul play. Sensational disclosures are expected.

Wheat is being marketed very rapidly in many parts of the valley but very little is being sold here. Only two cars have been shipped so far, the farmers evidently preferring to do their fall work before marketing their grain. The poor roads also help keep it back.

We notice that our editorial brother H. E. Mussey, of the Thief River Falls Press, has lately been honored by the village council of Thief River Falls by being appointed President of the village We extend our congratulations to President Mussey and hope other promotions will follow.

MINNEAPOLIS EXPOSITION.
AUG. 25 TO SEPT. 26.

Reduced rates via the Great Northern Railway every Tuesday and Friday, beginning August 25th, and daily from September 5th to 12th.

Mike Johnson had the misfortune to have a couple of fingers cut off last Monday by the gearing of a threshing engine. He is a brother of Oliver Johnson who was killed a couple of weeks ago in North Dakota by falling head first into the cylinder of a separator while feeding. Both boys were well known here having been members of the base ball club.

About the boldest theft on record is that of a Kansas man who employed a steam threshing outfit, men and wagons and removed a crop of wheat from a farm, sold it and walked off with the money—about $1000—in his pocket without anybody suspecting that he was not the rightful owner of the wheat and not satisfied with stealing the wheat he left without paying the men who helped him handle it.

Minnesota will get her school lands in the ceded Red Lake and Chippewa reservations as requested by Senator Davis. Commissioner Carter has addressed a letter to Senator Davis, going into the case in all its details, in which several court decisions are cited as well as decisions by previous commissioners of the general land office and a former secretary of the interior, in which the points raised were almost identical to those raised by Senator Davis.

The price of wheat has been steadily climbing, the past week and No. 1 hard is now worth 80 cents here. Enormous quantities are being marketed, more than ever before at this time of the year but the prices still hold firm. The European demand will be great but we have the largest crop on record. Some claim that wheat will sell for $2.00 a bushel before spring, while others claim it will go considerable lower. While we do not look for big prices we still believe that the farmer should hold his wheat if it be of a good quality, for at least 80 cents a bushel. It may go much higher but we are of the opinion that Europe cannot use our wheat at a much higher price. The best thing for the farmer to do, however, is to look the subject carefully over and decide for himself.

Buffalo Express: Already Nemesis is at work. Famine is sorely pressing the people. Persecution of the Jews has prevented the merchants of that class from buying the growing crops and advancing money for harvesting expenses. The result is that the embarrassed grain growers have been unable to harvest more than an infinitesimal portion of their crops, With famine staring the nation in the face the agrarian discontent will so increase that outbreaks of the most violent kind seem inevitable. Then may be the opportunity of the revolutionary leaders. But the army will be fed, and the army in Russia is practically the throne of the czar.

The chigger may chig with all his might and the mocking bird mock and sing, but Minnesota takes the cake—the wheat, you bet is king. The cricket may crick, and the froglet frog, and the farmer may chant his strain; for the Minnesota crop is always on top—when plenty there is rain. The chinch bug may chinch, the grasshopper hop, and the hot winds make you tire; but if any one says there are such things here just call him a condemned liar. Oklahoma may boom, and Texas may howl, and Washington shoot off her chop, but this is a place to get a new home and raise an extra big crop.—Marshall Messenger

Keep your eye on the newspapers and see what merchants want your custom and think it worth while to invite you to call. There is more in advertising than you may think. It is not only to mention his goods and prices that a merchant advertises, but it is to invite people who read—the thinking, the intelligent—to pay him a visit and judge for themselves as to the quality and price of what he offers for sale. People read the advertisements. Don't make any mistake about that. Specialties cannot be quickly sold or a new business established in any other way. Purchasers are just as much interested in knowing where to buy to advantage as the advertiser is in selling his goods.—LeSueur News,

Fisher Bulletin: A circular has been issued at Minneapolis urging farmers to hold back their wheat, as sufficient evidence has been received at headquarters that a substantial advance will materialize in a very short time. The circular asserts in a positive manner that the shortage in Europe will necessitate the shipment from the United States of more than two hundred million bushels of wheat, and it will not make much difference how low prices start in, for wheat will soon be over $1.50 no matter how much the farmers and speculators may work together to keep prices down. The circular closes with the following advice: "Remember that the shortage in Europe will be four times as large as our surplus; hold your wheat, you cannot get left; wheat is cheap at $1.50 this year you will soon see it at $2." The contents of the circular presents a rosy hue to the farmer but the document may be the effusion of a bull element that is working for a rise in the wheat market.

Crookston Times: A post office inspector was here a short time ago, and after looking the ground over advised that the Carman post office be discontinued and the free delivery system inaugurated in both Crookston and Carman. Postmaster Dawley has been consulted about the matter and has recommended the change. The discontinuance of the Carman office will not, as has been asserted, increase the salery of the Crookston postmaster. This office is now a second class office and the addition of the Carman business will not affect it one way or another except to make more work for the postmaster. Mr. Dawley, however, is anxious to see the free delivery system inaugurated, and is willing to assume the extra duties in order that this may be done. There is we understand, very little opposition from Carman to the proposed change. Indeed, the residents of the Fifth ward would be benefited by it, as the free delivery system would be of more benefit to them, than to have an additional post office over there. Under these circumstances it is more than probable that the change will be made, and in a few months the free delivery system will be in vogue here.

Our Democratic friends pooh at reciprocity on the plea that it is a humbug that will accomplish nothing. England, with its tale of distress at the blows dealt its industries by American reciprocity, has been heard from. Now Germany speaks. The Berlin Export, the official organ of the German exporters, pays the American policy of reciprocity this tribute.

"Mr. Blaine's diplomatic dexterity has made Brazil a real domain of the North. European wishes and remonstrances could not get a hearing in Rio de Janeiro. The exporting countries of Europe have lost vast well paying market territories. Several moths ago American diplomats tried to convince Spain of the necessity of signing a treaty with the United States by which Cuba and Porto Rico would be protected against the workings of the McKinley law. The Spanish government put up many obstacles, but the Yankee was sure of his victory in the end and Spain being afraid that Cuba may free herself from the European yoke, yielded. According to the reciprocity treaty, sugar honey, hides and coffee from Cuba and Porto Rico may enter free into the United States, while tobacco and iron ore have to pay the duty laid down in the McKinley law. This shows that the United States lets in free only such articles as it cannot produce or at least not in sufficient quantity, Everything it produces itself is protected carefully. The Yankees hold a weighty weapon in their hands by which they will commercially conquer all Spanish America A gloomy prospect for the exporting industries of Europe."

Our German competitors therefore see as a result of reciprocity—"Brazil a real dominion of the North"—the Yankees with "a mighty weapon" with which "they will commercially conquer all Spanish America"—and finally, "a gloomy prospect for the exporting industries of Europe." This does not look much like failure or humbug. Reciprocity is already at work, and Europe is on her marrow bones.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Chicago News: There are very few strong minded men who would today indorse the fiat greenbackism of 1873. Yet many of these same men are in favor of the free coinage of silver. The reason they are opposed to one idea and in favor of the other is because they do not realize that they are practically one and the same thing. Here is how the case stands: The quotations of silver today indicate that the silver in a silver dollar is worth 76 cents. The material in a paper dollar may be worth somewhere near one cent. The old-time greenbacker proposed to make the piece of paper "one dollar" by legislation alone. The modern silverites propose that 76 cents worth of silver shall be one dollar. That is all the difference there is between the greenback and the silver ideas. It is true the silver dollar would contain more intrinsic value than the paper dollar, But the silver dollar cannot assume to rest on the metal value of the silver of which it is composed. If it does so it cannot claim more than its bullion value or that it is really but 76 cents. The silverite may not be willing to admit that he is a fiatist, but he cannot deny that he is 33 per cent fiatist.

HUMOR

CONSULTING THE DICTIONARY.

Mrs. McSwat Looks for That Word, but Alas!

"Lobelia, is the dictionary handy?"

Sitting in his cushioned armchair, with his feet comfortably resting on another chair and a newspaper lying across his lap, Mr. Billiger McSwat addressed this question to his wife, who sat near the bookcase.

"Yes," replied Mrs. McSwat.

"If it isn't too much trouble I wish you would look for the pronunciation of the word 'mirage.'"

Mrs. McSwat took down the dictionary, opened the bulky volume, consulted it a few minutes and said:

"I always thought the word 'lichen' was pronounced 'litchen.' 'Liken,' with the 'i' long, has the preference."

"I knew that already. How about 'mirage?'"

Mrs. McSwat turned another leaf or two.

"In a minute," said she. "While I am about it I'd like to find out the meaning of the word 'linoleum.'"

"Hurry up, Lobelia."

"I am hurrying. Let—me—see. 'Link,' 'linnet,' 'linseed,' 'lint,' 'lion'—why, it isn't in the dictionary at all, Billiger. Isn't that queer?"

"Yes, yes. How much longer are you"——

"Just a minute. I'm coming to it."

Turning forty or fifty of the pages at once she ran her eye rapidly down one of the columns, stopped, put her finger on the place, looked up and observed:

"I didn't know there was such a word as 'mathemeg,' did you?"

"Never mind whether I did or not. I want to know"——

"It means a fish something like the cod, and it inhabits"——

"Who cares what it inhabits? If you're not going to find that word 'mirage,' madam, just say so, and I'll hunt it up myself."

"Just a second," said Mrs. McSwat, turning a few more leaves. "'Mispickel!' First time I ever saw that word, anyhow."

"You've turned too far over. Go back a few pages."

"It means an ore of a silver or grayish white"——

"You're too far over, I tell you! Turn back a leaf or two!"

"I have. 'Misconstrue.' Accented on the second syllable. I never knew that before. Did you? I always thought it was"——

"Never mind what you thought it was! The word I want to know about is"——

"Yes, I know; I'll find it in about a—there, I've turned too far back. 'Mezza voce.' Pronounced 'medza vocha.' Why don't they spell it that way, I'd like to know? Ah, here's a word I've always wanted to know the meaning of. 'Meter.'"

Mr. McSwat kicked over the chair his feet were resting on.

"It's a French measure of length, Billiger, equal to 39.370 English inches, or"——

Mr. McSwat crumpled up the paper he had been reading and threw it at the cat with all his might.

"Or 39.368 American inches," continued Lobelia, serenely unconscious of her husband's fidgets. "It is intended to be the ten millionth part of the distance from the equator to the"—— "Good gracious, Lobelia! Are you ever going to"——

"North pole, as ascertained by actual measurement of an arc of the meridian. What was the word you wanted me to find, dear?"

Then Mr. Billiger McSwat gave it up. He threw off his dressing gown, jerked on his coat, growled out something to the effect that it was just like a woman and he didn't care the ten millionth part of a continental ding ding whether she looked it up or not; and then he kicked the cat clear across the room and went out into the back yard to cool off.—Chicago Tribune.

A Great Deal at "Steak."

The wayward young man, broken in health, had gone to the far southwest to recuperate. He was in jail at Tombstone, A. T., for stealing a hindquarter of beef. In the loneliness of his cell he sat down and wrote as follows:

"Dear Father—I have picked up some flesh since I came out here, but I am still confined to my room. Please send me $100," etc.—Chicago Tribune.

He Stopped the Clock.

"Did you stop the clock last night when that young fellow was calling?" asked the old man savagely.

"No, pa," she answered sweetly, "but I noticed Mr. Follensbee looking at the timepiece, and you know he ain't beautiful."—New York Herald.

RAILROAD JOTTINGS.

The Atchison has about 2,000 more freight cars now than at this time last year.

Sixteen railways, having a total mileage of over 2,500 miles, have been sold under foreclosure since Jan. 1.

Of the eighty-three employes of the Canadian railways killed last year seven were the victims of car couplings.

The township of Effingham, Ills., recently sold $50,000 worth of stock in the Vandalia railroad at ten cents on the dollar.

Atlanta is to be made the head quarters of the West Point Terminal system. This is the official announcement as made by President John H. Inman.

It is said that the average service of freight cars in the United States is only about two hours a day, or an average movement of about thirty miles per day per car.

The congress of Salvador has confirmed a concession granted by the government of that republic for the construction of a railroad by a French company to connect the ports of Salvador with the interior of Honduras.

James McCrea, as first vice president of the Pennsylvania company, is bringing about many reforms which, combined, are working important changes on the lines west of Pittsburg and greatly improving the train service.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company has just completed the expenditure of $10,000,000 on improvements on its through line to the west. At Pittsburg a great freight depot has been erected, and a loop constructed at Glenwood which will save a great deal of time in the passage of through trains.

BEHIND THE SCENES.

Mme. Modjeska, the famous actress, is the wife of Count Bozenta. She is a grandmother.

The London Prince of Wales theater has been formed into a stock company with a capital of $200,000.

In the eyes of the law, if one piece of music resembles another for four consecutive bars, the whole may be declared a piracy.

Many English and French dramatists will have their plays published in book form now that the international copyright law has gone into effect.

Milton Nobles, who with his sister Dolly has been a familiar figure on the stage for years, writes his plays himself. His latest is "A Son of Thespis."

The profits of the Drury Lane theater, in London, last year were more than $20,000. Its manager is Augustus Harris, whom Queen Victoria recently knighted.

Del Puente, the baritone, has a repertory of fifty operas. He was born in Naples, but comes of a Spanish family, and made his first appearance in opera at Jassy, Moldavia, with Campanini. He is forty-five years old.

It is computed by a French contemporary that Sarah Bernhardt has earned 6,516,000 francs during her professional career of a quarter of a century. From her first American tour she made a clear profit of 600,000 francs, and it is expected that the pecuniary gain of her present tour will amount to 200,000 francs.

An Important Condition.

A good story is told at the expense of a well known Saratoga physician who once held the office of sheriff of Saratoga county, and who is yet an extensive practitioner. It happened in this way: It must be remembered in the early days of Saratoga the offices of physicians were not at all elaborate—a table, two chairs and medicine chest usually comprising the outfit. This same ambitious young physician thought to outdo his rivals by fitting up an office in a building now the site of the Shackleford block, in Broadway, in truly gorgeous style. He did so, and as everything was ready for occupancy old Dr. Freeman, a noted character in those days, happened along one day, stepped into the office, and after surveying it carefully said to the man in charge, "Who's comin in here?"

"Dr. So and So," said the man.

"Pretty nice, ain't it?" said Dr. Freeman, gazing about the room in a suspicious way.

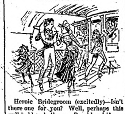
"Yes, sir—finest in town!"

"How much rent does he pay?" inquired the old doctor, still suspiciously.

"Four hundred dollars a year!" said the attendant proudly.

"Well," said the old M. D. complacently, "his patients will have to pay for it—(as an afterthought) if they live!"—Saratoga News.

After the Collision.



Heroic Bridegroom (excitedly)—Isn't there one for you? Well, perhaps this will hold us both up.—Brooklyn Life.

A Strange Trinket.

Not a week ago I met a charming young woman, a friend of mutual friends, who in a moment of confidence gave me the history of a small trifle which she wore concealed beneath her bodice.

"This," said she, "I always carry in case of an emergency," and she handed me a tiny vial.

"In it," she continued, "is a poison—swift, sure and deadly. I wear it about my person in fear of an accident, and should I at any time be in a position when help is impossible and death by torture my fate, I shall be prepared to end my sufferings in a twinkling."

Well, thought I, here is something new under the sun, and in spite of its growsomeness in its way decidedly sensible. How many poor victims to accident by land and sea would again and again have given a fortune for such a swift relief from a horrible death.—Bar Harbor Letter.

Making a "Swap."

Just outside the Pennsylvania Railroad depot I saw a sharp looking young man talking very earnestly with an oldish man who had a simple, honest look, and after a little planning I got an opportunity to say to the latter:

"Be on your guard against that man unless you know him."

"Shoo! Anything wrong?" he asked.

"He's got the look of a confidence man."

"Do tell! Wall, he can't beat me."

I went up town, and an hour later when I returned the old man was wandering around alone.

"Well, how did you come out?" I asked.

"Oh, he wan't no confidence man—not a bit of it. On the contrary, he borrowed $20 of me and give this check on the bank for $200!"—New York World.

It Didn't Work.

"Brown, do you know why you are like a donkey?"

"Like a donkey?" echoed Brown, opening wide his eyes. "No, I don't."

"Do you give it up?"

"I do."

"Because your better half is stubbornness itself."

"That's not bad. Ha! ha! I'll give that to my wife when I get home."

"Mrs. Brown," he asked as he sat down to supper, "do you know why I am so much like a donkey?"

He waited a moment, expecting his wife to give it up.

She looked at him somewhat commiseratingly as she answered:

"I suppose because you were born so."—Dublin Times.

Two doctors of an Eastern town,
To learning much inclined,
Were called to see a gentleman,
Whose health was undermined.

The first one used his stethoscope
Upon his patient meek,
"I find," quoth he, "one lung is gone;
You cannot live a week."

To this the other wise M. D.
Vehemently objected.
"I see," quoth he, "as all may see,
Your kidneys are affected."

These wise men argued loud and long,
Yet the patient owes recovery
(Not to those doctors, but to—Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery).

There are some patent medicines that are more marvelous than a dozen doctors' prescriptions, but they're not those that profess to cure everything.

Everybody, now and then, feels "run-down," "played out." They've the will, but no power to generate vitality. They're not sick enough to call a doctor, but just too sick to be well. That's where the right kind of a patent medicine comes in, and does for a dollar what the doctor wouldn't do for less than five or ten.

We put in our claim for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

We claim it to be an unequaled remedy to purify the blood and invigorate the whole system.

It's the cheapest blood-purifier, sold through druggists, no matter how many doses are offered for a dollar.

Why? Because it's sold on a peculiar plan, and you only pay for the good you get. Can you ask more?

"German Syrup"

Croup. We have selected two or three lines from letters freshly received from parents who have given German Syrup to their children in the emergencies of Croup. You will credit these, because they come from good, substantial people, happy in finding what so many families lack—a medicine containing no evil drug, which mother can administer with confidence to the little ones in their most critical hours, safe and sure that it will carry them through.

ED. L. WILLITS, of Alma, Neb. I give it to my children when troubled with Croup and never saw any preparation act like it. It is simply miraculous.

MRS. JAS. W. KIRK, Daughters' College, Harrodsburg, Ky. I have depended upon it in attacks of Croup with my little daughter, and find it an invaluable remedy.

Fully one-half of our customers are mothers who use Boschee's German Syrup among their children. A medicine to be successful with the little folks must be a treatment for the sudden and terrible foes of childhood, whooping cough, croup, diphtheria and the dangerous inflammations of delicate throats and lungs. ⊕

SACRIFICED HIS SUCCESS.

A Great Man Throws Away His Greatest Chance.

He threw away a great chance of success and has been a happier man ever since.

There is no one but myself in England now who knows exactly how it happened, and as I was thinking over it tonight—something in the papers about a clever detective in New York brought it all fresh back to my mind—it seemed to me such a queer story altogether that I think it will interest others to know it.

I must just alter one or two of the names, that's all, because it is not so very long since it happened, and it came out in one or two papers at the time, but all more or less wide of the mark. None of them had just the rights of it.

You see, no one could make out how Allan got away so easily—no one knows except my friend and I, and one man over the seas, and not even the cutest Yankee could ever guess the truth.

It is stranger than fiction, as you will find. But this is the story.

I put it short enough, for writing is not in my line. I can think things out in my head and turn them over and over till there is not much left of them that has not been put through the sieve, so to speak, but when it comes to pen and ink I'm a poor hand. It means sitting down indoors for hours, and that I am not used to. No, thank heaven, I can earn my bread by something else; or very little bread would come to me, and no chance of butter or cheese.

This is not my story at all; I mean, not about my own life. It is about a friend of mine, George Markson.

If I told you his real name, you would probably remember it at once, he was one of the best known detectives of the time. Talk about five senses, George had ten at least. He could see round a case and through a man, and into your mind almost, and tell you what you were thinking of, better than you knew yourself.

And all so quiet—you would not think he saw much, but he had seen everything at a glance and forgotten nothing. I have known him to look into a room that he had never seen before, and in the evening when we were sitting together, he would describe that room down to the maker's name on the clock, as minutely as if he were holding a picture of it in his hand at the time.

He worked on his own account, and he had constant and well paid employment, since the day he tracked the man who robbed the bank of Westminster; you may remember the case—a daring daylight robbery.

He traced him after a long search to Paris, and spotted him there as a garcon in a cafe—a good disguise, too. George was in Spain after that for a long time, and then went to Cairo, so I did not see him for more than a year. He came back with a reputation more brilliant than ever, and settled down into the same rooms he had shared with me before he left.

He was a middle aged man when I knew him, and the severe mental strain of his employment, together with home troubles, made him seem older than he was!

His wife, to whom he had been much attached, had died many years ago. His only son, too, had turned out badly, got into debt (the old story of a weak will influenced by bad companions), and then had emigrated to the gold diggings and was believed to have died there after a few more wasted years of riot and dissipation.

His father had built many hopes on his only son, and had carried about an unhealed wound caused by the bitter disappointment of all his expectations.

At the time I am writing about, I saw there was something more than usual on George's mind.

He never talked about what he was engaged in, and I took care never to plague him with questions, but it happened that a chum of mine, named Miles, told me that George had missed a good clue, and that another man, named Smollett was beginning to make a name, and was now bent on outdoing George.

Once run to the earth some one whom George had failed to trace, and his reputation was secure.

To outshine one of the best men then at work was a high game to try for, but Smollett was trying no less.

Not long after I met Miles again in Oxford street. He told me that Smollett had scored again, and that George had missed a find he had made pretty sure of.

I pooh poohed the whole thing.

"Chance, all chance. Fine thing for Smollett, more luck than good management, no doubt," I said, feeling rather nettled, I own.

"Wait a bit, you will see which is the best man of the two."

" 'I'll back Sm——,' said Miles, but remembered that George was my friend, and said no more.

I came across Miles in very nearly the same place next day. "Heard the latest?" he shouted, and then proceeded to explain that a forger, who had been wanted for some time, was supposed to be in London, and that a large reward was offered for him.

"Both on the war trail this time," said Miles. "Which will be the best man now, eh? Getting exciting, isn't it?"

That evening George, who had been out all day, came quickly into the room soon after 6.

I knew by his look that he was employed on some important mission. His brows were drawn down into a single straight line and his lips were firmly pressed together.

He stood for some time on the hearth rug, evidently in deep thought. He had not removed his top coat.

"Are you off again?" I remarked.

He looked up suddenly. "Going to drive to Holloway," he said. "Will you come?"

I knew by this that he would tell me more of his errand. I rose at once. He looked at his watch.

"The cab will be round in a few minutes," he said quickly. "I'll tell you what it is, Tom, if I miss this I shall give up this work altogether. I have not been very lucky lately, old man, though I have not worried you about my affairs."

"They never worry me," I began, "I only wish you—"

"I know—I know," he interrupted kindly; "you think your back is broad enough to carry my troubles as well as yours, but you shall never have mine to bother you, Tom, while you have any of your own. This is the only thing you have heard of,"—and then he went on to tell me the details of the case that Miles had referred to.

"I came across the track this afternoon," he said, "and now it's only a question of time."

He drew a deep breath of relief and threw his shoulders back. "I did make a mess of that last thing, and that makes me more keen about this. You see, there's another man," I knew he meant Smollett, who would give a good bit to get hold of this job before me, but there's not much fear of my losing it now."

He smiled as he spoke and looked more hopeful than he had done for a long time.

We said nothing more and drove off.

It was a wet, cold night, and I was glad when the cab stopped and we left it at the corner of a shabby looking side street.

"Third door on the right," said George, partly to himself, "past the coal yard, over the butcher's. You wait here for two minutes, Tom; if I am not down then you follow me. Back room on the top of staircase. I may want you. Don't stand in the wet. Here's a doorway to shelter in."

At the end of two minutes I was climbing quietly up the narrow, dark staircase. No sound of voices anywhere.

"Bird's flown. Bad luck to him," I thought. "Awfully hard on George, poor fellow."

I was at the top, when suddenly there came the sound, so seldom heard, of a man's voice broken by sobs, striving to speak quick and coherently.

"Ah! found it's no go, confessing his sins," I smiled to myself, and pushed the door ajar.

Ah! how could I have known George's voice, always so quiet, so self-controlled? How could I recognize George himself, kneeling on the floor, by the side of a poor, miserable bed, holding in his arms the figure of a man? A head was resting on his shoulder; his hands were smoothing back the dark hair from a thin, white face on which his own tears were fast falling.

"Come, my boy, no time to lose. You know me! Bob, dear, quick; say you know me—your father, Bob; it's only your father. You must get out of this. No one knows but me, Bob, no one will know, no one will follow you—quick, quick." And with a sob in his throat, he turned round and saw me.

He had forgotten my existence, but now seemed to think that I knew everything.

No explanation that this was his lost son, whom he had tracked to earth, and whose discovery was to bring him so much credit. No thought of the object for which he had come. The detective was not there; in his place stood a broken-hearted father, with but one thought in his mind—how best to get his unhappy son out of the reach of the law which had so nearly caught him.

"Come," he cried, in a hoarse whisper to me, "help him to stand, he is weak; we must arrange for him."

I had looked round the place. The squalid poverty of the uncleaned room, the well worn pack of cards lying on the chair by the bed, the empty bottle on the other side, and the stale smell of spirits and tobacco in the room, and all told the same tale, and bore silent but unmistakable witness to the complete mastery of evil habits.

But of all this George seemed to see nothing.

The sharp, searching scrutiny of the detective had given place to the loving look of a father, to whom all forgiveness was possible.

With hasty hands he had taken off his hat, greatcoat and scarf, and was now hurriedly putting them on the figure, who offered no help, and who seemed too dazed and bewildered to speak.

"Here is money, my boy," he whispered in a husky voice; "It is all I have now, but you shall have more; and here take care of this," hurriedly writing a few words on a scrap of paper. "See I put it in the breast pocket with the purse. It is the name of a house at Liverpool. Stay there till you hear from me, and then you shall get right away from this. There is a cab waiting at the corner; tell him to drive to the nearest station. You follow me, Bob, you understand what I have said? The money is here in this pocket. Now quick! If any one——" I read the thought in his heart. What if some one had come on the clue which had helped him, and should be already on the way! Is that a foot on the stairs? No, all is quiet.

"Now go. I dare not go with you. Do not lose a moment. Down stairs and then to your right. Tell him to drive fast. God bless you, Bob," and following him to the head of the stair with broken utterances of endearment and caution, George watched the unsteady figure descend the steps and listened with strained ears until he caught the sound of wheels driving rapidly away.

We waited for what seemed to me a long, long time in a silence which I dared not break. And then we went out into the wet and deserted street.

We stopped at the corner where the cab had waited, and I watched my friend as he stood under the gas lamp looking out into the darkness with a far away look in his eye, not knowing, or at least not heeding, that the rain was beating upon his uncovered head.

There is a better smile on his face now than the smile he wore early in the evening at the thought of his coming success. His reputation would suffer greatly, beyond doubt, but what is that to him?

He stands there a defeated—and a happy man.

I always meet Miles when I want to keep out of his way. So I was not surprised to come across him the next day, walking by the Horse Guards.

"Ha, ha!" he shouted, boisterously, before we had well met. "Queer go, wasn't it? What was? You haven't heard from Markson? Oh, of course, he would be as mute as a fish. Hard lines on him, too, when he had got the whole thing as neat as could be. Went to the very house yesterday where Allan was. The man at the pub. saw him go into the house. Ha! ha! what does my lord Allan do? Awfully sharp fellow! lets himself down by a rope out of a back window and goes off in Markson's own cab—not bad, ha! ha! ha! Markson rushed after him too late. Smollett is furious that he was just out of it. He found out where Allan was hiding and came on the scene a day behind the fair. Pity he did not get the chance. He'd have nailed him. Every one says that Markson has made an awful mull of it, and now the fellow has got clean away, no one knows where. Who's the best man now? You can't say much for your side, Tom."

As I watched him stride away toward the park I thought: "Yes, but thank God, Smollet did not get the chance."—The Strand Magazine.

TAKEN IN.

How a Smart Officer Was Taken at His Word.

President Lincoln's sage proverb relative to the disadvantage of "swapping horses in the middle of the stream" applies to many of the ordinary affairs of life. Especially should it be taken to heart by the joker who is not sure of his game. Says the war correspondent, Irving Montagu, in "Camp and Studio."

During the Russo-Turkish war, when we were on very short commons, we were one day about to do justice to a fowl which we had—well!—caught, and duly cooked. On turning, we were surprised to find one of a long train of Cossack bullock-drivers, stopping and looking down at us with envious curiosity.

We began talking to him with playful badinage, rubbish which we felt, being in English, would do well enough for an illbred Muscovite. He listened to our chaff with stolid indifference, until Coningsby, dividing the fowl, and holding up one half by the drumstick, said:

"Does the fondness of cold fowl run in your family, dear boy? This sort of thing would suit you to a T."

In a moment, that clumsy wagoner became a new man. All nervous energy and settled purpose, he sprang suddenly forward, grasped the fleshy end of that drumstick in his grimy fingers, and the next instant, had mangled it, beyond reclaim.

He had taken Coningsby at his word, and we were left on short commons indeed, though this surprise, sudden as it was, was quite eclipsed by that which followed, when that burly bullock-driver replied, in excellent English:

"Ah, just so! Sad, isn't it? Very sad. Lost your leg! But not in the service; no, not so bad as that anyhow."

Then, turning to a dog which I had not before noticed, he said:

"Crunch, poor Crunch! Hungry too? Never mind, there's the bone. Make the best of it. Thank you. Good-morning. Remember, there may be Britishers in Cossack garb, as well as wolves in sheep's clothing."

A PORTUGUESE COURTSHIP.

Laborious Process by Which an Acquaintance Is Achieved.

The Portuguese are very conservative in their ideas of the position of women in society, and they got their ideas from their Moorish masters in bygone centuries. Consequently girls lead a very shut-in life; they go regularly to mass on Sunday mornings and take occasional walks during the week, always accompanied by one or two chaperons. Young men never call at the house, and if they did would not be admitted "except on business." This strictness leaves but one way open for an interchange of sentiments, and that is the window, and it is quite the thing to make use of it. It is not considered ill-bred to stare in Portugal; a man may stare at a girl he does not know as long as he likes; he must not do so to a girl he has been introduced to unless she gives him some encouragement by returning his glances. A girl will sit at her window all the afternoon looking into the street, and her adorer from the street looks at her, and this is so much the custom that it attracts no attention from the passers-by. From looks they proceed to bows, to smiles, to a few words, then he follows her to church, finds if she is going to the theater, and goes too, serenades her with his guitar on moonlight nights, and finally an offer to her father. He is then received by the family, and allowed to come to the house in a quiet way till the wedding, and after that the young couple usually live either with her parents or with his, and the ever tenor of their life continues.

HIS PRESENTS RETURNED.

The Ballet Girl Went Back on Him in a Cruel Manner.

He was an actor out of a job and looked so woe-begone that I stopped to speak to him.

"Had hard luck?" I asked

"Well, I should say so."

"No engagement?"

"No; but that doesn't bother me. I I can get one easy enough when I want one."

"What's the trouble, then?"

"My girl's gone back on me."

"I shouldn't think that would trouble a man like you."

"Oh, I don't care for the girl much, but she used me mean."

"Yes?"

"She was in the ballet, you know."

"I didn't know, but what of it?"

"Why; she's returned all the presents I've given her in the past six months."

"That's good. You can use them again."

"But I can't. That's what makes me mad. To think I should have wasted so much good money on presents that would never be of any more use!"

"Why, what were they?"

"You won't give it away if I tell you?"

"No; never."

AN EYE TO BUSINESS.

Why a Big Man Submitted to Abuse From a Little One.

About midnight one night three men were standing at the corner of Woodward and Jefferson avenues, apparently waiting for a car, says the Detroit Free Press, when a quarrel arose and a little fellow in a gray suit began to berate a much larger man in the most vigorous manner, while the third party acted as a witness:

"You miserable cur," hissed the little fellow, "you—"

"Hold on," expostulated the big one, "you have no——"

"You low-lived scoundrel; you liar; you thief," continued the little man; "you——"

"Say, now, come off," begged the other party.

"You coward," went on the little man, and kept at him in the same style until the big man walked away, followed by the third party, leaving the little man cursing like a trooper.

On the other side of the street the big man stopped and his friend caught up with him.

"What the deuce did you take that sort of talk for?" he exclaimed angrily. "Why didn't you smack him in the mouth?"

"I couldn,t do it," replied the big man.

"You must have been afraid of him, I guess," said the other sarcastically.

"No, I wasn't, but I had good reasons not to hit him."

"What in thunder were they?"

"Well, you see, I just got him this morning to take out an accident policy in a new insurance company I've taken charge of, which pays him $50 a week in case he gets hurt and, by George, I didn't want to queer my own company right on the start by thumping the little cuss out of sight and sticking the company for $300 or $400. Of course I didn't like his talk, but my motto is 'business before pleasure,' and I kept my hands off. See?"

The other man saw, because he had an eye for business himself, and the twain walked off up towards the Campus Martius.

Telegraphing With Cannons.

When the first vessel completed the passage of the then new Erie canal, in 1825, there being no such thing as telegraph in those days, the news was communicated to New York and to Buffalo by cannons placed within hearing of each other all the way long from Albany to each of the other cities. The signal was, passed along in this way from Albany in fifty eight minutes. The experiment was a costly one but was a success in every particular.—St. Louis Republic.

Montenegro's Sudden Spring.

The "Jack-in-the-box bow is practiced by the Prince of Montenegro, who is said to be the laziest monarch in Europe. The Prince is young and active, but he is too lazy to get on his feet to bow to his subject when they cheer him. So he had a carriage made with powerful strings, under the seat which the Prince always occupied. The artisian who made the springs was afraid they wouldn't be powerful enough, and so he made the strongest springs ever seen in Montenegro.

On the first fete day after the carriage was completed the Prince of Montenegro rode through the streets to his capital. The happy people began to cheer him. He touched a button on the carriage seat, so that he might be lifted to his feet and bow. The seat rose so suddenly and rapidly that it threw the Prince of Montenegro out of his carriage. The accident gave rise to the the false report that an attempt had been made to assassinate him.—New York Journal.

The Stubbornest Things on Earth.

Are facts. As Burns says, "They winna gang." Here's a specimen. It is a fact that despite underhand competition, detraction and imitation, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the leading national specific for malaria, dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint, nervousness, rheumatism, neuralgia and kidney inaction, has not only held its own, but long since outsped all rivals in the race for popularity.

Women are not inventive as a rule. They have no eagerness for new wrinkles.

In diving to the bottom of pleasures we bring up more gravel than pearls.

The series of articles on American Industries in the Popular Science Monthly will be continued in the October number with a fully illustrated account of THE MANUFACTURE OF STEEL, by WILLIAM F. DURFEE, giving the history of the industry from colonial times to the introduction of the Bessemer process.

A barn belonging to Mrs. Levi Greeley at Gary, was set on fire by children, and the barn, dwelling, forty tons of hay and ninety sheep were burned.

A steam threshing engine exploded at Claremont, blowing Engineer Albert Chicester sixty-four feet breaking several bones and inflicting other injuries that may prove fatal.

Richard Scholz, while quarreling with Charles Ahlgrin at Horsehead, over a small bill, injured the latter so severely that death ensued and Scholz is in jail for murder.

Driven insane by poverty, Mrs. Nepresch, wife of a laboring man at Sioux Falls, attempted to drown herself and two children. The children were saved, but the woman is in a critical condition.

Rev. Mr. Chapin of Howell, has just presented the Mitchell Y. M. C. A. with a corner lot on Main street, worth $2,000. The association will take steps to put up a valuable block on the site in the near future.

Julia Rivers, a woman of the town, was found in her house at Pierre, dead. The inquest showed she had met death by accidentally taking an overdose of morphine. Deceased was formerly an educated, beautiful woman, and had prominent relatives living in Chicago.

Frank S. Lusk, formerly with D. D. Streeter & Co., railroad contractors in the Black Hills, now of Lusk, Wyo., was arrested at Deadwood by the United States deputy marshal for selling and disposing of oleomargarine without a government license. He was held under $1,500 bail.

John B. Lehman, who was convicted at Custer City a year ago for the murder of Constable Burns and sentenced to be hung, the supreme court of the state having affirmed the decision, was sentenced by Judge Chas. M. Thomas to be hung on the 4th of November next.

The high winds caused serious havoc with threshing machines in the vicinity of Britton. On the farm of Joseph Miller, three miles west of town, a separator belonging to E. B. Karn caught fire from the sparks from the engine. It with several stacks of wheat was destroyed. Three miles north of this farm a similar disaster occurred. The threshing machine of Bent Bearson and 300 bushels of wheat belonging to Albert Bundrock were burned.

A special from Marion Junction says: Here, as all through the Northwest, the weather has been extremely hot the past two weeks. Danger from fire presents itself on every side, though there has been but little damage so far. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway company has issued orders to engineers to stop and furnish water from the engine when required to put out fires that possibly may catch along the road. While the right-of-way is burned off fifty feet each side of the track the high winds are liable to carry a spark 100 or 200 feet or more from the track. Everything is combustible, being dry as tinder.

NORTH DAKOTA.

A Republican paper has been started at Cogswell, by W. S. Straub.

George W. Johnson, a farmer in Emmons County, was burned to death in a prairie fire.

A terrible prairie fire is raging six miles east of Oakes. Damage to stacked and shocked grain is very heavy. One man is reported burned fatally.

Bjorge, Murray and Geese, East Grand Forks saloon-keepers, were arrested and taken to Crookston, charged with violating the Minnesota State law by selling liquor on Sunday.

Frank Marsh of Fargo received a telegram from the authorities at Rochester, Minn., insane asylum, that P. A. Droshus, well known at Fargo, has escaped from the asylum, and asking him to watch for his appearance in this city. Mr. Marsh received word Droshus arrived at his mother's house in Caledonia, and the authorities at Rochester were notified.

United States Marshal Hogson and Special Agent Day, with the assistance of the police of Grand Forks, made a raid on all the Chinese laundries of the city and captured three Celestials who had been smuggled across the line from Manitoba within the last two or three days, also securing a considerable quantity of opium smuggled across the boundary. One opium joint was found in full blast, with a number of prostitutes among the patrons. The officers are making a further investigation of the matter.

Last winter Louise Pelrich secured a verdict of $2,000 against August Wickman, both of Cassleton, on a charge of breach of promise. The defendant acknowledged his guilt, but claimed he had since discovered the plaintiff was not as pure as he supposed. Both parties have since been married. The sheriff went out to the farm the other day to collect the $2,000. It is claimed that the defendant has put all his property out of his hands and litigation will probably follow.

WISCONSIN.

Pearl hunters are now at work near Boscobel, the water being low.

Forest fires are, as usual, burning about Ashland.

Dr. Sprague, of Green Bay, and a Shawano gentleman were arrested at Oshkosh by mistake as suspicious characters.

Frank Timmons, a dwarf at Monroe, died from the effects of the pistol wound he had caused with suicidal intent.

Walter Andrews, who went to Watertown from Rochester, N. Y., in 1846, died sitting on a chair at his home.

Thomas Wright, an aged resident of Watertown, was kicked to death by a horse at Marshfield.

Spearman & Co.'s store at Oshkosh was robbed of $50 by two men who went through the till while an accomplice engaged the proprietor in conversation.

The barn and all outbuildings of John F. Johnson, of Pleasant Springs, Dane County, were consumed by fire. The entire crop, including a shed filled with tobacco, and one horse were burned. The loss is estimated at $7,000, with no insurance.

The deer at Sherwood Forest, Green Lake, have had an addition to their number. The old doe Gretchen recently gave birth to two nice little ones that are as cunning and pretty as a pair of pictures.

Edward Popke and his wife, of Seymour, were each sentenced to one year in prison at Eau Claire for causing the death of their baby by cruel treatment, when it was scarcely three hours old. They had pleaded guilty. The wife is only about 16 years old.

A highwayman held up John Shafer and Thomas Yelinck, at Prairie du Chien, and at the point of a pistol made them give up their money and take their clothes, shoes and stockings off, and then made them drive back to the Artesian Park. Here the robber jumped out and said he would kill them if they attempted to follow or tried to see and recognize him.

IOWA.

The body of a murdered man, a railroad track laborer, has been found near Wheatland. The man, whose name cannot be learned, had just drawn his pay.

J. O. Archer, a brakeman on the Illinois Central, was killed by falling between the cars of his train when just east of Ackley. He leaves a wife and two children.

Stephen Elgar, a prominent resident of Plattville, Wis., committed suicide at Dubuque by shooting himself. Ill health was the cause. He left a letter directed to his wife asking forgiveness for his act.

The Times of Dubuque has commenced issuing an evening edition of the same size as the morning edition, which will be continued hereafter. This movement has been in contemplation for some time.

During the high wind the steam thresher of W. W. Williams set fire to the grain of a farmer east of Lime Springs, while the men had gone to dinner. The separator, and eight large stacks were burned with stabling. Damage $1,500.

Frank Woodworth, a conductor on the Chicago & Northwestern, was knocked off a freight car at Sioux City by striking a bridge over which his train was running. He fell sixty feet into the river and was instantly killed.

The 6th regiment Iowa national guards held an election to choose a major to succeed J. M. Emsig, of Le Mars, resigned. From companies already heard from there is no opposition to the candidacy of Capt. James Rule, of Mason City and his election is almost certain.

A wild freight train on the Chicago & Northwestern crashed into a passenger train near Beverly, a few miles out from Cedar Rapids. The engines are both total wrecks and some of the cars were badly damaged. Outside of severe bruises no one was hurt.

The preliminary hearing in the Larson case at Mason City has already consumed nine days. There are rumors that Darrow's wife has made a confession to a detective stating that her husband killed Darrow with an ax, threw him into a buggy and drove him away.

The Northwest German conference assembled in Charles City recently with Bishop Foss presiding. It includes the north half of Iowa, South Dakota and part of Wisconsin and Illinois. Nearly all the members were present. Delegates were to be chosen to the general conference. A good number of lay delegates were present.

F. D. Wilson, deputy United States marshal at Tacoma, Wash., arrested James Durwood, alias James Geer, at Cedar Rapids. Durwood was arrested last winter while robbing a bonded car of canned salmon from Tacoma to Canada, but escaped before the grand jury met. Nearly five weeks Wilson has been following Durwood almost over the entire country.

BULWER'S REPARTEE.

Wit Passed Between the Novelist and Lord Palmerston.

In reading in last Sunday's Times Richard B. Kimball's interesting account of Bulwer, I was reminded of an incident that happened in parliament in July 1855, which illustrates the great novelist's good humor and quickness of repartee. A kinsman, McHillingfleetcazley, a member of parliament for the North Riding of York from 1832 to 1862, had taken me into the house—strangers' gallery—and was showing me the celebrities. Of course, I was anxious to see the author of "Pelham"—I was only a boy then—and I was fortunate enough to hear him, too.

It happened thus: The debate was on Lord John, afterward earl, Russel's ignominious failure during his mission at Vienna to bring the Crimean war to an end, and the opposition was very strong against the party in power. At last Lord Palmerston, then prime minister, rose and got to talking in a hectoring way about "this unnecessary and unprovoked attack upon the government," and ended by saying in a loud voice and looking straight at the two literary members—Bulwer and Disraeli—who were sitting together on the front of the opposition bench:

"The gentlemen are making 'Much Ado About Nothing.' "

He sat down amid loud cheers from his own side; but in an instant Bulwer was up, and with exquisite grace and sarcasm said:

"Mr. Speaker"—then turning to bow slightly toward the treasury bench—"I beg to remind the noble lord that in chronological order 'Much Ado About nothing' comes after the 'Comedy of Errors.' "

I leave readers of Shakespeare to imagine the tumultuous "Hear!" "Hear!" "Hear!" from the conservative side and the laughter all over the house.—New York Times.

HE HELPED HIMSELF.

How a Man Assisted One in Distress.

A gentleman one day was driving along a lonely country road when he heard loud cries for help proceeding from a neighboring grove. He hitched his horse and ran to the assistance of the person who seemed to be in distress. Upon entering the wood he was surprised and shocked to find a man who was securely tied to a tree. "What is the matter here?" he said in astonishment.

"Oh, sir," replied the poor fellow, "I'm so glad you have come. A few hours ago I was knocked down by some tramps, who rifled my pockets, and after stealing everything I had except a pocketbook in my inside vest pocket, which they fortunately overlooked, bound me to this tree and decamped."

"The scoundrels!" ejaculated the new-comer. "And so the wretches robbed you, eh?"

"Yes, sir."

"Took everything you had except one pocketbook in your inside pocket, eh?"

"Yes, sir."

"The villains! And afterwards they tied you here?"

"Yes, sir."

"And are you still tied—tied tightly—so tightly that you cannot escape?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then I think I'll take the pocketbook the other fellows left." And he did.

LEO NOW IN MARBLE

Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishops Kean and Corrigan and Many Other Dignitaries Present.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—The marble statue of the pope, presented to the Catholic university by Joseph Loubat of New York, was unveiled to-day. The exercises were simple, but were participated in by Cardinal Gibbons and a large number of prominent members of the priesthood, as well as of the laity. Bishop Kean delivered the principal address. Among those present were Archbishop Corrigan, Monsignor Preston of New York and Archbishop Williams of Boston. The statue is the work of Guiseppe Luchetti, one of the best known of the modern Italian school. It occupied him over a year, and its total cost has been over $20,000. The model of the statue was submitted to the pope for his approval, and in return for the gift the pontiff conferred the title of count upon Mr. Loubat. The statue is of the size known to sculptors as semi-colossal, and represents the pope seated on the pontifical throne, vested in cassock, alb, stole and cape. On his head is the tiara or triple crown. The right hand is raised in the act of giving the blessing, while the left hand rests easily on the arm of the throne. Three sides of the pedestal bear inscriptions. On one are the papal arms, which are the armorial bearings of the Pecci family, of which the pope is a member. On the opposite side are the arms of Mr. Loubat as a Roman count.

PREJUDICIAL TO SCHOOLS.

A Decision That Indian Children Cannot Be Compelled to Become Pupils.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—The commissioner of Indian affairs has received a copy of a recent opinion by Judge Green, of the district court of the Territory of Oklahoma, directing the restoration to his parents of an Indian boy placed in the government Indian school at Chilocco by the Indian office officials.

The father of the boy began habeas corpus proceedings to secure possession of his son, who, under an act passed at the last session of congress, had been compelled to attend school. Judge Green held that as the Indian office had not, as required by the act, issued rules and regulations to compel the attendance of Indian children at schools provided for them, the retention of the boy contrary to the will of his parents was illegal. The effect of this decision is regarded by the commissioner of Indian affairs as likely to prove prejudicial to the schools, and it is the intention to carry the case to a higher court.

The judge in his opinon took the ground that the right of a parent to the custody of his children belonged to the Indian as well as to a white man.

MURDERED HIS MOTHER.

Horrible Crime of a Twenty-Year-Old Boy in Colorado.

DURANGO, Colo., Sept. 29.—Ralph Ray, the twenty-year-old murderer of his mother, was captured Saturday in Cabon Large, N. M., by Sheriff Longnecker and returned to this city to-day. He made a confession to the sheriff last night, in which he gave particulars of the crime.

He said that after he and his mother had eaten breakfast last Wednesday morning he went to the barn and took two drinks of whisky from a bottle he had hidden in the hay. Returning to the house he informed his mother that he was going to Farmington, N. M., to attend the fair. Mrs. Ray remonstrated, not desiring to be left alone. This angered him, and as his mother passed him for the door with a pan in her hand he struck her a terrible blow on the back of the head with the hatchet, sinking the iron into her head to the handle. She sank to the floor without a moan, and the son then plunged his hunting knife into her breast three times, wrapped the body in a quilt, mounted his horse and started for Mexico.

The murderer was arraigned this morning, and without a tremor or the slightest indication of remorse pleaded guilty. Mr. Ray, the gray-haired father of the young murderer, has gone insane over the terrible affair and his life is despaired of.

TASCOTT AGAIN.

Bottineau Acquainted With the Man Said to Be Snell's Murderer.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Sept. 29.—John B. Bottineau, who is in Washington looking after the claim of the Turtle Mountain Indians to 10,000,000 acres of land in North Dakota, says that he knows the man who is said to be Tascott, and is living at Turtle mountain.

He says he is a young man who came there and began living with a squaw, but who never gave any information concerning himself. Subsequently another stranger came there and took a squaw and ran a saloon. A United States marshal came to look after the latter and the other man became very uneasy and kept out of the way as much as possible. The alleged Tascott wore very tough clothes, but had the appearance of knowing much more than the average man that comes to live with Indians.

Corraled in a Cornfield.

KEOKUK, Iowa, Sept. 29.—Great excitement exists near Bowen, Ill., because of numerous burglaries in that and surrounding towns. The last one committed was at the store of J. V. Scott, who got out a search warrant for the house of Frank Jarvis and a man named Thresher. A constable went to the house, whereupon Jarvis and a brother commenced shooting. One bullet inflicted a wound in the constable's leg. Jarvis and his pals escaped to a cornfield, where they were surrounded by the sheriff and fifty armed men. The stolen goods had been boxed up to ship to a brother in California. This afternoon the desperadoes showed themselves and several shots were exchanged. The sheriff is determined to effect the capture of the gang if he has to starve them out.

A Small Race War.

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—To-day two gangs of dock laborers, one white and one colored, gathered on the dock of the Western Transit company. While waiting to be paid off they got into an altercation and this led to a general fight in which James Kelly (white) was stabbed to the heart and killed by Joseph Boles (colored). Boles was pursued by the other white combatants, who fired a number of shots after him, one of them wounding him in the arm. Two other persons were wounded by stray bullets. Boles was finally captured and locked up.

Resulted in Their Discharge.

PIPESTONE, Minn., Special Telegram, Sept. 29.—The examination of Miles and James Rork and Earl Walkup, charged with the homicide of Roy Hyslop, was closed to-day, resulting in the discharge of the defendants.

WANTS A SEPARATION.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Sept. 29.—Baroness Destures, wife of the Belgian minister in Paris, to-day filed papers in a suit for a divorce against her husband. The papers were served on the baron Saturday, and he has cabled instructions to an attorney to make an appearance and defense.

The complainant recites that the baron and baroness were married in New York in May, 1875, and that ever since their marriage the baron has pursued a course of extreme cruelty toward the plaintiff. While in Paris she says that the baron applied foul epithets and accused his wife of not being chaste; that on June 14, 1890, defendant, by fraud and misrepresentation, attempted to procure her incarceration in an institution for the confinement of insane persons. This last fact will be decided on the trial.

It is maintained that the baron was anxious to secure control of his wife's estate, the annual income of which is estimated at $80,000, and to do this it was necessary to prove she was insane. To escape the evil scheme of her husband the baroness left the home of her husband in Paris at midnight and took the train for Germany. Then she came to America, where she was advised by relatives to secure a separation.

Before her marriage the baroness was a Miss Carey, a niece of John Jacob Astor, and her marriage was a society sensation in New York.

MITIGATED THE SENTENCE.

President Harrison Lets Col. Compton Down a Little Easier.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—The president has passed upon the record of the court martial in the case of Col. Charles E. Compton, Fourth cavalry.

While Col. Compton was in command of the military post at Walla Walla, Wash., some of his soldiers attacked the jail and lynched a gambler named Hunt, under arrest for killing a soldier. It was charged that Col. Compton failed to take steps to prevent the lynching, though requested to do so, and he was court-martialed on a charge of negligence. The court found him guilty and sentenced him to suspension from rank and command for three years on half-pay, and to be confined to the limits of the military post.

The president has approved the proceedings of the court, but has mitigated the sentence to suspension from rank and command on half-pay for two years.

A Mob Hangs a Woman.

HOLLENDALE, Miss., Sept. 29.—Saturday night a quadroon woman named Lou Stevenson called Mr. Davis, a white bartender, from the saloon, and while she engaged him in conversation a negro named Grant White appeared upon the scene and shot Davis without provocation, killing him instantly.

The negro escaped but was captured at Wayside and was brought back. The infuriated populace hanged both White and his accomplice, the negro woman, to a railroad bridge near the town early this morning. There is great excitement here, but no further trouble is expected.

No Vacations Allowed.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Sept. 29.—Otis Staples, chief Chippewa pine examiner, has written to Commissioner Carter asking that Stillwater be designated as the headquarters of the corps of pine examiners. Commissioner Carter has replied by saying that no headquarters will be established, but the examiners are requested to name a postoffice nearest the pine to be examined, where they may be addressed. They are also informed that they are to go to the pine lands and begin their work and continue until it is complete, the expectation being that they are to remain in the woods until the examination is finished.

Cabinet Reconstruction.

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 29.—Parliament will be prorogued next Wednesday. It is learned on excellent authority that the reconstruction of the cabinet will take place almost immediately. Peter White, the present speaker of the house, will succeed Frank Smith as superintendent of public works and will be succeeded by J. Wood of Brockville. Senator Carling, minister of agriculture, will be succeeded by Hugh John Macdonald of Winnipeg. Other changes will probably be made, including the retirement of Caron, minister of militia, who will be succeeded by G. A. Kirkpatrick of Kingston.

Gathering for a Convention.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Special Telegram, Sept. 29.—The town is swarming with delegates and visitors for to-morrow's Republican convention, but it is too early to speak conclusively of the probable results. Among the notables already on the ground are Judge Bennett of Clark, Candidate Melville of Huron, Congressman Pickler of Faulkton, Register Bailey of Pierre, Marshal Fry of Vermillion, Secretary of State Ringsrud of Elk Point and Hon. L. B. French of Yankton. The latter has opened his headquarters and proposes making a vigorous canvass for the nomination, with many elements in his favor.

Frightful Work of a Prisoner.

MARSEILLES, Sept. 29.—A violent prisoner escaped from the hands of the police to-day by making an unexpected attack upon his captors with a carving knife. Before he could be recaptured he had been chased through the town and had killed one policeman and cut himself so severely with a sword that he died. Besides, three policemen were dangerously wounded.

Caused a Sensation.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Signor Crispi's recent speech at Palermo has caused a sensation throughout Europe, as it virtually proclaims an Anglo-Italian alliance as a fait accompli. Ministerial organs in Rome ask what impression the speech will make in England, the government of which country has repeatedly denied the existence of an Anglo-Italian alliance.

Omaha Is at Work.

DENVER, Sept. 29.—C. R. Scott of Omaha was in the city to-day. He will attend the Republican state convention at Glenwood Springs to-morrow, and ask the convention to recommend Omaha as the place for holding the national Republican convention in 1892. He bears letters from Senators Walcott, Teller, Hon. John M. Thurston and others asking the convention to adopt a resolution to that effect.

Mills Receives an Ovation.

ZANESVILLE, Ohio, Sept. 29.—Hon. Roger Q. Mills received an ovation here to-day. Fully 5,000 people were in the audience and more than that number were turned away unable to gain admittance. He confined his remarks to the tariff and made no mention of silver coinage.

Gorman in the Race.

WHEELING, W. Va., Sept. 29.—Col. John A. Robinson, an influential politician of this state and an intimate friend of Senator Gorman, says that Gorman will be in the race of the Democratic nomination for president next year, and that the West Virginia delegation will be solid for him.

A Great Blow-Out.

NORWALK, Ohio, Sept. 29.—Gov. Campbell and Judge Stillwell spoke to an immense crowd here to-day. It was one of the largest outpourings of people Huron county has seen since the big Blaine meeting in 1884, and many people think it exceeded even that.

New York Press: Under the new Republican tariff act Brazil bought American food and manufactures of twice the value in July this year that she did in July 1890. American industries were $500,000 richer in a single month, without increased cost or competition to any American worker or consumer. This kind of tariff is not a tax.

New York Press: Denmark has also removed the prohibitory duty on American pork. All European countries are seeking cheaper food, for there is a gloomy prospect of a hard winter. The effect of the prohibition of France and Germany has been to lessen our exports and put a tremendous tax on the consumers of our pork. Now other countries are likely to follow France and Germany in removing the ban. Their own people and ours will be benefited.

Georgia is going to tax bachelors. A bill for that purpose has been brought into the Georgia legislature and the House Committee on Hygene and Sanitation has reported it favorably. Under its terms it will cost a Georgian $25 to begin the batchelor business at 30 years of age, and on a rising scale of $25 for five years a man at 60 and over will be at the expense of $200 per annum for the privilege of going without a wife.—Ex.

The boy gazed and gazed, and finally turned to his mother and exclaimed in a voice loud enough for all to hear.

"Say, maw, that girl wants to wipe her nose and that fellow won't let her."

Washington, Sept. 25.—Various Harrison organs throughout the country are again endeavoring to run Blaine off the presidential track by printing articles to the effect that the man from Maine is to write a letter refusing to permit the use of his name next year. There is not a single iota of truth in the story according to leading republicans here who are intimate with the secretary of State. It is known now that he will not write any letter declaring his position on the presidency. He will return to Washington and take up his duties, maintaining a dignified silence on politics,

The enthusiasm for Blaine at the Nebraska Republican convention yesterday has thrown the Harrison men into another chill. The president's stay in Nebraska while on his jaunt last spring seems to have had a most surprising effect on Nebraska Republicans.—Journal.

Trotting records have been broken with remarkable frequency this summer and the names of Allerton, Nelson, Nancy Hanks, Sunol, Monbars, Direct, Manager appear as often and as prominently in the daily press as those of Harrison, Cleveland, Blaine or McKinley. Allerton is now king of trotting stallions, with a mile in 2.09¼, only half a second slower than Maud S's famous performance at Cleveland in 1885 when she made the record that still stands—2.08¾.

But Allerton is not to be permitted to wear the crown without a protest. He will have to meet Nancy Hanks who has also done her mile in 2.09¼, at Lexington next month, and Nelson with 2.10 to his credit this summer is still on earth and feeling exceedingly spry. With these flyers at his sulkey wheels, Allerton's position is far from secure, and we may reasonably expect another broken trotting record before the close of the season, with either Nelson, Allerton or Nancy Hanks as the performer. —Tribune,

A DAILY MAIL.

The contract for carrying the mail from Crookston to St. Hilaire three times a week on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday has been let to Jacob Andrist, of Crookston. Under the terms of the contract he is to commence Oct 1st, This will be a great conveniance to our citizens and while it will not benefit us as much as would a daily train, it will go a long way towards stimulating business, and remove the necessity of our citizens spending three days time every time they wish to visit Crookston; The mail will leave here for Crookston at 8 a, m. arriving here at 2 p. m. and it will leave here for Crookston 10 a. m. arriving at Crookston at 4 p, m.. This move is in response to the daily mail petition circulated here last summer, the railroad company refusing to run a daily train.

Mrs. Amanda White, one of the W. C. T, U. Workers of East Grand Forks, entered complaint with Judge Christianson on Thursday, that a number of saloon keepers at East Grand Forks were running their saloons wide open on Sunday. The persons named in the complaint were Pat Murray, H. P. Gies, and Erickson & Burgo, Warrants were issued for their arrest and Sheriff Grundysen went over Wednesday evening and brought two of the alleged law breakers over for examination, The other two could not be found one having gone to Dakota upon urgent business and the other happened to be absent on a visit to Brainerd. The examination of the two who were caught was started Wednesday afternoon before Justice Christianson but was adjourned until Monday in order to give the defense an opportunity to procure more witnesses.—Crookston Times,

The Alliance are advising farmers to hold their wheat for big prices predicting that it will sell for $2 a bushel before spring. But there is another side to the question and the following clipping from an article written by B. P. Hutchinson the great Chicago grain speculator will be of interest:

No one can accurately state how many bushels of wheat we shall export, but we can supply all deficiencies and money will flow freely to us from Europe if we do not put our prices too high. There is such a thing as charging more for a loaf of bread than the average customer can pay. We must not forget that the working classes everywhere are the main consumers of bread; and these people have only their wages to spend. We might if excessively greedy of money, drive them to using substitutes, and that would be bad for both sides. In the interior of Cuba San Domingo and Brazil the poorer classes never see bread at all: they make a cake of yucca or cassava roots, and that is their bread. It is a farinaceous food. and it answers because it has to answer. The Scandinavian peasants mix half flour and half ground tree bark in their loaf. If we crowd them too hard they can go through one season on one quarter flour and three quarters bark. These facts must be considered by our dealers and speculators.

The old fashioned idea of a sound republic was that the people should support the government. The modern notion is that the government must support the people. The government which is really made up of you and your friends and neighbors, and of your friends and neighbors in a broader sense, all over the country, is expected, by the people who have adopted the new notion, to take care of us all, and especially of those who are too lazy or too shiftless to take care of themselve And yet a more absurd notion never got abroad. The government is the people, and its business is only to give every man protection in his rights at the least possible expense, The people cannot afford to have the government do anything that is not clearly for the greatest good of the greatest number. If the fact is kept in mind that the people are the government and all alike interested in it, the absurdity of many schemes of political quacks become at once apparent, and the reason why class legislation is an abomination is clearly seen. Why should all the people permit favors to be showered upon a few favored ones? Why, for instance, should men who own land be furnished with money at two percent while farmers who do not own land have to pay from six to twelve per cent? Or, why should men who own farm products be supplied with money at two per cent on their products as collateral, when men who produce wealth in other forms must pay the market rates? What is wanted, is a fair field for all and no favors or special legislation for any.—N. W. Agriculturist.

A young man has been entertaining the multitude in this vicinity by dropping from a balloon at an altitude of between 2,000 and 5,000 feet. The young man simply clings to a pair of stout rings, and a parachute does the rest. He was asked the other day if he did not get nervous sometimes at the thought of being suspended half a mile or a mile above the earth. He replied: "No, sir; I don't let myself think of it. I just begin countin when the balloon starts upward, and when I counts a hundred I let go. Sometimes I shuts my eyes and keeps 'em shut till I feel myself coming down slow." This young man has a partner who, when asked how many times he had dropped from an ascending balloon, replied, with genuine modesty, "Only about a thousand."—New York Times.

Dr. Tuckerman, editor of the Workman, Cleveland, has taken some pains to collect and compile the decisions of the United States court on this subject and gives to the Washington Post, as the result of his investigations, the following:

First—Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary are considered as wishing to renew his subscriptions.

Second—If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publisher may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

Third—If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the post-office to which they are directed they are responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

Fourth—If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher and the paper is sent to the former address, they are held responsable.

Fifth—The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

Sixth—If subscribers paid in advance they are bound to give notice at the end of the time, if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to send it, and the subscriber will be responsible until express notice, with payment of arrearages, is sent to the publisher.

The latest postal law are such that newspaper publishers can arrest any one for fraud who takes a paper and refuses to pay for it. Under this law the man who allows his subscription to run along for some time unpaid and then orders it discontinued, or orders the postmaster to mark it "refused" and have a postal card sent notifying the publisher, leaves himself liable to arrest and fine the same as for theft.

SELECTIONS

SPENT A NOVEL HONEYMOON.

Husband and Wife, Both Fond of the Bicycle, Enjoy a Wedding Tour.

A bronzed young man, wearing a bicycle uniform, knickerbockers, etc., stood in the rotunda of the Grand Pacific, the hero of a most romantic wedding tour.

Dr. W. H. Baldwin, of Norwalk, Conn., is his name. Up stairs his wife, also attired in a neat wheel uniform, was resting after the last journey. The pair, had it not been for the excessive heat, would have been pumping their wheels westward to Colorado, for their intention was when they left Norwalk, July 6, to make a tour of the United States on bicycles.

"It would not be true for me to remark that we have traveled from Connecticut to St. Paul, down to St. Louis and back to Chicago on our wheels," remarked the doctor, "for a great many times we had recourse to the railway trains or boats. The heat was so intense that one could not stand the dusty roads. However, since my wife and I left Norwalk we have covered many miles, considering that we are not professionals."

The way that the couple hit upon this novel honeymoon is peculiar. Miss Fannie Stanley, the belle of Norwalk, was visited regularly by her friend, Dr. Baldwin, who, being an enthusiastic member of the young local bicycle club and a member of the American league, often came attired in his sweater and knickerbockers. Nice, pleasant evenings those, especially in the early summer. No girl had yet been seen riding a wheel in Norwalk, but the doctor remarked, "Fannie, suppose you get a wheel and ride too."

Miss Stanley was horrified at first to think what a shock the sight of a woman on a wheel would be to the grave people of Norwalk, but the wheel arrived, and after dark the doctor gave her lessons in riding. Along in the latter part of June Miss Stanley had acquired a degree of skill in handling the wheel that it was pronounced safe for her to make her appearance on the streets in daylight. Before the people had got over their surprise the couple were married and had started on their honeymoon on wheels.

"I want to be married in bicycle costume at the church," said Dr. Baldwin, "and then leave the church door on my wheel with my wife mounted upon her 'cycle. It would have been romantic. But somehow we went home first, took off our finery, attired ourselves in wheeling clothes, started out and—well, here we are en route home.

"Our most curious experiences were had in the little towns along the Mississippi. As we bowled along through them the natives flocked to their doorways. In some places we were assured that a male bicycler was a rare sight, but that never before had the natives seen a woman on a wheel. 'By gosh, Hannah! If there ain't a woman straddle one of those pesky wheel machines,' cried out a man in one town. Oh, it was a barrel of fun for wife and me!"

"Would you recommend this sort of a honeymoon?"

"It would be one of the finest imaginable if it were not for the great heat. However, for bicyclers who want to be married in the spring or late fall it is just perfection. Stopping at so many farmhouses, etc., gives one a splendid opportunity to study human nature, to say nothing of the healthful exercise and the abundance of fresh air."

Mrs. Baldwin, the wife, is but twenty-two years old, but she says she enjoyed the miles of travel much better than a trip in an ocean liner.—Chicago News.

A Birch Bark Picnic.

There were thirty guests at the novel picnic, and the invitations were written on squares of birch bark. Each one added to the dress some birch bark decoration. Belts, collars, cuffs and bracelets, stitched with colored silk, were among the many articles worn, and one girl had a hat of birch bark, which was exceedingly pretty.

The table was laid with a white cloth, but there was a central square of silvery birch bark, and a smaller one at each end. All the viands were served upon dishes of birch bark. Some of these were carefully made and sewed with bright colored silks. The plates were all of bark and were bordered with narrow ribbons.

Canoes prettily made held flowers and fruits, and at each corner a bark basket was placed, filled with ferns and grasses. There was a souvenir for each guest of birch bark made up in some pretty fashion, cigar and letter cases for the men, napkin rings, needle books, etc., for the women. During the afternoon some musicians made their appearance and there was a dance in the woods, prolonged until nightfall.—New York Recorder.

Snakes Milked the Cow.

C. C. Beyer shot two blacksnakes on Mrs. Justus Jones' farm, at Washington Square, that were monsters of their species. The pair were discovered in a clump of bushes along the meadow where the cows usually pasture, and have been suspected for some time of having sucked the cows, as some of them have not been giving the quantity of milk they should of late. Mr. Beyer, on locating the milk thieves, quickly dispatched them, and upon stretching them out the larger was as long as a fence rail and the smaller measured eight feet.—Norristown Times.

Grand Army Mortality.

Considering the age and infirmities of the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, the deaths in their ranks are not so numerous as it might be expected they would be. A roll of 5,530 deaths in a year out of a total membership of 444,807 is only about one-half the annual death rate of Boston, where, with a population of 440,000, there were 10,181 deaths last year.—Boston Herald.

WHISPERS ABOUT WOMEN.

Anna Shaw, the woman preacher, says she wears short hair simply because she was born that way.

Mrs. Timothy J. Keefe, wife of the well known pitcher of the New York club, is foremost in the list of American sculptresses.

The Countess of Pourtales is reputed to be the most charming hostess in Paris. Invitations to her house are eagerly sought.

The wife of President Diaz has been designated the Mrs. Cleveland of Mexico. She is very popular and a beauty of the brunette type.

Clara Barton has accepted the presidency and become the active head of the women's executive committee of the National Chautauqua of Glen Echo, at Washington.

Mrs. Elizabeth Faucher, who died in Carrollton, Ark., recently, at the age of ninety-five, claimed to be a lineal descendant of that daring revolutionary soldier, "Mad Anthony" Wayne.

Laura V. Jones, one of the court stenographers, has been appointed referee by the superior court of Cincinnati in the matter of some real estate condemnation proceedings. She is said to be the first woman to hold such a trust.

Miss Fisher, of North Carolina, who wrote many novels under the name of "Christian Reid," is now Mrs. Tieman. She is writing religious novelettes for a Catholic magazine. She is the daughter of Colonel Fisher, who gave its name to Fort Fisher.

A careless coachman slammed the door of the carriage in which Mrs. Kate Chase-Ralston Seymour, of Lockport, Pa., was taking her seat, and the result was the catching of her hand and the cutting off its fingers. Mrs. Seymour is well known in society and as a newspaper writer.

BEHIND THE SCENES.

It is said that more free tickets to theaters are given away in Boston than in any other city in the United States.

The two comedians, Nat Goodwin and Alf Hampton, look so much alike that they are often taken for each other.

Sardou, the great French playwright, will not attempt to speak a word of English, yet it is said that he understands it perfectly when it is read to him.

Frank Miles, the London artist whose portrait of Mrs. Langtry is said to have been responsible for the beginning of her fame as a beauty, recently died in London.

M. d'Ennery, the French dramatist, is over eighty years old. He has written more than 200 plays which have been produced. He has a fad for the collection of bric-a-brac.

The custom of giving away souvenirs during long runs of plays is growing. Last season Manager Charles Frohman spent $10,000 on souvenirs. The most costly souvenirs on record were those which marked the 500th performance of Dixey's "Adonis" at the Bijou theater, New York.

Fritz Emmet's beautiful villa near Albany is to be sold. The price asked is $150,000—not half the original cost. The place is said to be neglected and dilapidated. It was once one of the most idyllic and delightful homes in America. When Emmet separated from his wife he gave her this residence, but she has left it to live in New York. Ex-Mayor Nolan, of Albany, is named as a prospective purchaser of the villa.

HINTS ABOUT HORSEFLESH.

Do not forget the fact that your horse needs a small refreshing drink of water as often as you do on hot days.

Horses should have their feed very early in the morning, so as to give them plenty of time for digestion before work commences.

Lice will live in a stable for years. To get rid and to continue rid of them, all the crevices should be washed with kerosene oil and a coat of whitewash should follow.

Allow the flies free access to your dining room and then make no effort to keep them from the table and you will have a better idea how they annoy your horses when you provide no means for preventing them from annoying dumb beasts.

The colt will learn more easily when six months old than when a year old. Hence it is wise to handle the colt early. It should be handled until any part of its limbs can be rubbed, until it is accustomed to the bridle and until it will drive as well as lead.

Some horses have such sociable dispositions as to be restless when left alone. Gilbert White, the famous naturalist, had such a horse. It would not stay by itself when at home, nor remain in a strange stable. More than once it leaped out of a window in search of company.—Horseman.

ODDS AND ENDS.

One of if not the largest pearl fishing grounds in the world is in the Gulf of California.

The postoffice in Chicago does a larger registered letter business than any other in the country.

A tailor says that few men have evenly balanced shoulders, the right almost invariably being lower than the left.

It is said that the five leading hotels at Saratoga take in an aggregate of $2,000,000 a month during the busy season.

It has been calculated by a competent authority that over 80,000 gallons of carbonated waters are consumed in Boston daily.

The finest garnets and nearly all the peridots found in the United States are collected from ant hills and scorpion nests in New Mexico and Arizona.

Nearly 20,000 patents are issued every year at Washington. This is four times as many as are taken out in England. In Prussia inventors appear to be rare birds, for the average number of patents issued there every year is only 100.

A Queer Place for a Nest.

Boots and shoes that have retired from business through decrepitude may come in handy in still more strange ways. In passing under some trees a gentleman's notice was attracted by an old boot fastened to a branch. As he approached it a bird flew out. On examination the boot was found to contain a nestful of young birds.—Chambers' Journal.

THE YELLOWSTONE PARK LINE

The Twin cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis at the head of navigation on the Mississippi, Duluth, Ashland and the Superiors at the head of Lake Superior; to the westward the Lake Park region of Minnesota, the Red River Valley wheat fields, Valley of the Yellowstone, Yellowstone National Park, Bozeman and the Galletin Valley Helena and Butte, Missoula and the Bitter Root Valley, Clarks Fork of the Columbia, Lakes Pend d'Orille and Cœur d'Alene, Spokane city and falls, Palouse, Walla Walla, Big Bend and Yakima agricultural districts, Mt. Tacoma and the Cascade Mountains, Tacoma, Seattle, Puyallup Valley, Snoqualmie Falls, Puget Sound, the Columbia River, Portland and Willamette Valley, Gray's Harbor and city, Willapa Harbor and city of South Bend, Victoria on Vancouvers Island, Alaska on the north and California on the south.

The Northern Pacific runs two daily express trains with Dining car and complete Pullman service between St. Paul and Tacoma and Portland via Helena and Butte with Through Tourist and Vestibuled Pullman Sleepers from and to Chicago via the Wisconsin Central and first class through sleeping car service with the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.

Passengers from the east leaving St. Louis in the forenoon and Chicago in the afternoon, will make close connections with the morning train out of St. Paul at 9:00 a. m. following day: leaving Chicago at night connection will be made with Train no. 1, leaving St. Paul 4:15 the next afternoon.

YELLOWSTONE PARK SEASON, JUNE 1ST TO OCTOBER 1ST.

A Telling Experiment.

Some of the most prominent manufacturers of iron in Sheffield, England, have been endeavoring to ascertain whether, after all, oil hardening and annealing, or some such process, is really necessary for steel plates, the result of the trials thus far made showing that, in respect to compound armor, the necessity is obvious. A 9-inch plate of steel was for this purpose manufactured and cut into two plates, each four feet square, one piece being left untreated and the other oil hardened and annealed. Those were fired at by a 6-inch gun with Firth steel projectiles weighing 100 pounds, the striking energy of the blow upon the untreated plate being 2,389 foot tons, and the energy of the blow upon that which had been treated was 2,378 foot tons.

In the latter case the projectile made an indentation of ten and one-half inches, so that light was just visible through the center of the bulge at the back of the plate; the projectile rebounded, breaking into three pieces, and the plate, though cracked through, was whole, nor was any material splintered out either at the back or front. In the case of the untreated plate, the shot passed through, and the splintering of the steel around the hole in front of the plate spread over a space of fifteen inches across. The splintering around the hole at the back of the plate covered a space of thirty-three inches across, and the plate went into six pieces.—New York Sun.

Benjamin Ogle, a farmer living four miles southeast of Denison, Tex., about two weeks ago killed a copperhead snake at his woodpile, near his house, and, as his children played around the woodpile, he took an ax and cut it into small pieces to throw it away. While tossing the pieces to one side he picked up the head, and, as he motioned his arm, the mouth closed on the index finger of his left hand. One tooth entered the finger, but he thought nothing of the matter and paid no further attention to it.

The latter part of the week Ogle went into his pasture to cut up some cordwood, and while at work became very warm, as the day was very hot, and from that time his finger commenced swelling. Saturday he was in the city and his hand was swollen slightly. On returning home he felt sick. He still thought of no serious consequences. He grew worse, and a messenger was sent to the city for a physician to attend him, but before medical assistance arrived Ogle was dead. He was swollen out of proportion, and the left arm and breast had turned almost black.—Cor. Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Best Kind of a Kid Shoe.

For general wear where so fine a skin as kid is chosen, a medium priced, rather heavy, coarse skin in a well made shoe will give more satisfaction and wear than a fine high priced one. It is much more economical to keep two pairs of shoes for general wear and wear them alternately. Allowing one pair to rest while another is worn will make both pairs last three or four times as long as a single pair would. The shoes have a chance to get into proper condition, and, what is more important, to get aired and dried out from the close perspiration of the foot, which is very injurious to leather.—New York Tribune.

Travelers, tourists, miners, navvies and mariners use it with advantage.

"German Syrup"

The majority of well-read physicians now believe that Consumption is a germ disease. In other words, instead of being in the constitution itself it is caused by innumerable small creatures living in the lungs having no business there and eating them away as caterpillars do the leaves of trees.

A Germ Disease. The phlegm that is coughed up is those parts of the lungs which have been gnawed off and destroyed. These little bacilli, as the germs are called, are too small to be seen with the naked eye, but they are very much alive just the same, and enter the body in our food, in the air we breathe, and through the pores of the skin. Thence they get into the blood and finally arrive at the lungs where they fasten and increase with frightful rapidity. Then German Syrup comes in, loosens them, kills them, expels them, heals the places they leave, and so nourish and soothe that, in a short time consumptives become germ-proof and well.

Real Estate is the Basis of all Wealth.

AN INVESTMENT THAT WILL NET.

20% to 30%

90 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money. 87 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center; has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now pre-eminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland.

MARTIN'S BURGLAR.

As a general rule, night watchmen are the most sombre and uncommunicative of men. What there is in them is not of the sunshine, but of the aurora borealis. But we do not say this by way of disparagement, for they are just what they have to be in the natural order of things. To illustrate by a parallel case. The owl is not the gravest of birds simply because he belongs to the genus Strix, but for the reason that he has a bad habit of turning night into day.

But when a night watchman has anything which he considers worth telling, you may take it for granted that it is something out of the common run.

Mr. Dipper was one of the most efficient night watchman we ever knew, for you could no more catch him asleep than you could the proverbial weasel. Every hair on his head seemed charged with electricity, and constantly on the alert; and it was very evident that stroking his hair would produce the same sound as rubbing a cat's fur in the wrong direction.

The building under his nightly charge was a large silk warehouse on the outskirts of New York, and within a stone's throw of a large field, on which at the period embraced in my story, a traveling menagerie had pitched its tent. As such exhibitions often brought bad characters into the neighborhood, Martin was even more vigilant than usual, and fearing that he might fall asleep, he took along a small bulldog to act as deputy.

The night which Martin had such terrible cause to remember was a very gusty one in the latter part of the autumn, an' the old tree in front of the ware house was showering down its crimson foliage as if the red snow that is sometimes seen in the polar regions were falling in huge flakes.

He was a strict teetotaller, and as every nightwatchman requires some stimulant, he was in the habit of taking a pint of coffee with him and warming it up during the night.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock, he went up stairs for that purpose, as the only fireplace in the building was in a small front room on the second floor. After splitting up some old boxes, he made a blazing fire on the hearth, which lighted up the little room so resplendently that his lantern became a mere superfluity. The warmth was so grateful to his rheumatic limbs that he kept putting on fuel long after he had drank his allowance of hot coffee. It was his custom to inspect the doors and windows on the ground floor of the building at regular intervals; so that at 2 o'clock he went down stairs for that purpose, leaving the dog in a comfortable doze by the fire. He had completed his round of inspection and was on his way upstairs again, when he heard a tremendous crash of glass, followed by a howl from the dog, a scuffling sound, and all was still again. Martin cocked his Colt's revolver and rushed into the room, only to find the window sash shattered to fragments and the dog gone.

How was that state of things to be accounted for? The dog couldn't have jumped through the window, because the scuffling sound succeeded the crash; and furthermore, all the glass broken from the window was strewn on the floor, proving conclusively, that the window must have been broken from the outside.

Martin was puzzled for once; and the more he revolved the matter in his mind, the more it seemed that some supernatural agency had been at work. A glance from the window satisfied him that no human being could reach it, except by means of a ladder; for, although the tree we have mentioned stood directly in front of it, the intervening distance was too great for any one to use the tree as a means of access to the house.

Martin then resolved to examine the ground immediately under the window for traces left by the feet of a ladder, or by those of robbers. He was aware of the risk attached to such a course, but that could not deter him from seeking a clue to the disappearance of his favorite dog. He was on the point of going out, when it occurred to him that his duty to his employer, which was always a paramount consideration in his mind, forbade that he should take so rash a step, and that he had already been guilty of gross negligence in leaving the broken window for an instant. So he hurried back to the room from which the dog had disappeared, and prepared to watch there until morning. The fate of the dog had warned him of the danger of having a light in the room, and thus making himself a conspicuous target to any one or anything outside, so he extinguished the fire, covered up his lantern in one corner of the apartment, and sat in the dark with his finger on the trigger of his pistol, awaiting further developments. At this juncture there was a lull in the gale, which had raved with maniacal fury for several hours; and Martin's acute ear heard an indistinct sound below that was evidently caused by some one creeping on his hands and knees, for Martin had often heard hunters crawling in that manner to surprise their game.

A momentary silence ensued, and then he heard the tree violently agitated, as if some giant were ascending it, for there was no wind blowing at the time. A moment afterwards what appeared to be the leg of a burglar was thrust through the window, and he fired one barrel of his revolver at it, but was unable to fire a second as the exploded percussion cap had got wedged in behind the chamber of the pistol so as to prevent it from revolving.

But Martin meant business; so he threw the revolver at the mysterious object, and then followed it up with his bowie knife. But it soon dropped from his paralyzed hand, as he was jerked through the window, and found himself in the coils of a boaconstrictor.

The menagerie tent had blown down, the pole of it falling upon the serpents cage and so bending the iron rods as to let out its inmates.

Some hours afterwards the menagerie men were engaged in repairing damages, when they were horrified to see the enormous boa returning to its cage with the insensible night watchman in its powerful folds.

If Martin had offered the least resistance the constrictor would have crushed every bone in his body; but as he fainted immediately, it supposed he was dead, and was conveying him back to its cage to preform the process of deglutition at its leisure; for it was already surfeited by the dog which it had swallowed. Upon being attacked by the men, the boa at once dropped its prey, and Martin received medical aid as promptly as possible, but remained unconscious for upwards of twenty-four hours.

The morning after the memorable night, Martin's employer was taking a horseback ride at an early hour, when he noticed that the front window of the warehouse had been shattered to atoms. So he thereupon entered the building with his private key, but found no clue to Martin except the revolver, with one barrel discharged, lying on the floor, and the bowie knife upon the ground outside. He forthwith made inquiries about the neighborhood, and was informed of the singular occurrence at the menagerie.

"What was the color of the man's hair?" he asked with a view of identifying him.

"White as the driven snow," was the reply.

"Then," said he, "it must have been a different man, for Martin's hair was black as a coal."

"Don't be too sure he isn't the same man," observed the bystander; "for, such an adventure as that would turn any man's hair white in five minutes."

The proprietor of the warehouse evidently thought the suggestion entitled to weight; for he straightway repaired to the bedside of the wretched man, and instantly recognized him as the faithful watchman, in spite of his snow-white hair.

Martin was ultimately restored to health, and, strange to say, the order of nature is reversed in his case, and as he grows older his hair is gradually recovering its pristine blackness, so that by the time he is three-score and ten his locks will be as dark as Cimmerian darkness itself.—New York World.

NEW YORK'S GUIDE

A Harvard Student Who Has Discovered a Profitable Business.

"Would you like to be shown over the city, sir?"

The question was asked in one of the most popular of up-town cafes by a young man who wore clothing of fashionable cut, and wore it as if used to it, says the New York World. His face was honest and intelligent, and his manners, in spite of his abrupt questions, were those of a gentleman.

"I am a professional guide in New York," he continued, handing the writer an engraved card. "I take visitors to see anything there is to be seen in this town. If a man comes here and wants to see the 'good' places of interest, I take him, but by far the greater part of my income is derived from taking men to see the 'seamy' side. I do not charge much. Five dollars and whatever expenses a man wants to incur pays the bill."

"Where do you get your customers?" was asked.

"When a stranger comes to town he goes to a hotel. He has an evening or day to spare and wants to enjoy life. But he dosen't know where to go, and as a general thing he asks the advice of the hotel clerk. Then I am sent for and off we go. I don't drink. So one of us is bound to know where the 'other side of the street' is at any time.

I have saved visitors to this city a good many dollars, and in many cases have got them out of tight places where they would have had lots of trouble alone. When they go with me they don't wind up in a police court."

"But there is another side of the business, isn't there?"

Yes, and a much pleasanter one. I take patrons to the theaters, the park, Coney island, the big newspaper offices, and the Metropolitan Museum of art. Lots of people like to go there. The big bridge seems to be the greatest Mecca' however. Some people want to go to the cemeteries. The cathedral is asked for very often.

How did I get into the business? Well, it was laziness, I guess. I am a graduate of Harvard, and I couldn't bring myself to sit on a clerk's chair all day long. I can easily make $35 a week, and gentleman are frequently so delighted with their experience that they give me $15 or $20 more than the original price agreed upon. I have made as much as $115 a week—that was during the centennial celebration."

INHUMAN CHARITY.

A Cruel Challenge Accepted For the Sake of Wife and Babies.

The other day a crowd of men and boys gathered on a street corner in Lewiston, Me., says an exchange. One man pulled a silver watch from his pocket that was worth about $35. From another pocket he fished up a dozen matches.

"I'll give this watch," he said, "to whoever will hold a match in his thumb and finger, blaze down, till it burns up completely."

One fellow tried it and dropped the match when it began to burn. Another and still another did the same.

Then came one who was out of work and had a wife and little babies at home. He took the match and held it till it was charred between the thumb and finger and the nails on the thumb and finger were badly burned.

"Why did you do that for a watch?" asked some one.

"Oh, I must have money, and a burn is better than seeing one's little children starve," he answered as he walked away with the watch.

Sharp Chinese Detectives.

A French surgeon who lived in China declares that the Chinese detectives are unequaled in ability for ferreting out criminals. It is impossible for an evil-doer long to elude them. They have an eye upon every man woman and child, foreign or native, in China, and in addition watch each other. Informers are encouraged, and collusion is impossible. This instance of their skill is told: "A family in Tonquin was murdered and there was no apparent clew to the murderer. The entire detective corps of three provinces were placed upon the case, and in three weeks the murderer—none other than the chief of the secret police who handled the chase for the murderer—was arrested and beheaded."

AMMONIA IN BAKING POWDER.

Discussion Before the American Chemical Society.

To the Editor of The Tribune—Sir: I have just seen the report in your issue of Sept. 3 of the discussion at the Washington meeting of the American Chemical Society, Aug. 18, relative to the use of carbonate of ammonia in baking powders.

This report is incomplete and incorrect in many particulars, and as the paper which precipitated the discussion was read by me and was based upon my own experiments, I desire to make certain corrections in the interest of the truth and for the benefit of the large number of your readers to whom the question is one of great moment.

The paper as read before the society related that ammonia in baking powder is retained in the bread by reason of its affinity to the gluten. The consensus of opinion as expressed during the discussion was against the use of carbonate of ammonia in baking powder with the only exception of Dr. McMurtrie, who is now an employe of a baking powder company which uses carbonate of ammonia in its baking powder.

Of the other parties mentioned as having taken part in the discussion were Prof. Dr. Barker of the University of Pennsylvania, who is the President of the society and one of our highest authorities. In answer to a pleading by Prof. McMurtrie that only small quantities of ammonia were used in baking powders, he stated: "No matter how small the quantity, I must decline to be dosed medically without my consent when taking my meals."

Dr. E. H. Bartley, formerly chemist of the Brooklyn Board of Health and Professor of Chemistry at the Long Island College, likewise named, did not, I believe, take active part in the discussion, but is already on record as strongly opposed to the use of ammonium carbonate in baking powders.

Dr. Richardson volunteered only the question whether the flour used in the experiments was of good quality, of which I assured him by stating that it was the best and the flour used in my family.

Prof. Mallet was not present.

Your article is misleading in so far as it gives the impression that ammonia disappears on baking. My actual tests agree with those made by others, showing that ammonia remains in the bread. My investigations simply assign a new cause for its retention.

H. ENDEMANN, Ph. D.

New York Tribune, Sept. 17, 1891.

Note—Dr. Endemann, the writer of this communication, is well known in scientific circles, and was for twelve years chemist of the New York Board of Health.

The Baking Powder company above referred to is the Royal Baking Powder company of New York.

There is no such office known under our government as that of Government or United States Government Chemists—Chicago Tribune.

WHY THEY WANTED HER.

Not Because She Was Handsome nor Because Her Pa Was Rich.

There was rejoicing in the McGilway household, such rejoicing as is rarely known save when a boy baby is born or papa's named a winner. Cook forgot to be cross and the parrot in the front window sang sweet nothings unmolested to the small boys on the fence.

Down in his office Pa McGilway winked his matrimonial eye. In my lady's chamber was the busy hum of the sewing machine and the eternal chatter of the dressmaker with her mouth full of pins.

In the train coming home from college was Abbie, the daughter of the house, the pride of her father and the joy of her mother's heart. Dear, clever Abbie, a baby yesterday it seems to them, and yet to-day a woman grown, graduated from college and coming home with honors heaped upon her.

But not for long was darling Abbie coming to make glad the hearts of her parents and to cause the home of her childhood to bloom like a sweet syringa bush with her presence.

In that long, cool parlor, where the white lace curtains fluttered in the June breeze and great bunches of June roses waited to challenge the coming girl to the test of rival sweetness, there sat that day in silence ten young men. With hats in hand, all save one were breathing sorrowful maledictions against the others for being nearer the door than they.

Since early morn they had sat there, waiting the coming of her at whose feet were to be laid the ten hearts and ten fortunes here represented.

She was not so beautiful a girl, this coming queen, nor yet was Pa McGilway so rich a man. It was the fame of Abbie's graduating essay that had served as a lure to the most eligible men in town, explains the New York Commercial Advertiser, "How to Keep House on $10 a week," Miss Abbie McGilway.

What Marriage Means in France.

When a man marries in France he becomes legally responsible not alone for the support of his wife, but for support of her parents, should they become destitute. This law is older than the divorce law, and there seems to be some defect in the provision of the latter. A few weeks ago a young husband who had been divorced some time previously received a demand from his ex-mother-in-law for the usual installment of alimony which he had allowed her. He naturally demurred, contending that, as he was rid of his wife, the law would surely not continue to saddle his mother-in-law upon him. But the Paris courts, where the mother-in-law carried the case, told the young man that the code was unmistakable, and he would have to continue to support his ex-wife's mother. He then appealed to another court, which last week released the judgment of the lower court.—From the Boston Herald.

Artistic Advertising.

Undoubtedly the Ivory Soap people deserve credit for the best grade of illustrations now being used for advertising purposes. The series of full-page drawings which have been appearing on the last page of the Century represents some of the most capable book and magazine artists in the country. The series must have cost no small figure. As yet the "way up" artists do not sign the work they do for advertisers, but I apprehend that it will not be long ere we shall see in the advertising columns such names as George Wharton Edwards, E. W. Kemble, etc. Such men as these bring to their work, besides mere mechanical skill, a trained imagination and an artistic conception of things. These qualities, when used in connection with advertisements, command scarcely less interest than when used in the ordinary literary way.—(Printer's Ink, August 19, 1891.

Patents for Inventions

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the Government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, the PIONEER PRESS BUREAU has retained counsel expert in patent practice, and is therefore prepared to Obtain patents.

Conduct interferences.
Make special examinations.
Prosecute rejected cases.
Register trade marks and copyrights.
Render opinions as to scope and validity of patents.
Prosecute and defend infringement suits, etc. etc.

If you have an invention on hand send THE PIONEER PRESS BUREAU a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are not necessary unless the invention is of a complicated nature. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to THE BUREAU for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

PENSIONS

Pensions procured for soldiers of the Rebellion who served 90 days and are NOW disabled from ANY cause. This pension is payable whether the disability way incurred before, during or since service. Pensions for widows and children without regard to cause of soldier's death. Pensions for mothers and fathers who are NOW dependent, whether they were dependent on soldier when he died or not. Widows, children and parents are regarded as "dependent" in all cases where they have not sufficient income from property for their support.

Soldiers pensioned at less than twelve ($12.00) dollars per month and suffering from disability in addition to that named in their pension certificate, may obtain increase under the new law.

Information and advice given without charge. Best facilities ever offered to claimants to have their claims properly and diligently prosecuted. No charges unless successful. Write for information.

An unknown man was killed on the Great Northern railway tracks a mile south of Granite Falls. He had apparently laid down on the track with his body across the rails. The head was entirely severed from the trunk and was found 10 feet away. No clue to his identity.

The steamer China has unloaded the largest consignment of sugar ever brought to Duluth. The sugar took up the greater part of the vessel's hold and weighed 800 tons. As a car load is put at 16 tons it can be seen that the consignment would fill 50 cars. The sugar was consigned to Duluth and Twin City jobbers.

Street laborers grading North Fourth street at Stillwater struck for an increase of wages from $1.50 to $1.75 per day. The contract was let to Joseph Olsen, who sublet it to Wetherby, of Minneapolis. It is especially important that the work must be finished this fall.

As the steam thresher of Wolf & Torgesons was threshing on the farm of John Sunti, 12 miles south of Motley, the stacks caught fire from sparks from the engine. The machine was saved by running the engine to the rear and pulling it out but they demolished the smoke stack and then they succeeded in saving only part of the grain.

In a row in Mather Bros.'s brickyard at Mankato, between employes, a young man named Brown struck Elias Gustopson with a stick of wood, from the effects of which he died. Brown has disappeared. Gustopson had threatened Brown, and the evidence at the coroner's inquest tended to show that the deed was done in self defense. Deceased leaves a family in destitute circumstances.

Ole Johnson, a well-to-do farmer, living near Sacred Heart, who mysteriously disappeared some time ago was dug up from where he was buried the other day by the county commissioners and identified. It seems Johnson had become insane and was wandering about the country and was run over by one of the trains on the Great Northern railroad near Sacred Heart and his head severed from his body. No inquest was held and the remains quietly buried. Johnson leaves a family.

Mrs. Erick Johnson, a Norwegian lady of 60, accompanied by her son, came to the Milwaukee depot at Spring Valley the other morning to take the early train for Lake Preston, S. D. While coming from the baggage room she told her son she wished to sit down. He was taking her to the waiting room when she ran against the baggage trucks, which she attempted to sit down on but they swung from under her, she falling back striking her head in such a way as to paralyze her, causing her death within four hours.

NORTH DAKOTA.

E. G. Spelman, register of the Devil's lake land office, has sent his resignation to the President.

The land officers are at Minot ready for opening office. They expect a rush of business.

Washington's Farewell Address.

A vexed question has been raised concerning the authorship of this address. At present it appears that it was the joint production of Washington, Madison and Hamilton. Washington drew up a rough draft of it about the close of his first term, and requested Madison to revise and change it where he thought best. He did so; but it was not used then. Afterward, near the close of his second term, Washington placed it in the hands of Hamilton, and asked him to redress it. Thus it received the mental strain of three of our greatest Americans, yet it breathes the spirit and embodies the system of policy in which Washington had acted throughout his administration.

To quite an extent the counsels and recommendations of this farewell address have been adopted by our national management; and fortunate would it have been for America if all had been adopted and followed, especially that concerning characterizing parties by geographical divisions—Northern, Southern, Eastern and Western. The failure to adopt this has cost this generation alone thousands of most precious lives and millions of hard-earned wealth, besides endangering all our most precious rights and liberties.—Chautauquan.

SCATTERED DEATH.

A Runaway Team Plunges Down a Hill Into a Funeral Procession in Iowa.

One Person Instantly Killed and Four Others Will Die of Their Injuries.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Oct. 6.—A series of frightful accidents occurred in a funeral procession at Altoona to-day in which one man was killed outright, four other persons fatally injured and a score of people bruised and fractured.

A procession of forty carriages was following the remains of Nichols Hemstreet from the church to the cemetery, located some distance out of town. While the procession was winding down a hill a team in the rear became frightened at a steam threshing machine and started to run. The road was narrow and the runaway horses upset a dozen of carriages in front of them, breaking six of them into splinters and scattering the occupants broadcast. A panic ensued as the other teams ran away. Men and women jumped out of the carriages and were trampled on by runaway teams.

When quiet was restored it was found that Edwin Drestell of Altoona was killed; Joseph Perdue, a telegraph operator from Grinnell, internally injured and cannot live; Mrs. Joe Mason, aged seventy, leg broken in two places and otherwise injured, not expected to live; F. S. Sayre, skull fractured, cannot live till morning; Mrs. P. C. Lane of Newton, so badly frightened that there is believed to be no chance for recovery. Among others badly injured were Mrs. James Parker and Mrs. Isaac Parker, both of Altoona. Fully twenty others were more or less injured.

USED A WINCHESTER.

Probably Successful Attempt at Suicide by a Former St. Paulite.

HELENA, Mont., Special Telegram, Oct. 6.—Curth Von Euen placed the butt of his Winchester on the ground, leaned against the muzzle and touched it off with a stick. His chances of recovery are very slim. The deed occurred Wednesday on a ranch in the Flathead country not far from Demersville.

Von Euen was formerly a large stockholder in the Volks Zeitung of St. Paul and a wealthy young man. He is said to have married a belle of St. Paul and lived in such extravagant style that his fortune was dissipated. Reduced in circumstances, they settled on a ranch in the Flathead country, but happiness went with their money.

Some three months ago a former suitor for Mrs. Van Euen's hand came West and and went to work on the ranch as a farm hand. Family quarrels culminated in proceedings for divorce. Wednesday Van Euen and wife came to Demersville, she in a wagon and he on horseback. Both started for home at nearly the same time, but he was some distance ahead of her. When he reached Casey's ranch he stopped and asked her once more if she would live with him and try to do better. She said she would not, whereupon he shot himself in her presence.

DRINK AND JEALOUSY.

Attempted Wife Murder, Followed by Suicide, Caused by These Reasons.

GREEN BAY, Wis., Oct. 6.—Victor Lambean, a stonemason, shot his wife to-night and killed himself. Drink and jealousy are the causes. Mrs. Lambean cannot live.

An Immense Loss of Timber.

GRAND RAPIDS, Minn., Oct. 6.—Reports are coming in of the hurricane in the northern pineries. The best calculation to be had shows twelve to fifteen townships devastated, and the loss of timber is now sure to be into hundreds of millions of feet. Several surveyors' crews are still unheard from. Two others, however, are known to be saved. They are headed respectively by Marsh of Lincoln, Neb., and Arms of Bay City, Mich. Among the missing is County Surveyor E. R. Lewis of this county, who, being overdue from a trip toward Rainy river, is feared to be lost.

Preparing for a Convention.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special Telegram, Oct. 6.—Col. B. F. Parker of Milwaukee, grand secretary of the Independent Order of Good Templars; Grand Councilor Clark of Ripon and Mrs. A. C. Stone of Milwaukee are here to prepare for the meeting of the Grand lodge, which opens Wednesday morning in Masonic hall. Delegates will arrive to-morrow. Mr. Clark and Mrs. Stone are grand auditors and are at work on financial matters. There will be a reception to the delegates to-morrow night at Masonic hall, and a public meeting Wednesday night at the Second Methodist church.

Will Decide To-Day.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special Telegram, Oct. 6.—It will be decided to-morrow by the authorities whether young Feige, who shot Annie Lenz, will be examined in the county court as to his sanity or arrested on a charge of attempted murder. One course or the other will be taken, it is said, notwithstanding the refusal of the girl and her mother to prosecute. It is said Feige's relatives intend, if possible, to get him enlisted in the regular army for five years.

Raising a Purse for Matthews.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special Telegram, Oct. 6.—A subscription paper is going around to raise a fund of $200 for John Matthews, the half-breed who shot the burglar Harriman. The idea originated since it has appeared that Harriman will get well. Matthews for a time steadily denied that he shot the burglar, but admits it now.

Logs Coming Down the Black.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Special Telegram, Sept. 6.—The Black river is up to a good driving stage, and logs were running freely all Sunday and Monday. Crews of men are at work all along the stream, with a good prospect of getting enough logs to the boom to start all the idle mills and keep them running through the season.

SNOW AND FROST.

Winter's Skirmishers Descend Upon the Northwest.

BARK RAPIDS (Hubbard County), Minn., Oct. 6.—The first snow of the season fell to-day.

OWATONNA (Steele County), Minn., Oct. 5.—The first hard frost of the season fell last night. Ice was formed in low places. Crops of all kinds are out of danger.

MILLER (Hand County), S. D., Special Telegram, Oct. 5.—Considerable snow and sleet fell here to-day, with some rain. The weather is very cold.

FORT DODGE, Iowa, Oct. 5.—The first blighting frost of the season visited this section yesterday morning. It found the corn all safe except in odd patches on low ground.

STEWARTVILLE (Olmsted County), Minn., Special, Oct. 5.—A steady rain has fallen for the past three days and the ground is well soaked. Last night there was a heavy frost. Corn is out of the way and will be a fair crop.

MINNEAPOLIS IN 1892.

That City Chosen as the Next Place for Holding the Methodist Conference.

RED WING, Minn., Special, Oct. 6.—Yesterday was devoted by the Methodists to divine services wholly. In the morning Bishop Merrill preached at the M. E. church to an audience that taxed the seating capacity of the church. In the afternoon he held ordination services, at which the following were ordained:

As Deacons—A. J. Williams, E. C. Clemens, H. M. Taylor, G. S. Parker, G. A. Cowden, Frank Parr, H. C. Maynard, William Clague, J. W. Heard, G. W. Empey, R. P. Folsom, T. A. Fortham, G. A. Cooke. As Elders—J. M. Brown, H. W. Hart, D. Wolfe, H. A. Cone, T. Billing, N. Wood, George West.

Business sessions were resumed this morning. Rev. C. H. Stocking led in prayer.

The presiding elder, George R. Hair (who presented his report), Alfred Cressy, E. H. Broason, W. S. Cochrane, William Copp, E. W. Haley, M. D. Termilliger, W. V. Russell, H. J. Harrington, Oliver Williams, C. H. Sweatt, F. M. Rule, E. P. Robertson, George R. Geer, W. E. Hawley, Peter Clare, William Brown.

H. J. Harrington was granted supernumerary relations.

John Stafford, presiding elder of the Minneapolis district, made his report and the following elders were passed in character and continued as effective:

J. W. Davids, J. W. Mower, John Doran, O. H. P. Smith, Elijah Haley, R. A. Sadlier, H. H. French, David Tice, J. F. Stout, C. N. Stowers, Benjamin Longley, R. N. McKaig, O. H. Tiffany, T. P. Allen, H. W. Knowles, W. K. Marshall, C. M. Heard, Thomas M. Clarry, J. C. Gullett, R. M. Carter, J. J. Christ R. R. Atchison, Jabez Brooks, James H. Macomber, G. F. Newcomb, W. W. Saterlee.

C. F. Browne was transferred to the Michigan conference.

H. B. Molineax was granted a superannuated relation.

R. N. Carter and J. W. Meyer were granted supernumerary relations.

James S. Garwin, J. R. Berry, G. F. Wells, A. C. Reynolds, Levi Hall, J. S. Bean, A. W. Edwards, E. J. Bickell, N. W. Jordan, James Dorr J. G. Teter, C. S. Royer, B. F. Kephart.

Charles Griswold and E. J. Bickel were changed in relation to superannuated.

Mr. Copp spoke on the supernumerary relations of J. R. Berry, and closed by moving that he be located, to which Bishop Merrill replied, "You will have to change the discipline first."

C. A. Cressey, Arinemus Davis, Samuel Lothrop, Aaron Turner, Noah Lothrop and F. O. Holman were made effective.

R. E. Schuh was reported transferred to the New England conference.

J. H. Beebee was reported transferred to the Central New York conference.

A. R. Archibald and A. J. Eltman were granted supernumerary relations.

"Have you got a charge for him?" asked Bishop Merrill of Presiding Elder McKinley, who asked that C. A. Cressey be made effective.

"It is the bishop, I think, who assigns to charges," replied McKinley; "I wish to say that we have here a bishop who does that duty, though it disturbs the arrangements of the presiding elders."

The sum of $18 was appropriated to A. J. Eltman.

The following were continued on the superannuated list:

William M. Bear, George Galpine, David Brooks, John Kerns, A. M. Stephens, A. H. Abbott, A. Hitchcock, J. L. Smith, P. A. Moore, Cyrus Brooks, R. D. Pripe, C. Hobart, G. W. T. Wright, M. O. McKiff, J. H. Stuntz, Silas Bolles, L. D. Brown, Joshua Barnard, S. F. Phelps, J. O. Rich, E. A. Healey, C. F. Garwid, F. H. Tubbs, E. Tucker, G. B. Cople, E. S. Buner, John Lamberson, B. G. Coffin, A. Matson.

As trustees of the Hamline university the following were elected:

H. R. Bull, J. M. Williams, E. F. Markle, S. S. Thorpe, J. T. Wyman, all to hold office till 1895.

George E. Tindall was continued on trial.

Invitations to hold the next conference there were received from the Centenary church at Minneapolis, Fergus Falls and Hamline. The vote stood: Minneapolis, 103; Hamline, 8; Fergus Falls, 8.

REV. SHUMATE SUSPENDED.

The report of the select committee in the case of L. H. Shumate was presented. It was that it found the accused guilty on his formal plea and adjudged he be suspended one year. Sentence was ordered entered accordingly.

The following were admitted on trial:

Edward L. Ferris, R. C. Manley, R. L. Snyder, George Willett, Walter T. Scott, Frank E. Higgins, Will H. Skemp, A. W. Taylor, J. W. Heard, G. W. Emper, B. C. Gillis, G. A. Cook, M. L. Hutton.

When the report on the Epworth league was presented the clause that "loyalty demands that ministers use their influence to organize a chapter of the Epworth league in every charge," was opposed by some on the ground that it would create contention with the Society of Christian Endeavor, which exists in many charges and is doing good work. A substitute, offered by Dr. McKinley, to the effect that wherever practicable Epworth league chapters be organized was adopted. A resolution providing for making pastors ex-officio members of Epworth leagues was lost.

The report of the committee on temperance was in favor of absolute prohibition and against license as wrong in principle. The exhibit or sale of liquor at county fairs is protested against and all dealers in liquor should be branded as criminals.

The committee on tobacco presented its report. The bishop considered this committee and its report as superfluous and unnecessary. When the committee was appointed on tobacco he did not know but what it was on supply. Rev. McClary said that the tobacco question was a very serious one. A great deal of trouble had been caused the conference by one of its members using tobacco. A substitute was adopted.

The report of the committee on education recommends the conference to endorse the movement for the establishment of a national university at Washington.

The committee on church extension reported that $23,921 had been collected.

The amounts allowed to those on the superannuated list were distributed. The total was $5,027.55.

The sum of $4,000 was recommended to be allowed for the presiding elders to apportion among the charges in their districts.

Rev. R. G. McCauslin, of the Canada conference, was received on his credentials as an elder from Canada.

Rev. Royer was appointed district corresponding secretary for the Sabbath school union.

Rev. David Morgan was appointed superintendent of the Bethel mission, St. Paul.

Rev. Hingeley, presiding elder of the Fergus Falls district, who was to be placed in the pastorate by the bishop, was, on behalf of those under his charge, presented with a complete set of the Biblical, theological and ecclesiastical encyclopedia. He responded feelingly.

This evening memorial services for the departed ones were held.

To-morrow morning the appointments will be announced and the conference will close.

Train Robbers Make a Big Haul.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Special Telegram, Oct. 6.—An extensive freight train robbery occurred on the Milwaukee road Saturday night between Lake City and Red Wing. It is known that a number of railroad detectives have been ordered to that locality and are working through all that part of the country. The report is that seal skins and fine imported shawls worth several thousand dollars, which were in three cases, were taken from the car.

A Successful Rush for Liberty.

CROOKSTON, Minn., Special Telegram, Oct. 6.—Two prisoners escaped from jail in this city to-night by rushing by the jailer as he was bringing in wood. They were in for larceny committed in East Grand Forks.

Rev. Chapman writes from the M. E. Conferance at Red Wing that he wil return home this week and will hold services as usual next Sunday evening.

It is estimated that fully eighty-five per cent of the wheat in this vicinity is stacked, In many places large amounts is still standing in the shock.

Several of the young folks of the village passed a pleasant evening last Saturday night at a party given by Ole Wiste, on his farm a couple of miles north of here.

A large crew of surveyors arrived last Monday and are here making preparations for three months work surveying on the reservation east of here. Another large crew will also be here in a couple of weeks,

Martin Williams has taken the contract from Jacob Andrist, the Crookston mail contractor, to carry the mail from here to Wylie and return. The mail leaves here at 10 a. m, and gets back at 2 p. m. Our business men are finding it a very conveniant arrangement.

Esty Berry one of the men who came up last Friday to work on the railroad was arrested Friday afternoon by Marshall Williams for leading a horse on the sidewalk. He was brought before Justice Ives and not being able to pay his fine was given three days in the village jail.

Crookston Times: President McKinnon and Secretary Wyatt returned yesterday from the Fargo races. They report that there are about 100 horses entered for races there and nearly all of them will be present at the meeting in this city this month. A large force of men have been at work all week up on the track here and are putting it in fine shape. It has been made 40 feet wider and new grand stands and stables have been built. There are already about 25 entries made for the races.

The railroad contractors on the road between here and Red Lake Falls are having a hard time of it at present. The recent heavy rains have made it almost impossible for them to do any work some parts of the line being under several feet of water. There is some doubt about their being able to finish their contracts this fall.

East Grand Forks comes to the front with a murder and two highway robberies inside of twenty-four hours. The town is a disgrace to Polk county and the state of Minnesota and steps should be taken immediately to stop the enormous amount of crime being committed there. Certain it is that the city will do next to nothing and it is high time the county and state interfered.

The country has not been as wet as now in several years and this will be a disastrous fall for the farmer. Very little plowing is being done or can be done it being impossible for many farmers to go onto their fields with a team. Threshing machines are unable to move and very little threshing will be done until after the ground freezes. The roads are all impassible and the farmers are forced to idleness at a time when they should all be busy at work.

County Attorney Holston informs the Journal that about $5,000 remains uncollected on the seed grain notes and as some of the parties have left the country the probability is that some of it never will be collected. Sixteen letters out of the whole number of notices sent out have been returned to him. Probably the most of those that are here will pay up as soon as they are able.—Polk County Journal.

An exchange says: If we were to put a two line local in the most obscure corner of the paper which stated that a certain business man charged more for his goods or kept an inferior quality than his competitors that man would employ a slugger to come around and kill us the next morning. But if we were to ask that same man for an advertisement for his wares, he would say: "I don't believe in advertising, nobody reads the paper."

A very large tree, one of the largest in California, the country of big trees, was discovered near Arlington, Snohomish county, a few days ago. It is a cedar, and measures sixty-eight feet in circumferance. Around the knotty roots the tree measures ninety-nine feet. About seventy-five feet from the ground it forks into four immense branches and just below the forks is a big knot hole. Five men climbed into the hole and explored the interior of the tree. It was found to be a mere shell, and about twenty five feet down it would afford standing room for forty men. The tree is still green, and a remarkable feature is said to be that it is barked on the inside and outside alike. Lumberman.

Storms originating in September will reach their crisis about October 2nd. A smart dash of early winter will appear on the heel of these storms, Equinox of Venus on the 7th, The 10th to 13th will call for dangerous storms, especially on the lakes Those most concerned please note this fact. Cold and freezing will follow to the north, until higher temperature on the 17th and 19th reacts into secondary storms. From the 22nd to 25th is a period in which Vulcan, Mercury, Venus and Moon will combine their disturbing forces. Lake and sea navigators ought to be watchful of indications. Snow in extreme north and west, with sleet. Reactionary storms about 29th followed by a frosty close,

There has lately been illustration of the working of the inflation policy in the Argentine Republic and the average American citizen can easily comprehend the lesson that it teaches. The increase of currency in that country has not benefited anybody. In a general way the effect has been wholly dissappointing and disastrous, The working people in particular have found it a detriment. They were paid the same wages before the inflation that they are now receiving. There has been no increase in that respect. They only get the same number of dollars for a given quantity of service under the cheap money system that they got under the opposite system. But the difference in the two kinds of dollars is very destinct and important in the former case the dollar would buy about three times as much of the comforts and necessaries of life as in the latter case. This would be the result of silver inflation in the United States, All the articles that the laborer has to buy would increase the price but his wages would remain unchanged. He would be paid the same number of dollars but they would not purchase the same quantity of food and clothing. The farmer would still sell their wheat at a dollar a bushel perhaps, but the dollar would not be worth more than 80 cents. There would be no gain for the class by a policy by which they would have to take less than a dollar for a dollars worth of wheat or other product And yet that is the policy which Senator Vest recommends to them, That is what the free coinage of silver means to the man who works at a trade or tills the soil; and the republican party is opposed to it because of the evil which it would thus surely produce.—Grand Forks Herald.

The recent census shows the ratio of retail liquor dealers to population in the several states. Alabama has the least with one saloon to 1,188 inhabitants, while Montana has the most saloons in proportion to population, having one saloon to every 69 inhabitants. Of the 42 states in the list 21 have a larger proportonate number of saloons and 20 less than Minnesota. This state has 1 saloon to every 893 inhabitants. Iowa (prohibition) has one liquor dealer to every 455 persons; Maine (prohibition) one to every 702; Kansas (prohibition) one to every 858 and Vermont (prohibition) one to every 825. Thus it seems that the prohibition states have almost as many liquor dealers as Minnesota, The great state of New York has one saloon to every 157 inhabitants,

"I am not a candidate either for governorship or senatorship," said Knute Nelson yesterday at Washington "I am a Republican and a believer in Republican principles, but I am only a private citizen practicing law and trying to make an honest living, When I gave you an interview three years ago stating that I intended to retire from public life and would not be a candidate for re-nomination to congress I meant every word of it. I am a poor man and cannot afford to dabble in politics except to help my friends whenever I can for they are always kind and helpful to me. I wish the people would believe me and stop using my name for public places I am out of politics for good,"

A reporter asked him what brought you to Washington this time?

"The steam cars brought me here and I came to look after business in the land office for some of my clients. As soon as this business is transacted I will return to Alexandria and go to work in my law office."

Ada Index. Yesterday morning Bernt Anderson was found dead in a slough half a mile north of Peter Ramstad's residence in McDonaldsville. It is thought probable that Anderson committed suicide as he left a letter thanking Mr. Ramstad and family,—with whom he had resided, for kind treatment, but stated that he did not think a leper should live with them any longer. Anderson, however, did not have leprosy but was afflicted with some kind of a skin decease. He has been missing since Sunday, but was not found until yesterday, The deceased was a man of about 55 years of age, and apparrantly strong and healthy.

Anderson was found lying on his back with his hands folded and an examination of his body failed to show any marks or discoloration. His features looked natural and appearances indicated that he died a natural death.

A Pioneer Press special from Grand Rapids Minn., says: It is learned that a most destructive storm has passed over the northern portion of this and Beltrami counties felling an immense amount of pine timber and causing some loss of life. Particulars are impossible to get at, owing to remoteness of the section which is unsettled and unoccupied except by claim holders and cruisers for timber and minera lands. Whole townships are known to have been swept over timber being leveled as grain before the reaper. One cruiser has reached here and reports an almost marvelous escape. He says the chief of the surveying party in the woods was struck by a tree and while being taken out via the Canadian country he died on a boat in the Lake of the Woods. His name is unknown. Several United States surveying parties were at work in the region devastated. If half that is reported is true, there has been damage to pine timber amounting to many thousands of dollars and if it is not immediately cut the loss will reach hundreds of thousands, The center of destruction was thirty to forty miles this side of the boundary line and immediately north of this place,

Grand Forks, N. D, Oct. 4.—[Special]—Robert L. Woods, justice of the peace of East Grand Forks, was shot and killed this morning by unknown parties, The murdered man had been sitting up all night with a sick room mate, and about 3 o'clock a. m. had started out to call a doctor. That was the last that was ever seen of him alive. A few moments after a polceman stationed near the bridge heard a shot and rushed down the street to find Mr. Woods lying on the ground. His revolver lay beside him, with all the chambers loaded. He was unconscious when found, the shot having penetrated the skull through the left eye, and he did not regain consciousness at any time pefore 10 o'clock when he died,

A search of the locality where the murder was committed showed that the buglars had cut a panel from the rear door of Labsingers saloon from which place a trail of blood led to the spot where Mr. Woods was found, This gives rise to the theory that. in going for the doctor, Mr. Woods had taken a short cut through the alley, where he had surprised the burglars at work. It is thought that he attempted to arrest them and that they took him for the night watch and that he was shot before he had a chance to make any resistance The person who did the shooting had robbed the saloon of an overcoat and $35 in money.

While there is no clew to the murderers the horrible affair is but the natural outcome of a condition of affairs which has prevailed here for some time. The recent rains had filled East Grand Forks to overflowing with farm hands temporarily out of employment. Saloons and gambling dens have been running wide open and the week has seen numerous burglaries, robberies and offences of a minor nature.

Robert L. Wood was a Canadian by birth; he was about 35 years of age and was unmarried. He came to East Grand Forks five years ago, and was elected city justice last spring. It was well known that he was inimical to the gambling interests and a wide open policy, as he was daring and outspoken in his beliefs. His family who live at Moulinette, Ont., have been notified but have not yet been heard from.

Coroner Shepard, of Crookston, is expected here in the morning when an inquest will be held.

Why Kittens Are So Sad.

"Why don't you cut off the end of that cat's tail?" asked the old woman in the calico sunbonnet, leaning over the back fence of a suburban residence.

"Cut off my pet's tail!" replied the little housewife, astonished. "Why should I?"

"Because if you don't," responded the old woman, dismally, "your pussy will endure a great deal of unnecessary suffering."

"And why, pray?"

"Don't you know," said the old woman, in tones positively sepulchral, "that every kitten is born with a worm in the end of its tail?"

"Never heard of it."

"You are young yet, my dear. I, who am old and know things, tell you that such is the fact. Watch for yourself the peculiar restless curl in the end of a kitten's tail, and you will have evidence of what I mean. You do not want your cat to suffer. Therefore, chop it off."

"But I don't believe such nonsense!" exclaimed the housewife.

"Child!" replied the old woman with the calico sunbonnet, "you can easily find out whether I am right or wrong. I have chopped off the end of the tail of every kitten I have ever had and each one had a worm in it. It looked somewhat like an angle worm. I make a business of cutting off cat's tails, chiefly for the purpose of preventing suffering, and my charge is only fifty cents apiece."—Washington Star.

The Production of Physical Beauty.

The idea of beauty is wholly relative, and varies with places and times. Artists make beauty to consist in certain proportions of the parts of the skeleton and in the harmony of the muscular development. We might perhaps be more definite by saying that to be handsome at rest and in motion the man ought to present the traits of health and moderate strength, and in addition to be in possession of his means of locomotion and of natural defense. This view of beauty originates in the consideration that there is a necessary relation between vigor, skill, agility and the outer form of the body at rest and in motion. Thus defined, the type of beauty, in a given race or medium, is an ideal which we seek to revive by physical education.

It follows that a man specially devoted to any one exercise cannot be handsome. This may be said of all the professions that localize muscular work in a restricted region of the body. There are, however, some sports that have the advantage of exercising equally the upper and lower limbs, such, for example, as wrestling, French boxing, swimming and canoeing with two oars and a sliding seat. A good gymnastics includes complete exercises and incomplete or unsymmetrical exercises, under such a condition as that they shall correct one another, and that the work shall bear upon the lower and upper limbs.—George Demeny in Popular Science Monthly.

Cheese Inhabitants.

There is a man at a small stand in the lobby of an uptown hotel who is doing a thriving business by illustrating to customers the truth from Butler's "Hudibras," which I cannot quote exactly at the moment, to the effect that great men have lesser men to bite 'em, and the lesser ones still smaller things, ad infinitum. He does it by displaying under a small but powerful microscope a piece of food—almost any kind of solid food—about the size of an ordinary pinhead. The revelation is startling to all, sickening to some; but suggestive to all who care to subject such supplies as cheese, for instance, to inspection.

On a piece of Stilton cheese no larger than a pin's head I counted seven living and lively parasites, the largest apparently the size of my little finger nail. I may add in the interest of home manufacturers that a similar piece of Brie cheese of American make did not appear to disadvantage under the microscope, which I immediately secured for home use.—New York Tribune.

Why a Tutor Replaced a Governess.

The decision of the queen regent of Spain to supplant the governess of little King Alfonso with an ablebodied tutor has a short and curious history.

Last winter one of the king's relatives took to him from Vienna a toy squirt gun, which he was expected to use in watering his garden. The squirt gun became at once the king's pet toy, and he did not hesitate to find all sorts of uses for it which were not conducive to the comfort of his little playmates or to the dignity of the women of the court. A few weeks ago at a grand garden party Alfonso half hid himself behind a shrub and shouted at a big general in a light blue and gold uniform.

The general approached the shrub, and Alfonso held up a handful of flowers to induce him to come nearer. When close to the shrub the point of the king's Viennese squirt gun suddenly appeared in the leaves, and in a second the fine light blue and gold uniform was spotted and dripping. The general backed quickly out of range, and before Alfonso could reload and follow up his victory, was safe from further hostilities and under the protecting eye of the queen regent.

Alfonso then tried to lure into ambush Mgr. Raffaelle Merry del Val, son of the Spanish embassador at Vienna, but the young prelate had seen the general's plight and was wary enough to keep several persons between him and his sovereign all the rest of the afternoon.

On the following day it was decided at the royal palace that a masculine hand was needed to lie heavy on Alfonso, and the cautious Mgr. Merry del Val was selected to train his majesty.—London Letter.

She Is One Hundred and Three Years Old

In Bay Ridge, not far from the Brooklyn city line, is a grouping of five generations. That in itself is, perhaps, not remarkable; but one member of the group has passed the century mark in years, and another has reached the age of eighty years. The Weir family is well known, and in the Bay Ridge homestead, surrounded by every possible floral beauty, live Mrs. Russell, aged 103 years; Mrs. James Weir, aged eighty years, and the younger members—James Weir, Jr., Ebenezer Weir and his little son, Ebenezer, Jr., or Ebbie, as the baby is called.

Mrs. Russell is extremely sensitive regarding her age. She dislikes anything approaching publicity of herself and shuns all strangers who would seek her presence, feeling far from complimented when her remarkable age is commented upon. Only intimate friends and the immediate family are ever permitted to see her. She was born in London, England, in 1788, her maiden name being Morris. About forty-one years ago the family came to America, and became residents of Bay Ridge. The extensive greenhouses and grounds of the Weir family are features of the place.

Mrs. Russell's failing is deafness. Her eyesight is excellent, her general health and memory are good, and she is a very sprightly old lady. The family guard and cherish her tenderly. Until two years ago she was a regular attendant of the Greenwood Baptist church at Fourth avenue and Fifteenth street, South Brooklyn. The Bible is her favorite study, and she is well versed in its teachings, quoting whole chapters of it. Passing events in daily life are noted by her with considerable interest. Mrs. Russell and Mrs. Weir occasionally make fancy nothings for the church fairs of the township, and their little articles are always highly prized.—New York Sun.

Teacup Superstitions.

Here are a few old superstitions regarding the ever friendly cup that cheers: If while the tea is being made and the lid, which has been removed to pour in the water, is forgotten, it is a sure sign that some one will "drop in to tea."

If a single person happens to have two spoons in his or her saucer, it is a prediction that the fortunate (or unfortunate?) drinker of that particular cup will be married within a year from that date.

If you put cream in your cup before the sugar it will "cross your love," so be very careful.

If a tea stalk floats in the cup it is called a "beau," and when this is seen unmarried women should stir their tea very quickly round and round and round and then hold the spoon upright in the center of the cup. If the "beau" is attracted to the spoon and clings to it, he will be sure to call very shortly, if not that same evening, but if the stalk goes to the side of the cup he will not come.

Examine the tea leaves in your cup if you are plebeian enough to boil your tea instead of drawing it in the refined and dainty fashion, for a lot of leaves mean money and fortune.

If you want to know how many years will elapse before you may expect to be married, balance your spoon on the edge of your cup, first noting that it is perfectly dry, fill another spoon partly with tea, and holding it above the balanced spoon, let the drops of tea gather to the tip of the spoon and gently fall into the bowl of the one below. Count the drops—each one stands for a year.

It is a sign of fair weather if the cluster of small air bubbles formed by the sugar collect and remain in the center of the cup. If they rush to the sides it will surely rain before night.—New York Advertiser.

Good for the Tongue.

The tongue may be trained to precision of action quite as much as any member of the human frame, and that is one of the functions of elocutionary study. A great deal may be done, however, by private practice in distinctness of enunciation, and here are some good sentences to work upon. Begin very slowly and gradually increase, but no faster than can be done with perfect accuracy of pronunciation:

Gaze on the gay gray brigade.

The sea ceaseth and it sufficeth us.

Say, should such a shapely sash shabby stitches show?

Strange strategic statistics.

Give Grimes Jim's gilt gig whip.

Sarah in a shawl shoveled soft snow softly.

She sells seashells.

Smith's spirit flask split Philip's sixth sister's fifth squirrel's skull.—Good Housekeeping.

Dealing in Futures.

The hungry pigs they followed him and laughed with joy to see
The tenderfoot throw pockets full of acorns on the ground,
Which they devoured with munching jaws as fast as they were found.

But one escaped their greedy search and grew into a tree
As high as corn, and this year's corn was very high—to he!
It spread its branches east and west, and whispered, as it would Have blessed the man whose little deed had grown to so great good.

Long years pass on, some western men scan all the treeless plain;
For something which they cannot see their eager eyes they strain;
They had the rope, they caught the horse, they've got the man likewise,
Now if they could but find a tree, complete would be their prize.

Joy! Joy! They laugh with gladsome hearts; far, far away they see—
And bless the man that sowed for them this acorn planted tree,
They stand beneath its shady boughs, they fix the one line swing—
And when the picnic rode away the oak was blossoming.

Oh, let us, then, whate'er we do, plant acorns while we may,
For one of them may grow to be a lusty tree some day;
And then, some pleasant morning, when we've nothing else to do,
That tree will be a handy thing to hang a peddler, book agent, proofreader, philanthropist, poet, editor, worthy woman, lecturer, amateur photographer, baseball crank, tennis fiend and several other people who need a little hanging too.

—R. J. Burdette in Boston Globe.

A Queer Place for a Nest.

Boots and shoes that have retired from business through decrepitude may come in handy in still more strange ways. In passing under some trees a gentleman's notice was attracted by an old boot fastened to a branch. As he approached it a bird flew out. On examination the boot was found to contain a nestful of young birds.—Chambers' Journal.

A Telling Experiment.

Some of the most prominent manufacturers of iron in Sheffield, England, have been endeavoring to ascertain whether, after all, oil hardening and annealing, or some such process, is really necessary for steel plates, the result of the trials thus far made showing that, in respect to compound armor, the necessity is obvious. A 9-inch plate of steel was for this purpose manufactured and cut into two plates, each four feet square, one piece being left untreated and the other oil hardened and annealed. These were fired at by a 6-inch gun with Firth steel projectiles weighing 100 pounds, the striking energy of the blow upon the untreated plate being 9,380 foot tons, and the energy of the blow upon that which had been treated was 2,378 foot tons.

In the latter case the projectile made an indentation of ten and one-half inches, so that light was just visible through the center of the bulge at the back of the plate; the projectile rebounded, breaking into three pieces, and the plate, though cracked through, was whole, nor was any material splintered out either at the back or front. In the case of the nontreated plate, the shot passed through, and the splintering of the steel around the hole in front of the plate spread over a space of fifteen inches across. The splintering around the hole at the back of the plate covered a space of thirty-three inches across, and the plate went into six pieces.—New York Sun.

Benjamin Ogle, a farmer living four miles southeast of Denison, Tex., about two weeks ago killed a copperhead snake at his woodpile, near his house, and, as his children played around the woodpile, he took an ax and cut it into small pieces to throw it away. While tossing the pieces to one side he picked up the head, and, as he motioned his arm, the mouth closed on the index finger of his left hand. One tooth entered the finger, but he thought nothing of the matter and paid no further attention to it.

The latter part of the week Ogle went into his pasture to cut up some cordwood, and while at work became very warm, as the day was very hot, and from that time his finger commenced swelling. Saturday he was in the city and his hand was swollen slightly. On returning home he felt sick. He still thought of no serious consequences. He grew worse, and a messenger was sent to the city for a physician to attend him, but before medical assistance arrived Ogle was dead. He was swollen out of proportion, and the left arm and breast had turned almost black.—Cor. Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Best Kind of a Kid Shoe.

For general wear where so fine a skin as kid is chosen, a medium priced, rather heavy, coarse skin in a well made shoe will give more satisfaction and wear than a fine high priced one. It is much more economical to keep two pairs of shoes for general wear and wear them alternately. Allowing one pair to rest while another is worn will make both pairs last three or four times as long as a single pair would. The shoes have a chance to get into proper condition, and, what is more important, to get aired and dried out from the close perspiration of the foot, which is very injurious to leather.—New York Tribune.

"August Flower"

I had been troubled five months with Dyspepsia. The doctors told me it was chronic. I had a fullness after eating and a heavy load in the pit of my stomach. I suffered frequently from a Water Brash of clear matter. Sometimes a deathly Sickness at the Stomach would overtake me. Then again I would have the terrible pains of Wind Colic. At such times I would try to belch and could not. I was working then for Thomas McHenry, Druggist, Cor. Irwin and Western Ave., Allegheny City, Pa., in whose employ I had been for seven years. Finally I used August Flower, and after using just one bottle for two weeks, was entirely relieved of all the trouble. I can now eat things I dared not touch before. I would like to refer you to Mr. McHenry, for whom I worked, who knows all about my condition, and from whom I bought the medicine. I live with my wife and family at 39 James St., Allegheny City, Pa. 99 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money. 87 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center; has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now pre-eminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland.

VEGETABLE CURIOSITY.

A Plant Out in California That Produces Hard Boiled Eggs.

Among the many curious things in the plant world, says the San Francisco Examiner, such as flowers that eat flies, the Holy Ghost plant, that bears a white dove in its petals, and others equally interesting, there is none more curious than the solanum gatratrum, a recent addition to Golden Gate park conservatory.

This plant bears hard-boiled eggs for fruit. At least, the fruit resembles a hard-boiled egg, with the shell taken off, as nearly as a truly egg can.

There are three eggs on the park plant—one as large as a pigeon's egg, another the size of a turkey's product, and the third is about 5½ inches long by 2½ wide. In color they are identical to the bluish white of the cooked article of hen production. The laying plant was the great object of attraction in the conservatory and groups of people stood before it, wondering what it was and whether the fruit was good to eat.

The blossom is small, of a rich purple hue, and when the flower drops off a little white egg can be seen. This grows to about the size of its cousin, the pear-shaped egg plant of commerce. But the white variety preserves the perfect egg-shape in all stages of its development.

It thrives in the open air wherever the purple plant grows, and is cultivated in the same way. Another variety of the same family bears a golden yellow fruit, but the white variety is the only one in which the fruit is of the ovoid form.

When pressed between the fingers the white fruit is found to possess the same soft, elastic feeling as a hard-boiled egg. The interior is filled with cells and small seeds, like the purple plant of the tomato.

Aside from its utility as an article of food it is prized for its rarity and beauty. The plant stands two feet high, and has broad, soft, oval leaves of dark green.

Poultry for Profit.

Are you keeping poultry for profit, either in large or small numbers? No matter if you keep only a dozen hens; are they paying you a profit over and above their keep and eggs and poultry used in your own family? If not, can you explain why not? For poultry properly kept pays the best of any domestic animals. Do you care to learn how a man of experience does make his hens pay better than $2.50 per year for each hen, from eggs alone; and who has to buy all of his grain and meat food? Do you desire to know how to make hens lay the most eggs in a year, how to dress and sell poultry and eggs to obtain the highest price? Do you care to learn about, and how to obtain the best breeds and crosses from which to get the largest number of eggs and most pounds of poultry to sell? And when and where to sell them? Do you desire to know how to prevent and treat diseases of poultry; how to get your hens through the moulting season well and strong; how to bring your pullets to early laying, etc.? Do you care to learn how to build the best poultry houses and yards economically, warm and dry? In short, do you desire to know how to make money with a few hens? If so, for the small sum of fifty cents you can learn all of the above and much more. Subscribe for one year to the FARM-POULTRY, if for no longer. Sample copy will be sent free. It is acknowledged on all sides to be the "Best Poultry Paper Published in the world. FARM-POULTRY is published by I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., and edited by Mr. A. F. The man who "wouldn't do a thing for the world" is frequently found doing it for himself.

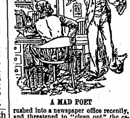
Probably your grandmother when a child, knew and used Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.



A MAD POET

rushed into a newspaper office recently, and threatened to "clean out" the establishment, because they printed his verses wrong. Said he: "I wrote, 'To dwell forever in a grot of peace,' and you idiots put it 'a pot of grease.'" The mortified editor presented him with a vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, a year's subscription and an apology.

The little "Pellets" positively cure sick and nervous headache, biliousness, costiveness, and all derangements of the stomach, bowels and liver. It's a large contract, but the smallest things in the world do the business—Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They're the smallest, but the most effective. They go to work in the right way. They cleanse and renovate the liver, stomach and bowels thoroughly—but they do it mildly and gently. You feel the good they do—but you don't feel them doing it.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy, because they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

IN THE ENGINE-ROOM.

My father was a rich man when I left New York. His partner's only daughter was to be my wife when I should return.

I was a student in a Vienna hospital when I received a cable from home that the old house had failed. It proved to be an honest failure, and both families were beggars.

I counted my pocket-book from cover to cover. I had just enough to leave free of debt and get to Liverpool. How to cross? Well, swim, it necessary.

In the Liverpool steamer was an old Harvard College mate. This embarrassed me. He owed me a grudge from the football days at Berkeley Oval. An Englishman seldom forgets.

Determined to work my passage over, I entered what I supposed was not the office where my old competitor was manager. I did not see him, but he must have caught sight of me. I was surprised with the promptness with which I was told to go on board the C——, and something would be found for me to do.

Two days out I was called to the captain's own room, insulted with the charge, first politely put, of being a stowaway, and finally stung to madness bitter enough to obey silently when the officer said, "If you really don't want to steal your passage, go report to the engineer, and shovel coal."

This I did. My experience I want to describe. It is common enough to hundreds of poor scamps this very moment all over the seas. But, Heaven pity them, they have not the tongue to tell, nor, perhaps, always the sensibilities to feel, what their life really is.

Dizzy already with the tossings of the sea, I staggered down those series of iron stairways till I stood at last on the ship's lowest deck. Behind me were the vast bunkers of coal that glistened from a million eyes when the furnace doors were opened and then faded out of sight. Before me the huge billows of flames rose, not silent, but roaring monsters so hungry that the pigmies who fed them jumped to their task until the sweat rolled from their bare backs. The heat was to one descending from the pure breath of the Atlantic something fearful. I was dressed in my ordinary attire, and even an overcoat at that, so precipitate had been my action. The smell of baking lubricants and red-hot iron, the dead air, poisoned with coal gas and bilge water odours, the dust, despite all showering, but most of all the sudden transition from white light to blackest darkness, momentarily proceeding, as this and that furnace door was opened and shut, almost felled me to the floor.

As I stumbled and caught my hold on the stair rail again, the hardy fellows shouted, "Give us your shilling and go back!" supposing that I was a curious passenger seeing the sights of the ship.

The voices of derision aroused me. I was no passenger. I was an honest beggar like the rest, and here I was to be imprisoned for a week, watch on and off.

In a frenzy I tore off my clothing till I stood in my trousers and shoes like my fellows. I stated my hiring to the fellow in charge of the watch, and he gave me my shovel with a pitying laugh.

I was put at the boiler nearest the stair. The midships would have been a less dangerous spot, but I leaped at the hardest of the task.

My head grew dizzy. I panted for a full vital breath. The corrugated flooring, polished till it was glossy smooth in spots, tangled my poor feet so that I reapeatedly fell. Ah, that sense of whirling, whirling, whirling! How little the fair folk in the cabins know of all this plutonic hole beneath their carpets.

Really, I thought I could describe somewhat the lurid fantasia amid these scarlet-skinned, good-natured demons, but I cannot. Vertigo struck me down in less than a half hour. The next I knew I was being revived in the companionway, and the sea air was so greatful. The ship's surgeon asked me if I felt able to go to work again, and courteously recognized that I was not a laborer. I was graceless enough to growl out my spleen and reassert that I was no stowaway, which the good doctor did not understand.

I turned to the assistant engineer, who stood by, and asked him to give me a job of which I might be capable.

Thrusting his hands in his pockets, he walked off with a command to "try him at oiling."

Ed B——, the head oiler—dear, brave heart—I often go down to the dock to see him when in port here; but the engine is as dear to him as a bride, or I would long ago have bettered his fortune—he took me in hand.

We walked along those mere birdcages of stairways and platforms—a labyrinth of passages in a forest of steel arms, wheels, shafting, and steam piping. To a landsman—a young physician now—that endless mass of mighty anatomy is at first simply awful. It sobers one—this sullen, ceaseless throb of the monster's heart, the deep breathing of the steam chests, the sigh of the creature's spirit as the pistons make one move and yet one more herculean thrust turning the crank shaft.

Each time, as the piston slowly starts, it seems as if it must be the last, and infinite fatigue prevail. But no, it goes on, night and day, motion, motion, motion. Don't let me tire you, reader, but I do wish I could express to you something of the solemn impression that began to seize upon me crawling like a fly after Ed, the oiler. Then the hiss, the scream, the little sighs and moans of here and there a jet of truant steam, almost human sounds, issuing from the jungle of polished steel!

"She's a tiger she is!" cried Ed. "Look out!"

I heard that kind of exclamation frequently as we went our rounds. There were others doing the same work, but I became a chosen attendant of my cat-like friend. He had a sprained elbow and I helped him professionally. He got my story. We were intimate in two or three days, and I record it with honest satisfaction, for Ed B—was a genuine man.

It was one day off the Banks that we stopped. The chief got a notion that the shaft was not sound, and the next voyage it proved so, for a hair-line around that polished arm of power turned out an incipient fracture. But it was on investigation decided this voyage that there was nothing wrong. Still, there we lay on the breast of the swells for more than two hours. Ed came to me and said:—

"Now she's still the second engineer thinks we might go into the pits and clean out the waste and oil puddles. I don't like it, doctor, when she's got steam on. What if she turned her crank, eh?"

The brave boy went jumping down, however, down, down, till he stood directly under that massive crank, which had stopped at the half-turn over his head.

The reader will understand that the space allowed for the crank to make the full circuit round below was only sufficient for the iron to sweep through. Into that now empty space Ed was preparing to step. It was as dark as a grave and about a grave's dimensions. I held the torch above his head. Men working by torchlight in that place resemble imps. We were good-natured imps, however, and, though very cautious, were chatting cheerfully enough.

"I never like this job at sea," resumed Ed, "nor any time, except when the last pound o' steam is out of her two or three days at dock."

"But the engineer knows we are here," I replied.

"Yes, he ordered me down, and there's no need of it—and he don't like me," Ed got off between his breath, bending to his perilous work in the pit.

"Heavens, man!" I exploded, catching at what I thought was his meaning. "That would be murder!"

"Hush, doctor! Not that, not that! But if I had refused to come, as he thought I would, don't you see he could break me—that is, discharge me when we get into New York."

A few minutes later Ed sent me aloft for an extra mop of cotton waste. I was to hurry, for we knew not what minute the captain might go ahead. I remember I had secured the waste, I was picking my way along the enigma of little ladders and platforms. Far below, through the shadows flung from occasional gas jets, the sleeping monster, like a nickel-plated spider, lay prone, and I seemed to be exploring the viscera like some daring pathologist. Away below me, in the light of his torch, Ed reminded me of a microbe.

Suddenly the gong struck from the pilot house. God help me, I can hear it yet!

I was near the engineer's landing. Quick as a flash I was on the engineer, and like a tiger I caught at the wheel which he was turning to let on steam.

"Man!" I yelled, "you haven't struck your own warning 'all clear.' B——is in the crank pit!"

But I was too late. She gave one turn, at least. Then the scoundrel or fool, I don't know which, yielded to me and we stopped her. But such a cry as came echoing up from the very heart of the engine!

"Thank God for that second cry!" I fairly sobbed as it floated up.

Then I sprang away and down. Ed lay insensible on the arm of the crank, as if the engine had stopped in pity, and held him out to us. He had fainted with pain only, for the sprained elbow had broken. How he escaped heaven only knows.

Now this is the curious part of my story. Less than a year after, when she was cold and lying at the docks without a pound of steam; that engine killed this same engineer. It must have been in the middle of the night. What he was doing in her no one knows. A list by cargo and tide must have moved the machinery a half turn and crushed him.

Ed B——says that engines have souls, but seafaring men cherish queer notions.

A NOTORIOUS LIAR.

But He Told a Half Truth When He Was Dying.

Burrows was, without doubt, the most notorious liar Nevada will ever shelter, says the New York Sun. His fame as a liar spread for a hundred miles around, and men used to stop at our camp to get a look at him. He wasn't a wicked man, and he had no malice about him, but he was a natural born liar. He lied about his father, his mother, his wife, brothers, sisters, and everybody else, and for every hour in the day he had a new falsehood.

One day a lot of earth and rock caved in on him and inflicted fatal injuries, and a number of us knocked off work to be with him in his last moments. Lying there with only an hour of life left to him he told us that he had been a pirate on the Pacific, and where he had buried a large amount of plunder. We all knew that he was from Ohio, and had never seen an ocean.

One of the men finally felt it his duty to say:

"Burrows, you have only a short time to live. You had best spend that in preparing for eternity."

"I've allus been good," he quietly replied.

"Yes, but you are an awful liar, you know."

"I suppose so. I've told a million, haven't I?"

"No doubt of it."

"And every one has been laid up agin' me?"

"Very likely."

"Well, boys, it's my way, and I can't change at this late day. Just as that cave-in came I struck a nugget as big as my head. It would value up a clean $15,000. If you'll be kind enough to pull it out and sell it and send the cash to my wife I'll die feeling better.

He went off soon after that, and we said to each other that he had given us the greatest yarn of all. No one took his claim, which was accounted a poor one, and it lay for three months before one of the boys dug into it one day for the pick-ax buried and forgotten. He hadn't got the pick when he came across a lump of gold which balanced $18,280 in coin, and every shilling of the money was sent on to the widow.

It got to Ohio to find there was no widow.

In his dying hour Burrows told the truth about his find, but repented of it, and lied about having a wife.

A WORLD-WONDERFUL OFFER.

The Weekly Pioneer Press, for one Year, and the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica for $7.50.

By a fortunate arrangement with the publishers of the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, the Pioneer Press is enabled to make an offer which twelve months ago would have been regarded as impossible, not to say ridiculous.

Any one, parent or child, teacher or pupil, employer or employe, sending to the Pioneer Press Company, St. Paul, Minn., $7.50 will receive in return, and absolutely free of all delivery charges, the Weekly Pioneer Press for one year and a complete set of the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica.

This magnificent work is comprised in twenty octavo volumes of seven thousand pages, fourteen thousand columns and eight million words, and has ninety-six maps, printed in colors. It is most emphatically "up to date" in all relating to art, literature and science, and has four thousand biographies of dead or living celebrities. It is the most complete dictionary of America extant and contains all the information of the Encyclopedia Britannica and hundreds of additional facts. It is pre-eminently modern and peculiarly correct.

No such offer was ever made by a newspaper before. No such offer could have been made one month ago. The twenty volumes are bound in heavy jute manilla; the paper of the printed pages is excellent, and the type, maps and illustrations are the same as used in the sheep, Russian or calf-skin bound editions.

Present subscribers to the Weekly Pioneer Press by sending $7.50 will receive the Encyclopedia as described above and will have their paper continued one year from the expiration of their present subscription.

No charge for delivery. You can send your distant friend the Weekly and the twenty volumes for $7.50

Carlyle's Sense of Humor.

With Carlyle, as with all persons of his temperament, the disposition to lay the words on strong is half sportful, and under the gravest over-statement lies a humorous intent. He has no thought of being taken literally. He means much always, but he often means much less than he says, and he trusts to the reader's sense of humor to make the due deduction. If the reader chances not to have a sense of humor, sad misunderstandings arise; but if he have it, he comes to greatly relish the tasks that Carlyle demands of it.—Scribner.

An Icy Invasion

Of the back and shoulders announces the approach of chills and fever. You go to bed, if lucky enough to sleep, you awake in a furnace, or fancy so. Fierce is the heat that consumes you. Then comes profuse sweating. This over you resemble a limp, damp rag. After the first paroxysm, prevent another with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which knocks out malaria, biliousness, constipation and kidney complaints.

A "square-toed announcement!"—The statement that pointed shoes are going out of fashion.

The "words that burn" go into the wastepaper basket first.

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

A Splendid Herd of Elk.

Reader, what would you have given to have seen, as I have, a band of two hundred and fifty bull-elk all collected together on a beautiful piece of green grassy turf at an elevation of nine thousand feet? Here was a sight to make a man's nerves tingle. This was the largest band of bulls, by actual count, that I have ever seen, though my cousin and partner once saw, in the fall of the year, including bulls, cows, and calves, fifteen hundred. This was on the memorable occasion when the only elk ever killed by any of my men gave up his life, and we have all concluded that this particular elk was frightened to death, for though three men shot at him and each was confident he hit him, they always asserted afterward that no bullet mark could be found on him. —Scribner.

In its November number the Cosmopolitan will publish a series of letters written by Gen. W. T. Sherman to one of his young daughters, between the years 1850 and 1865 and covering most of the important events of the war of secession. These letters present graphic pictures of a great soldier amid some of the stirring scenes in which he was a giant figure, and in them the patriotic spirit of the Federal general is seen to have been most attractively tempered by a strong affection for the Southern people. The fraternal feeling which glows in these letters is in refreshing contrast to the sectional bitterness which characterized the period, and they will constitute an interesting and important contribution to the literature of the war.

PIONEER PRESS BUREAU OF CLAIMS.

Indian Depredation Claims.

Persons who have lost property from Indian raids should file their claims under the Indian Depredation Act of March 3, 1891. The time is limited, and the claims are taken up by the court in the order in which they are received.

TAKE NOTICE THAT ALL CONTRACTS ENTERED INTO WITH ATTORNEYS PRIOR TO THE ACT ARE MADE NULL AND VOID.

Information given and all claims promptly attended to.

Patents for Inventions

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the Government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, the PIONEER PRESS BUREAU has retained counsel expert in patent practice, and is therefore prepared to Obtain patents,

Conduct interferences,
Make special examinations,
Prosecute rejected cases,
Register trade marks and copyrights,
Render opinions as to scope and validity of patents,
Prosecute and defend infringement suits, etc. etc.

If you have an invention on hand send THE PIONEER PRESS BUREAU a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are not necessary unless the invention is of a complicated nature. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to THE BUREAU for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

PENSIONS

Pensions procured for soldiers of the Rebellion who served 90 days and are NOW disabled from ANY cause. This pension is payable whether the disability way incurred before, during or since service. Pensions for widows and children without regard to cause of soldier's death. Pensions for mothers and fathers who are now dependent, whether they were dependent on soldier when he died or not. Widows, children and parents are regarded as "dependent" in all cases where they have not sufficient income from property for their support.

Soldiers pensioned at less than twelve ($12.00) dollars per month and suffering from disability in addition to that named in their pension certificate, may obtain increase under the new law.

Information and advice given without charge. Best facilities ever offered to claimants to have their claims properly and diligently prosecuted. No charges unless successful. Write for information.

The Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railroad company holds its annual meeting and re-elects its officers.

The Western Passenger association began its monthly session in Chicago. Nothing of importance was done.

According to the Railway Age, during the nine months ended Sept. 30, 2,892 miles of main line was built on sixteen different roads in this country. It seems probable that the total for 1891 will fall below 5,000. At present it is about 950 miles less than at the same time in 1890, when the total for the year reached nearly 5,738.

SPORTING TRIFLES.

The stallion Orion lowers the two-year old trotting record at Stockton, Cal.

The English cricketers pounded a picked New York nine for 365 runs, with only seven wickets down.

The New York police raided the poolrooms of the city while the Jerome Park races were in progress, securing thirty-five prisoners and $3,186 cash.

Manager Barnie, of the Baltimore club, has protested against the action of Umpire Kerins in awarding the game in Washington, to the Washington club.

A London cable says that there is a hitch in the proposed international glove fight between Fred Johnston and George Dixon. The National club offered £500 for Dixon and Johnston to fight, and Johnston backers agreed to find any amount from £500 to £1,000 a side. Thomas O'Rourke has cabled the National club that he will not bring Dixon to England to fight Johnston unless the National club will put up a £1,000 purse. It is the opinion in London clubs that Dixon and his backers are afraid of Johnston, and to avoid the match insists on a big purse being put up.

THE TOILERS.

The annual report of the grand secretary of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen shows 423 lodges with a membership of 21,000, a gain of 6,000 during the past year.

The long controversy in the convention of the Brotherhood of Railway Men ended in the complete vindication of Grand Master Wilkinson and Grand Secretary Sheppard, in the matters of discharge of old trustees. The sustaining vote was 258 to 91.

The second annual convention of the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, which has been in session at St. Louis, has adjourned after selecting Indianapolis as the place for the convention of 1892. H. A. Prior of Indianapolis was elected grand master.

After holding out over three weeks 300 strikers returned to work at Buell, Orr & Hurdmann's lumber mills at Ottawa, Ont. The demand for 10 hours work per day instead of 11 was conceded, but the demand for 50 cents a week more was refused. This makes five of the smaller mills which have conceded something to the strikers. Three big concerns, however, employing nearly 3,000 men say there is no chance of their giving in.

A movement is on foot to buy up all the rice mills of the South and throw them into a trust. The Standard Oil company and English capitalists are supposed to be behind the plans.

The Actors' Fund of America made public shows receipts of $64,477.92, of which $32,737.50 were realized from the sale of United States bonds, and $31,884.22 from various general sources. The disbursements aggregated $28,879.82. The assets of the fund aggregate $75,801.51.

The six-year period for which the American Sewer Pipe Company was originally organized, will end in January, and it is believed that a return to the old plan of direct competition at that time is certain, as several very large plants have been in operation since the formation of the trust, and they will insist on making a larger percentage of the total product than older concerns are likely to consent to.

The Non-Partisan W. C. T. U. of Iowa held a three days' session at the Methodist Episcopal Church. J. A. Harvey president of the State Prohibition Alliance, and other prominent Prohibitionists were in attendance. Their sessions were held in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Lillie, the handsome 17-year-old daughter of Adolph Koechendorfer, a German hotel keeper at Dubuque, took rough on rats and died. She was in love with a railroad fireman named Ed Kerrigan, who boarded at her father's house and whose attentions she had been forbidden to receive. The poor girl first tried to drown herself but the water was not deep enough.

During the past two months the Adams Express office at Springville has been robbed three times of goods valued at $600, the last robery being about two weeks ago. Deputy Marshal Cleary was sent to work upon the cases and arrested F. E. Willis and C. E. Saunders, who came here a short time ago. A search of their premises brought to light many of the goods stolen.

A rear collision occurred between a Burlington & Northern and Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern freight train near Burlington. The former is a narrow guage, the tracks being laid together. The wide guage freight crashed into the narrow guage, demolishing the coach and several cars all of which took fire and burned. The trainmen saw the danger in time to jump, and as there were no passengers aboard no one was injured. The loss in cars and freight will be considerable.

The Nineteenth Century Woman.

There is an old belief of the masculine Anglo-Saxon mind that a woman, to be lovable, should have no marked individuality. But with this world's rapid advance through the Victorian age, woman has become more than ever perplexing to the male atom who poises himself for a moment to make a study of her. She no longer needs man's apparel to practise a profession or to journey forth on foot under the green leaves of Arden. She has grown self-reliant and cosmopolitan, equally at home in the White House or on the banks of the Neva. She never plucks daisies and buttercups nowadays, to test her lover's affection by pulling apart their petals. You find her, instead, arranging orchids in a glass, and making cynical reflections upon the worthlessness of the entire race. Individual love or hate in the opposite sex is apparently all one to her.—From "The Point of View," in Scribner.

A CHIEFTAIN TAKEN.

Charles Stewart Parnell, the Great Irish Leader Joins the Great Majority.

Mrs. Parnell and the Family Physician the Only Ones Present When the End Came.

London, Oct. 8.—Charles Stewart Parnell, having reached the age of forty-five years, is dead.

His remains lie in his home at Walsingham Terrace, Brighton, where only the doctors and his wife are said to have witnessed his demise.

The time of Mr. Parnell's taking off is fixed between the hours of 11 o'clock and midnight last night, though no tidings of the fact came up to London for the public until this morning. To say then that the metropolis was shocked with surprise would not convey even a mild impression of the feeling which greeted the news that Parnell had died.

The early day report that Mr. Parnell had died by his own hand spread far, and among the persons whom it reached was Mrs. Parnell. To-night she requests that an emphatic denial be given to rumors that her husband committed suicide. She states that he had which developed into the fever that killed him.

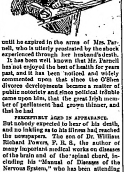
Mrs. Parnell, Mr. Parnell's step-daughter and the servants, according to the latest accounts of the death of Mr. Parnell, were the only occupants of the house on Walsingham Terrace when the Irish leader expired. The end, these later reports state, was one of intense agony for the sick man until the moment when he became unconscious and eventually died away without pain. Owing to the suddeness of the Irish leader's illness and to the belief of his wife and of the attending physicians that he would recover, no friends or relatives of his family or that of Mrs. Parnell, except her daughter, were present at Mr. Parnell's bedside when he died.

From the day he took to his bed, the state of Mr. Parnell's health was such as to necessitate the constant attendance of two physicians, but in spite of their incessant and untiring efforts to prolong or to save his life, Mr. Parnell sank lower and lower until he expired in the arms of Mrs. Parnell, who is utterly prostrated by the shock experienced through her husband's death.



It has been well known that Mr. Parnell has not enjoyed the best of health for years past, and it has been noticed and widely commented upon that since the O'Shea divorce developments became a matter of public notoriety and since political trouble came upon him, that the great Irish member of parliament had grown thinner, and that he had

PERCEPTIBLY AGED IN APPEARANCE.

But nobody expected to hear of his death, and no inkling as to his illness had reached the newspapers. The son of Dr. William Richard Powers, F. R. S., the author of many important medical works on diseases of the brain and of the spinal chord, including his "Manual of Diseases of the Nervous System," who has been attending Mr. Parnell, was the physician who watched the closing hours of his life. The great leader's condition was so bad throughout Tuesday that Dr. Powers was unable to leave his bedside from early that morning until Mr. Parnell breathed his last.

Mr. Parnell, it is now stated, suffered from congestion of the lungs, besides acute rheumatism. He became unconscious at 7 o'clock last evening. His physicians, who had gone for the evening, were hastily summoned to his bedside. They found him an hour later in an obviously hopeless condition.

RAPIDLY DECLINED.

Dublin, Oct. 7.—Now that Mr. Parnell is dead, it is said that it was a matter of notoriety among his intimate friends that his health had been rapidly declining for months past.

His friends and doctors, they say, urged him in vain to be more careful, but all their remonstrances were unavailing. Mr. Parnell continued to work at the highest pressure, and underwent constant privations and fatiguing journeys which would have ruined the health of the strongest man.

After the Sligo election, when Bernard Collery, the anti-Parnell candidate, defeated Mr. Parnell's candidate, Valentine B. Dillon, it was privately admitted that Mr. Parnell was greatly depressed, and that he felt himself obliged to resort to stimulants in order to sustain his nerves.

At Creggs, Sept. 27 last, Mr. Parnell complained of suffering from a peculiar pain in the region of the heart, which pain, he said, had never troubled him before. This was in addition to the rheumatic trouble in the arm which has already been referred to.

LIKE A THUNDERBOLT.

London, Oct. 7.—In this city particularly, the news of Mr. Parnell's death came down like a thunderbolt upon the clubs and in political circles. Nobody, so far as at first known, was even aware that he was indisposed and consequently, when it became known that the Irish leader was dead, naturally the first idea formed was that he had committed suicide.

Telegrams received here from Dublin and other towns in Ireland, and the principal towns in England unite in reporting that the death of Parnell has caused the greatest sensation among his supporters, principally on account of the sudden manner in which he died.

In Dublin the late Irish leader's supporters are in a state of consternation. A meeting of these friends of Mr. Parnell was hastily called as soon as the news of his death became known, and at this meeting, which was only a preliminary gathering, it was decided that a meeting of all Mr. Parnell's followers in that city should be called to consider what steps to take in the face of what may be termed a most disastrous event for their party.

THE POLITICAL EFFECT.

London, Oct. 7.—In an interview to-day, Justin McCarthy, member of parliament for Londonderry and leader of the anti-Parnell faction of the Irish Parliamentary party, discussing the political effect of Mr. Parnell's death, said that it was impossible to forecast the political effect of the death of Mr. Parnell.

A MOTHER'S GRIEF.

Bordentown, N. J., Oct. 7.—The news of her son's death was first made known to Mrs. Parnell by a reporter this morning.

When the reporter was announced Mrs. Parnell evidently divined that he had some information relating to Mr. Parnell, for she exclaimed: "What has befallen my son?" Seeing that the reporter hesitated, she continued: "Is he ill, or worse, has he been shot, or did he shoot himself?"

The reporter broke the news to her as gently as possible, and when he at last announced that Mr. Parnell was dead the white-haired mother reeled backward and fell on the floor.

"Oh, my son; oh, my good, kind Charles, they have killed you," she shrieked. The scene was heartrending. She was seized with hysterics and by turns she laughed and wept.

"That viper," she exclaimed after she recovered, pointing a long bony finger at the house of her half-brother, Edward Stewart, "that viper over there kept me away from him. He began a suit for $15,000 against me to dispossess me from my home, and I spent my all defending it. When Charles wrote to me asking me whether I needed anything I told him the crops were bringing me in plenty of money. That cheered him, and it pleased me to say so, although I was in poverty. Oh, he was a good and dutiful son and never neglected me. "Lies, lies, lies, all lies, when they say he refused to provide for me. I say it's slander, foul slander."

Then the old lady paced up and down the room sobbing convulsively.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Charles Stewart Parnell was born at Avondale, County Wicklow, Ireland, in 1846. He inherited his belligerent and aggressive qualities from a source no further back than his grandfather, Commodore Charles Stewart, the famous commander of the frigate Constitution, whose remarkable capture, in single fight, of the two British men-of-war Levant and Cyane won for him the surname of Old Ironsides.

On the other side of the house Mr. Parnell was the lineal descendant of Thomas Parnell, Esq., who owned estates in Congleton, Cheshire, England, and settled in Ireland during the reign of Charles II., about 1630. It would be a laborious task to follow out all the limbs of a genealogical tree as old and far-spreading as that which sprung from Thomas Parnell of Cheshire, who died about 1700, leaving his estates in England and Ireland to his eldest son, Thomas Parnell, Jr., then a famous poet and afterward archdeacon of Clogher, prebendary of Dublin and vicar of Fingloss.

After his death, in 1717, the baronetcy and estates descended to John Parnell, Esq., member of parliament for the borough of Granard and subsequently one of the judges of the king's bench. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Whitshed, lord chief justice of the king's bench. The issue of this union was three sons and one daughter. The estates ultimately descended to John Parnell, bart., third son, who was returned to parliament for the town of Mayborough in 1761. He was commissioner of the revenue, and by patent of 1766 was created a baronet of Ireland. He married Anne Ward, a descendant of the Lady Sophia Wondout and the earl of Petersborough, and died in 1782, leaving one son, the Rt. Hon. Sir John Parnell, chancellor of the exchequer, lord of the treasury and groom of his majesty's most honorable private council, who died in 1801, after a long and distinguished life, leaving his eldest son, John Augustus Parnell, heir to his baronetcy and estates.

Shortly after the close of the war of 1812, in which Commodore Stewart, commander of the old Constitution, played so glorious a part, Miss Stewart, his only daughter, went to England, where she subsequently married Sir John Parnell, the third baronet and grandson of the Right Hon. Sir John Parnell, chancellor of the exchequer. They removed to Avondale, in the county of Wicklow, Ireland, where was born in 1846. He was educated under a private tutor, and when eighteen years of age was sent to Magdalene college, Cambridge, England. Shortly after graduating he was initiated into Irish politics, and at once took up the cause of the people. With the aggressive, irrepressible blood of the Stewarts on one side and the party spirit and political prestige of the Parnells on the other, the young graduate was a politician by nature and inclination.

"But," says Mrs. Parnell of her son, "he did not always possess the cool temper and presence of mind that he now shows in his debates in the house of commons. When a boy he grew so angry when his will was disputed that his face became purple with passion. He was imperious with the servants, as most young landlords in that country are, and until his visit to America, shortly after he became of age, he was a bitter Conservative in politics."

His visit to this country was partly on private business connected with his godfather's estate and partly to study our institutions and government. After his return to Ireland his political tenets are said to have changed marvelously. He lowered the rates of his tenants and raised the wages of those in his employ. In bearing and deportment he became quiet and well balanced. In 1874 Mrs. Parnell returned to America and settled upon Commodore Stewart's estate at Bordentown, N. J., where she now resides. In the same year Charles Stewart Parnell made his first appearance before the public as high sheriff County Wicklow, Ireland. He ran for parliament on the Catholic and National ticket and was defeated. The following year he was returned to parliament by a large majority from County Meath. His freedom of speech, regardless of older and more experienced men, soon provoked the hostility of his Conservative fellow members. He always spoke whenever he had anything to say, and refused to be put down, with the pertinacity of a true Stewart. He was not gifted with remarkable eloquence, and was never what may be called brilliant. But he was a ready and fluent speaker. In 1878 he was elected president of the Home Rule confederation, in the place of Mr. Isaac Butt. He was subsequently elected to represent the city of Cork. He displayed remarkable ability both as a parliamentary debater and tactician, and as an organizer in the interest of the Irish Home Rule party. He identified himself with the tenant farmers of Ireland in the struggles with absenteeism and high rents, and was chiefly instrumental in forming and sustaining the land league of 1879-80.

CAUSED GLADSTONE'S DOWNFALL.

The fall of the second Gladstone cabinet is chargeable to Charles Stewart Parnell, the Irish agitator. Ever since Gladstone's accession to the premiership, the Irish member voted with the government. Parnell, however, thinking that his party had been given little else than promises, withdrew his support.

In 1879 Mr. Parnell made a visit to the United States with the design of interesting the Irish-American population in the cause of the land league. While in that country he lectured before several state legislatures and finally before the house of representatives at Washington. The honor of addressing this branch of congress had previously been conferred upon but three persons—Lafayette, Kossuth and Bishop England of Charleston.

Upon his return home he became bitter in his attitude towards the landlords and the government, and it was charged that this led to disorder in Ireland. From this charge he was subsequently vindicated. In November, 1880, informations were laid by the Irish attorney general against Mr. Parnell and other members of the land league executive. The trial ended in a disagreement of the judges. In the opening of the session of 1881 the government brought in a coercion bill, and to that measure, as well as to the arms bill, Mr. Parnell and his colleagues offered all obstructions possible, prolonged over seven weeks. Feb. 3 he and thirty-four of his followers were removed by the sergeant-at-arms for causing obstruction in the house of commons. Land league demonstrations followed the passage of the land act, and the government proclaimed the land league to be an illegal association, and Mr. Parnell issued the "no rent" manifesto. Mr. Parnell remained in Kilmainham jail till April, 1882, when he was released on parole in order to attend the funeral of a relative. He was formally released May 2. Then followed the resignation of Mr. Forster and Lord Cowper, the Phœnix Park murders and the stormy debates on the crimes bill.

In these scenes and the subsequent organization of the National league in 1883, and in parliament in 1884-5, Mr. Parnell was the most conspicuous figure. On the dissolution of parliament he returned, backed by eighty-five members. It was to meet this situation that Mr. Gladstone proposed home rule, in which he was supported by Mr. Parnell and the whole strength of his party. The sensations growing out of the Parnell commission and the Times libel suit are of too recent occurrence to need special mention here. Misfortune overtook Mr. Parnell in public notice of his relation to Mrs. O'Shea, whom he recently married. The attitude of Mr. Gladstone and the Irish bishops compelled his deposition as an Irish leader.

BREVITIES.

Wheat is 80 cents.

S. M. Dainard is building a large new barn.

Do not fail to attend the M. E. social next Friday evening.

Bert Wells, of Grand Forks, was in town last Friday on business.

If you want to insure your buildings against fire, call at this office.

The weather has not been very exhilerating lately to say the least.

The Railroad and Warehouse commissioners will be at Crookston Oct. 19th.

Elias Steenerson, of Crookston, was in town the first of the week on business.

The managers of the Crookston races evidently dont stand in with the weather clerk,

Andrew Steenerson was in town last week looking after his farm five miles north of here.

Holmes Bros. have just received a fine line of heating stoves. Call and examine their stock.

Yesterday's rain was another soaker and it is not probable that any threshing will be done this week.

Col. Calvin Uhne, the right-of-way agent for the Great Northern, was in town on business last Friday.

Work on the new warehouse is progressing slowly owing to the wet weather. A few more days work and it will be finished,

Knute Steenerson has sold his store building on Broadway to S. M. Dainard for a cash consideration of $500; Mr, Dainard will soon move the lumber yard and use the building for an office

J. W. Wheeler, of Crookston, was here last Sunday evening. He had been visiting his Thief River Farm and reports that it is not all under water which is fortunate considering the state of the weather.

The Knowlton surveying party after looking over the land they were to survey on the reservation, decided that the work could not be done this fall on account of water. They left last Friday for St. Paul.

Donnelly advises the farmers to hold their wheat for thirty days. It is more than probable that the farmers of this section will take Mr. Donnelly's advice owing to the fact that it is impossible for them to thresh or haul their wheat to market,

The bursting of three sections of hose at the fire last Saturday night shows conclusively that some more must be purchased by the village as soon as possible. The council should attend to the matter at once as it is imperative that we have good fire protection.

M. E. SOCIAL.

The ladies of the M. E. Church will give a social at the M. E. Church next Friday evening and all are cordially invited to attend. An entertaining program is being prepared and an oyster supper will be served. No admission fee will be charged, usual charges for supper,

Every body is out of politics this year Nelson is out of politics; Heatwole is out of politics infact all are out, Did it occur to anyone that this is not a political year? It is easy to stay out when there is nothing to stay in for, but wait till next year and then see how many of the boys are out of politics,—St. Peter Herald.

The Ninth Annual Ball of the Crookston Fire Department will be held at McKinnon's Hall on Thursday evening October 29th. They extend a cordial invitation to all. Ample provision will be made for the reception and introduction of strangers and all who attend will be sure of a good time as these annual balls have always been very successful.

Andrew Soderberg fortunately escaped a very serious accident while threshing at K. O. Gigstad's last Saturday. His clothing caught on a bolt on the tumbling rod of the horsepower, and his vest and two shirts were torn from his body in an instant. Had he not been an exceptionally strong man he would have been instantly killed. As it is he is considerably bruised about the body but not seriously.

H. R. Denny, of St. Paul, and Col. Platt B. Walker, of Minneapolis, arrived last Friday with a large crew of men to do a large surveying contract on the reservation. They found that it would be impossible to do the work this fall on account of the high water. Their contract was on an exceptionally low part of the reservation and is now under several feet of water. The party returned to St. Paul last Monday.

It will be almost impossible for the graders on the line between here and Red Lake Falls to finish their contracts this fall. They have been idle now nearly all of the time for three weeks and it is constantly getting worse. In one place the proposed grade is now under five feet of water and there is hardly a place on the line that a team can work. The contractors are all heartily tired of their jobs and it would not surprise us to hear that the work had been abandoned for this year.

We learn from reliable authority that President Hill has ordered all work stopped on the railroad grade in Red Lake Falls, and that the company are now contemplating another route, It seems that the property holders there hold their lots at a rate which the company deem exortionate hence they will run to the east of the town, where they they can find an easier grade and save thousands of dollars. Lots at Red Lake Falls seem to be too high for practical business purposes.

Fire was discovered in the rear of the second story of Hall Bros. building at 11.30. The alarm brought out a large number of people who with the fire engine and pails soon extinguished the flames. The fire caught from a stove which was being used to dry the plastering. A spark caught in a bed and but for prompt hard work the building would have burned, Very little damage was done, probably not to exceed $100 by fire and water. There was a strong east wind blowing at the time and if the building had burned it would have taken the row on the west side of the street.

Geo. A. Ralph, who has been on government work on the Red Lake reservation for the past two weeks, returned last evening. Among the party were Geo. A. Ralph, Orvis Hinds, W. R. Low, Harry Greenlee, B. B. Ralph, Edwin Carhart, A. M. Felgate, Mrs. Ralph and Miss Sue Low. Mr. Ralph did not finish his contract, owing to the great amount of water. There were other crews who came down at the same time, who were unable to finish their work for the same reason. Crookston Daily Tribune.

Crookston Times: County Supt. of Schools E. J. Grefthen, whom the Times announced last week as being ill of typhoid fever is, we learn, in a very dangerous condition, and the chances are very much against his recovery. Dr. Dampier has been attending him and on Tuesday Dr, J. E. Engstad, of Grand Forks, came over to consult with him about the case, It was so serious that it was decided to call Dr Shimonek a celebrated physician from St. Paul who arrived Wednesday morning, but he was unable to do more than endorse the treatment that had already been given. Mr. Grefthen is at the residence of Mr. Mortenson where he is receiving the very best of attention, and his friends all hope for the best.

To say the least East Grand Forks is not the most desirable place for an autumn residence one could select, The village is filled with about the hardest looking set of toughs ever seen outside the slums of the large cities, and the police have a merry time of it trying to preserve even a semblance of order.

Yesterday a man was knocked down and robbed in the brush above DeMers avenue in broad daylight. He yelled bloody murder and his two assailants ran away, one going straight up the river and the other climbing onto the railroad bridge crossing to this side, where he escaped, They relieved the victim of about two dollars, but he had the satisfaction of knowing that he made about two dollars worth of noise while they were doing it.—Grand Forks Herald.

ACCIDENTLY SHOT.

A. J. McLaughlin, the agent for the Red River Valley Elevator Company here was accidently shot while hunting last Sunday afternoon by J, M, Hanson McLaughlin and Hanson were hunting rabbits near the river in the brush. Hanson was carrying his gun on his shoulder and McLaughlin was walking about three rods behind. The gun was accidently discharged by the brush, the whole charge hitting McLaughlin. The gun was loaded with number eight shot and about one hundred and fifty entered his body from his face down to his knees. He was brought to town with a team and Dr. Wattson, of Red Lake Falls, sent for, who dressed the wounds and removed as many of the shot as possible. The doctor was of the opinion that while the wounds were very painful they were not dangerous. Mr. McLaughlin was taken to Ada Minn., last Monday by his brother D. F. McLaughlin for better medical treatment. His many friends here wish for his speedy recovery.

Crookston Times: It may seem a little chestnutty to announce that two more prisoners escaped from the Polk county jail this week,, yet as such was the fact we are compelled to chronicle it even though it does seem a little stale and monotonus. It happened like this. The jailor—the same sleepy fellow who allowed the other prisoners to escape and did not discover it for 24 hours afterwards—went into the jail on Monday evening with an armful of wood two prisoners slipped past him and made their escape. The jailor immediately gave chase in which he was joined by the sheriff and one or two others who were enlisted into the service but in the darkness the men had no trouble in concealing themselves and the search proved fruitless. The two men were awaiting the action of the grand jury upon a charge of larceny at East Grand Forks.

A very good record is being kept of the month of October by R. W. Mathews, a dry goods salesman from St. Paul who was in the city yesterday, He began the record in 1884, on a fly leaf of a ledger in Fontaine & Anglim's store, and each year since when on his fall visits, he has marked down the price and quality of the wheat and state of the temperature, His record is as follows:

Oct. 19, 1884—Wheat 53 cents.

Oct. 19, 1885—Wheat, 76 cents.

Oct. 15, 1886—Wheat, 58 cents.

Oct 25, 1887—Wheat, 55 cents. Very cold.

Oct. 27, 1888—Wheat, $1.05; damp cool, poor crop.

Oct. 23 1889—Wheat, 66 cents; damp cool, big crop, poor quality.

Oct. 27, 1890—Wheat, 84 cents; cold fair crop; grade No. 1 Northern,

Oct. 8, 1881—Wheat, 81 cents; mild, big crop, wet harvest,

Those who are not in possession of these statistics, might cut this item out and paste it in your book for future reference, and then begin to keep a record of the prices of wheat and the weather in your own memorandum book.—Crookston Daily Tribune.

A Milwaukee weather prophet predicts another mild winter, with no severely cold weather until the latter part of February, He bases his conclusions upon the direction of the wind at the time of the atumnal equinox, which, he affirms, derermines their prevailing direction for the ensuing three months! This direction was southerly, "Whenever the prevailing direction of the winds at this time of the year is southerly," he remarks, "look out for a mild winter." This is an old sailor's rule, that the equinoxial winds govern the next three months' winds.

It is easy enough to predict the weather. Anyone can "summon spirits from the vasty deep," but whether they will come when he calls is another matter. Still it is reasonable to believe that the coming winter will be as mild as the last three or four have been. The late hot weather and the active sun spots, the general consent of all weather prophets' goose bones and "fur critters" and of the corn husks and of the bark on the trees all go to show that the coming winter will not be of that wonder variety that four years ago froze up the old settlers' reminiscences and made the street car company humputate.

The best date on which to predict winters is Feb. 30, after the ground hog has sized up the situation. The Journal's prophet with-holds his prediction until then.—Minneapolis Journal.

The National Stockman and Farmer having been frequently asked to define "free coinage of silver," wrote to the treasury department at Washington and got this definition from the director of the mint: "The term 'free and unlimited coinage of silver' means the conferring of the right upon individuals to take silver of any kinds to the mints and have every 371.14 pure grains of it stamped free of charge into a dollar, which dollar is a full legal tender for its face value in the payment of debts and obligations of all kinds in the United States." In other words, an ounce of silver (480 grains) which can be bought in the open market for 98 cents, is to pass under the kind of free coinage proposed for $1.25. A speculator who pays $98 for 100 ounces would get at the treasury $129 in national currency making $31 by the transaction. Or, to put it differently, with silver at 98 cents per ounce he could get 100 silver dollars or silver certificates for silver bullion costing him $75.79. The average cost of producing silver per ounce in the United States in 1886 was 51.1 cents per ounce. In Montana the average cost was 43.3 cents per ounce. The Great Mountain mine in that state, according to the official statement of the Granite Mount company to the mint in 1886 produced 2,987,775 ounces of silver at a cost of 12.8 cents per ounce. In Mexico the cost of 44.88 cents; in South America 84.58 cents; in Australia at the Broken Hill mine 16 cents. Very large quantities of silver are produced at these figures. The free coinage of silver would benefit a few hundred silver mine owners and cost the taxpayers of the country not less than $15,000,000 annually.

Commissioner Hall is now endeavoring to persuade the Mille Lac Indians to remove peaceably to White Earth reservation at once, but is meeting with a good deal of opposition in his efforts from certain quarters where he had every reason to expect aid and hearty co operation. Some of the alleged friends of the Indians are advising them not to allow themselves to be removed from the reservation under any consideration. The commissioner has laid the matter before the Indian office and that office considered it of so much importance that it was laid before the secretary of the interior. The opposition of the Indians is so great that it may be necessary to call out the troops to move them to White Earth; one thing is certain, and that is that the Indian officials are tired of monkeying in the matter, and unless they soon consent to go peaceably, they will find themselves unceremoniously removed by the troops. The commissioner has recommended to the department that the dead and down timber on that portion of the Red Lake reservation controlled by the government be disposed of to parties other than those that have contracts for Indian timber as he does not believe it a good thing for all parties, concerned to have the disposition of the timber in the hands of one firm who get a monopoly of it. The fact seems to be that when one firm has all the timber the work is neglected, and it is not best either for the Indians or the government. His recommendation will undoubtedly be followed by the department.—Thirteen Towns.

AFTER ALL BIG FIRES.

MEN WHO MAY BE SEEN IN THE RUINS OF A CONFLAGRATION.

Strange Things Happen That Ordinary People Would Never Dream About. The Work That Firemen, Policemen, Patrolmen and Adjusters Do.

After the fire is over, what then? The average citizen sees only a heap of smoking ruins and thinks that nothing remains to be done but to clear them away and build anew. But to the initiated the details of the work are manifold. There are four bodies of men actively concerned with the ruins.

First, the firemen. They distrust the red dragon. He may be lurking under any of the heaps of bricks, ready for a fresh outbreak. So they do what they call overhauling. They turn over all the smoking piles and drench the embers and wet down the neighboring walls and remain on guard until everything is cold. Sometimes they have to wait nearly a week, and their work after the fire is very laborious, as in the Park place fire, where so many lives were lost.

Three days after the fire was over there were still fifty firemen at work on the ruins getting out the bodies and watching the place to make sure that no flames would start up again. Many of these fifty men worked for forty-eight hours incessantly, with only three hours intervals for meals. At the great fire that destroyed the Havemeyer sugar refinery it was more than a week before the ruins were cold enough to be safe.

Second, the police. They protect the firemen from the crowds of citizens who come to look on and the property rescued from the rabble who come to loot. They draw what is called a fire line about the burning building and keep it up after it is burned till the work of the firemen is done.

Third, the fire patrol. This is a professional band of property rescuers, maintained by the insurance companies. It was organized forty years ago, and was then composed entirely of members of the volunteer fire department. In 1863 it was incorporated under a charter which commissioned it to save lives and property at fires. In the first place it really was a patrol, walking about the streets from 7:30 o'clock each evening till 5:30 o'clock next morning looking for fires. Now it is called to fires in the same way as the regular fire department. Its men used to wear the same uniforms as the firemen, but there was a row over that and now they are distinguished by red stripes.

THE FIRE PATROL.

The men of the fire patrol go out with trucks, one truck from each station. Each truck carries eleven men and axes, ladders, brooms, shovels, crowbars and twenty-four immense tarpaulin coverings, with which the fire patrol rushes into a building comparatively safe from fire, but drenched with water, and covers up the goods there. The patrolmen usually work under the firemen. For instance, if there is a fire on the fourth floor they are busy on the third floor and the floors below covering up goods with the tarpaulins and removing them out of the way of water.

They also follow the hose lines where these lines run through buildings not on fire to stop all leaks in the hose or set buckets under the leaks or protect goods from spray. They can't tell till the fire is over whether the property they are saving is insured or not; therefore they go ahead without paying any attention to the question.

The fire patrol follow the firemen and fix things up, saving all they can for the insurance companies and stopping all unnecessary damage. When the firemen and police have gone away the fire patrol stays with the agents of the owners, guarding the goods till the insurance is settled or the rescued property is removed to a place of safety.

After all is said and done at the fire proper, come the insurance adjusters poking about the ruins. This is a small, high priced body of shrewd and experienced men, whose business is to find out on behalf of the insurance companies how much the loss was. An insurance adjuster will always tell you that his is a judicial function, just as a district attorney always contends that he is acting judicially, though the prisoner may not think so. The insured seldom agree with the insurance adjuster. He is sent on behalf of the insurance companies, and is on the watch for fraud.

THE ADJUSTERS' WORK.

The serious work does not usually begin till the ashes are cold. Insurance companies don't take inventories of the property insured nowadays. The contents of a store are constantly changing. They wait for the insured to make out his claim in itemized form. Then they call for the books and the vouchers. Maybe all books and vouchers are burned. In that case the memory of the owner must do its best to supply the deficiency.

Frauds are frequent, and the adjusters are usually in business for themselves—not attached to any particular company, but hired by the job, just like lawyers or private detectives. They have to keep their eyes wide open.

In cases like the Park place fire, where everything becomes a heap of ruins in an instant, and no books or papers or material evidence of any kind is left, the adjusters have to depend on careful scrutiny of the itemized claims; but in numbers of other cases where the fire department does its work rapidly the adjusters make most astonishing finds.

After the insurance is settled the owner of the building puts the ruins up for sale. There are a number of contractors in the city who will buy them on speculation.—New York Recorder.

Petrified Remains.

William Imes died and was buried at Corunna, Ind., in 1888. At the time of his death Mr. Imes weighed 180 pounds. In May, 1891, when the remains were disinterred, they were found to be petrified, to look like marble and to weigh exactly 405 pounds.—St. Louis Republic.

AN ENGLISH TOURIST.

HE HEARS A STORY OF HOW HERMIT MOUNTAIN WAS NAMED.

An American Commercial Traveler Tells a Strange Yarn About the Lonely, Lovesick Miner of the Selkirks—The Mountain Was Named for Him.

The train had stopped near the heart of the Selkirks, under the shadow of a great bare crag, which the guide book said was the Hermit mountain. The rock rose almost precipitously, culminating in a crest extending for hundreds of feet to the north, and the top of the crest seemed almost as sharp as a razor. With arms akimbo on the rail of the observation car was an English tourist, who wore a monocle and a stare, and seemed very much bored by the scenery. Near him stood a commercial traveler of Toronto, who was explaining how the mountain got its name.

"Follow the edge of the mountain from its front to the rear," he said. "Right where the edge breaks off you see a solitary pyramid. From here it seems to be only about six feet tall, though in reality it is about thirty feet high. Don't you see it bears some resemblance to a man? That is the hermit, and it is this solitary pillar that gave name to the mountain."

The English tourist suddenly showed indications of interest. He edged a little nearer, and remarked:

"Beg pardon, did I hear you say something about a hermit?"

The commercial traveler gave his comrade a dig in the ribs. "Why, yes," he said to the tourist; "didn't you ever hear the remarkable facts about the hermit here?"

"No," said the tourist.

A DRUMMER'S STORY.

"Well, I'll tell you the story," said the drummer. "It's a remarkable one, and every traveler ought to know it. You see, about the time of the gold excitement in the Frazer river country 'way back in 1856 a man came here to make his fortune. One of the miners had brought into this wild region his little family, and among them was his daughter, a very pretty girl, with whom this other fellow fell madly in love. He had a hated rival, of course, and in a few months this rival carried off the prize, and life became a hollow mockery to the disappointed lover. He became not only a woman hater, but a hater of his kind, and he made up his mind he would spend the rest of his life as a hermit.

"So he came to this mountain, and he clambered up that brush that you see alongside, and he built him a hut of stones and branches, and there he began his new life. He had a gun and lived on what he could shoot, a little flour he got from the settlement and the berries and roots he gathered. He lived that way a good many years, bringing down from the mountain an occasional fur or bearskin, which he sold for provisions. For years now he has been old and unable to hunt well, but nothing has ever induced him to give up his queer life."

By this time the English tourist was all eyes and ears. "You don't mean to tell me," he said. "How on earth does he live now?"

"Well, once a week the people who live in this little hamlet you see here fill a basket with provisions and one of them takes it up to the top of the mountain. When the hermit hears anybody coming he leaves his hut and retreats into the woods. The man with the supplies leaves the basket at the door, and the next fellow who comes up with provisions leaves another basket and takes back the empty one.

THE TOURIST BELIEVED IT.

"The hermit never speaks to anybody. Early in the winter, before there is danger of a big fall of snow, a lot of provisions is taken up to him, for fear that a heavy snowfall will prevent any one from reaching the top."

"Why, doesn't he get sick and need a doctor sometimes?" asked the tourist.

"Nobody knows that he ever had a sick day. He is old, but he's well. You see the air up there is magnificent, and there's no reason he should be sick. There he is now," continued the drummer, in a state of wild excitement. "There he is; near the edge of that rock. Don't you see him?"

The Englishman looked, but could see nothing. He borrowed a field glass and was adjusting the focus when the man exclaimed:

"There, he's gone. I just caught a glimpse of him. He's up so high he didn't look bigger'n a speck, any way."

"Remarkable," said the Englishman, as he lapsed into a seat. He rolled it all over in his mind for a couple of hours. Meanwhile the story of the Englishman's interest in the hermit had been told to a number of choice spirits, and there had been much hilarity. One of the men who shared the fun was standing near the Toronto drummer, when the English tourist sidled up to him again.

"Now, look a-here," he said, "honest, is that really all true about the hermit?"

"Certainly, it's true," said the commercial traveler. "Most all tourists know it, and any one who lives in this country can tell you all about it. Ask this man here."

The Englishman turned to the other man, who told the story of the hermit over again, with some graphic and circumstantial additions. The Englishman will probably prepare an account of the wonderful hermit for the British press.—New York Sun.

Uncle Sam's Carpets.

Strangers who come to Washington discover things of the existence of which residents know nothing. How many people know there is a large room in the treasury building in which every yard of carpet used in government buildings all over the United States is cut and sewed? The work is done by contract and carpets are fitted from the architect's plans.—Washington Post.

Babtizing Bells.

An extraordinary feature in the career of bells is their undergoing the process of baptism before being used. This ceremony is performed by the Roman Catholics at the present day, who say that the bells thus receive power to act as preservatives against thunder and lightning and storms. An humbler rite is observed in the Protestant church, and the celebrations which take place are more of a jovial than a religious character.—Exchange.

The right arm is always a little larger than the left, but the left foot is almost always larger than the right, presumably because, while nearly every man uses his right arm to lift a weight or strike a blow, he almost invariably kicks with his left foot, while the lounger stands on his left leg and lets his right fall easily, because he has learned by experience that this is the best attitude he can assume to prevent lassitude and fatigue.

Rome No Larger Than Brooklyn.

The exaggerations of Vossius, Lipsius and Chateaubriant, who give to imperial Rome 14,000,000, 5,000,000 and 8,000,000 of inhabitants are too absurd to deserve notice. Hume, who, in his masterly essay on the "Populousness of Ancient Nations," has discussed the question of the population of Rome with his usual learning and good sense, arrives at the conclusion that Rome, when at her zenith, might have been as populous as London in 1760; in other words, that she might have had from 700,000 to 800,000 inhabitants. Gibbon estimated the population at 1,200,000, but it would appear that the more moderate estimate of Hume is the more accurate. The population of Rome at its largest, therefore, did not exceed that of Brooklyn in 1891.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Flight of the Stork.

The stork is a remarkably picturesque bird; its snowy body contrasting with the bright red beak and legs and black quill feathers of the wings, make it a striking object. The flight is magnificent, bolder and more buoyant than that of a heron. Like most large birds, its powers of flight show best when it is at a great height. When we were on the Bastei rock, in Saxon Switzerland, a pair passed overhead, flying southward. Though high above us, we could clearly see the black pinion feathers; and as we watched the powerful beat of the wide spreading wings we thought of the angels in Zachariah's vision who had "wings like the stork."—Chambers' Journal.

Two Knowing Horses.

A horse, stabled with his mate and a third horse, stole hay from the stranger to give to his mate, while he was contented with the ration that had been allotted him; and a horse in a team, nibbling some rich grass on his side, gave at intervals mouthfuls of it to his companion, which could not reach it.—Popular Science Monthly.

In North Carolina garnet crystals are sometimes come across, which, though not fine enough for gems, weigh as much as twenty pounds each and may be cut into dishes or cups measuring from three to six inches across. Tons of them are crushed to make "emery" and the sandpaper called "garnet paper."

A WORLD-WONDERFUL OFFER.

The Weekly Pioneer Press, for one Year, and the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica for $7.50.

By a fortunate arrangement with the publishers of the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, the Pioneer Press is enabled to make an offer which twelve months ago would have been regarded as impossible, not to say ridiculous.

Any one, parent or child, teacher or pupil, employer or employe, sending to the Pioneer Press Company, St. Paul, Minn., $7.50 will receive in return, and absolutely free of all delivery charges, the Weekly Pioneer Press for one year and a complete set of the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica.

This magnificent work is comprised in twenty octavo volumes of seven thousand pages, fourteen thousand columns and eight million words, and has ninety-six maps, printed in colors. It is most emphatically "up to date" in all relating to art, literature and science, and has four thousand biographies of dead or living celebrities. It is the most complete dictionary of America extant and contains all the information of the Encyclopedia Britannica and hundreds of additional facts. It is pre-eminently modern and peculiarly correct.

No such offer was ever made by a newspaper before. No such offer could have been made one month ago. The twenty volumes are bound in heavy jute manilla; the paper of the printed pages is excellent, and the type, maps and illustrations are the same as used in the sheep, Russian or calf-skin bound editions.

Present subscribers to the Weekly Pioneer Press by sending $7.50 will receive the Encyclopedia as described above and will have their paper continued one year from the expiration of their present subscription.

No charge for delivery. You can send your distant friend the Weekly and the twenty volumes for $7.50

Suppressing the Press.

The arrest of two editors for printing an extract from another paper questioning the validity of the anti-lottery law is certainly carrying thing pretty high in this land of free speech and liberal government.

The Post has no objection to the stamping out of the lottery companies, but the line should be drawn, it thinks, at that point where irresponsible underlings of the government attempt to stamp out the press.

On this line the Atlanta Constitution says that "this policy will not work. If lotteries cannot be destroyed without also destroying the freedom of the press, the people will be in favor of letting the lotteries alone. We cannot afford to yield our right to speak and publish fair criticisms of public measures. If we yield the right in one instance we may expect to be forced to keep silence whenever it suits the government to demand it. Fortunately it is no easy matter to bulldoze the newspapers of America. The menace of fine and imprisonment will intimidate very few. No matter what Federal officials may hold, the newspaper men of the country will not change their conviction that an honest criticism or discussion of the provisions contained in the anti-lottery law cannot with any show of justice be held to be a violation of that law. If they are mistaken in this belief, then the law will have to be repealed or modified. In this republic the government cannot array itself against the press and have the support of the people."

It is the policy and practice in some of the monarchies to inhabit criticism by the press of the acts of government, but until the enforcement, or the alleged enforcement, of the anti-lottery law no one dreamed that such a thing would be attempted in the United States.—Houston (Tex.) Post, Sept. 16.

In Twenty Years.

To the citizen of the Old World who is observant on his travels in the United States, this is a country where development is marvelously rapid. In Europe, a family, a town, or a city which cannot trace its history back more than two hundred and fifty years is as hard to be found as a black swan. Old towns have grown but new ones have not been founded. Sixty millions more of people are here than a hundred and fifteen years ago. But if the development of a hundred or two hundred years seems wonderful to the European, what shall we say of the material progress of the last twenty years? A single illustration is enough. Twenty years ago this week, Chicago suffered an unparalleled loss by fire. The business district was destroyed and thousands of people left shelterless in the streets. What is Chicago now? The second city of the United States. What were the states west of the Mississippi twenty years ago? What they are now can best be ascertained by taking a trip over the Burlington system of roads, which reaches all important places in ten Western and Northern states. For any information as to rates, routes, and time of trains, call on your local agents, or write to W. J. C. Kennyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C. B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

Gone mad—the person with bad blood who's not taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. You are bereft of judgment and good sense if you allow your blood to get out of order, your liver sluggish—life dull, everything blue, for you may soon find out that you're in the grave—or next to it—because you did not procure the G. M. D. soon enough, and some dread disease, may be influenza or consumption, may be typhoid or malarial fever, has taken you. Consumption is Lung Scrofula. For Scrofula in its myriad forms, and for all Liver, Blood and Lung diseases, the "Discovery" is an unequaled remedy. Everybody, now and then, feels "run-down" "played-out,"—with no power to generate vitality, in fact, just too sick to be well. That's where the right kind of medicine comes in, and the "Discovery" does for a dollar what the doctor wouldn't do for less than five or ten.

We claim that nothing like it has been discovered for a blood-purifier. It's guaranteed by the makers. Your money is returned if it dosen't benefit or cure you.

BEFORE DAWN.

The round luster of the white-faced moon
Makes wan the filaments of scattered cloud;
The stars tremble; Venus no more proud,
Pales westward, for the dawn comes soon.

The heavens are peopled with inchoate forms,
Mystic, fancy-clad, uncertain, swift,
Flying silent o'er each star-sown rift,
And vanishing as fast as summer storms.

The lissome branches flaunt against the sky
As if some wood-witch orgy were in course;
Aye, Pan is singing, ribald-voiced and hoarse,
Beneath the gloom away from human eye.

Oh, could I see the horn'd and curly god,
Then I should see the wood nymphs slim and fair,
Who dance upon the finger-tips of air,
And flash their beauty at its cynic nod.

Perchance some dryad, deep-eyed, round and sweet,
Would deem a mortal worthy of her wiles;
Ah me, she would not bare herself of smiles
Before I laid my heart beneath her feet.

But no; the east is silvered low and high;
There is no dance, there is no god nor maid;
The boughs are prim, the wood is cold and staid;
There are no shapes against the morning sky.

—W. J. HENDERSON.

THE EMERALD EARRINGS.

THEY lay on their white velvet bed, the sunlight glittering through them, and changing their deep, rich green, that reminded me of mossy woodland nooks, into globules of golden light. A pair of emerald earrings, exquisitively set, and the handsomest I had ever seen. I was somewhat of a judge, too, for in bygone days, when fortune smiled on me, many rare gems found a place in my jewel casket.

But those days were a part of the irrevocable, past, and instead of living a gay life in a stately home, with an indulgent father to gratify every wish, I Mildred Heath, was now a hard-working little teacher in a crowded city school. A stuffy little room, third floor back, in Mrs. Wilson's shabby boarding-house, I called "home." No one knew how I longed for some of the old pleasures to help brighten the dull days that were now filled with monotonous labor; how I envied gay young girls as they rolled by in their carriages, laughing and chatting; or how the florists' windows tempted me with their wealth of beautiful blossoms, bringing to my mind so vividly the fragrant conservatories at my dear old home.

But after months of such useless repinings I had forced myself into a more contented frame of mind, and was at peace with myself and the world, until one unlucky day, in hastening through a side street to reach home before a threatened storm, I suddenly stopped before a dingy pawnbroker's window, where, surrounded by odds and ends of all sorts, reposed the emerald earrings described in the beginning of my story. How they lighted up that dull window with their soft, shimmering radiance! And at the first sight there came to me an overwhelming desire to possess them. All the restrained longing for that which was dainty, bright and beautiful, broke forth afresh; and not until the fast falling drops of rain reminded me that I was still some distance from home did I turn away from the window.

That night I dreamed I was teaching school in Africa, and the natives were pelting me with huge emeralds.

The next morning I again turned into the little street to feast my eyes on the beauty of those jewels. The following day, before starting for school, I counted over my little hoard of savings. Twenty-five dollars.

"Oh, dear! that will never buy them," I said dejectedly.

Nevertheless, I tucked the money into my purse and hastened to school. Not until evening did I find myself free, and then I fairly flew into that little side street, holding my breath as I drew near the pawnbroker's window, for fear the white velvet case and its contents would be missing. But no they were still there, looking if possible more beautiful than ever. And proving myself no exception to the old adage, "She who hesitates is lost," I quickly entered the shop and asked to see the earrings.

The proprietor, a greasy, unprepossessing looking individual, placed them before me, expatiating on their beauty in his smooth oily way.

"What is the price of these?" I asked breaking in on his volubility.

"Thirty-five dollars and they are cheap at that, miss."

"Yes, I know; but that is more than I can pay," I said falteringly, and scarcely able to restrain my tears, I turned slowly away.

"Wait a bit, miss," he called after me. "Now what will you give me for the lovely gems?"

"I have just twenty-five dollars," I said, "and I really ought not to spend so much for jewelry."

"But it is a great bargain," he said hastily, and as he saw me put away my purse he added: "Well, you take the emeralds and I'll take the $25. It is giving them away, really, but I have not the customers in this quiet street who would appreciate them," he added in suave tones.

Eagerly I counted out the money, and slipping the case into my pocket hurried home. Had I not been so delighted at getting my heart's desire I might have thought it strange that the pawnbroker was so ready to part with the jewels for so much less than their value. But no such thoughts troubled me. That night I slept with the jewels beneath my pillow, and actually arose in the night and lighted the gas to look at them. All of which was very childish, I know.

The next day was Saturday, and I had promised myself a treat—that of attending the flower show in progress at Horticultural Hall. So by 9 o'clock I was on my way, attired in my best gown and hat, with the emeralds swinging bravely in my ears.

It was a beautiful morning. The sun shone brightly, the park seemed full of twittering birds as I passed through it, and the grass looked fresh and green from the soft spring rains. I was in excellent spirits at the prospect of spending a day among the flowers, of which I was passionately fond, with no stupid children to correct and no dull lessons to hear.

On reaching the hall I almost screamed with delight for it looked like an enchanted palace, the work of fairies instead of man. For hours I wandered through isles carpeted with soft moss, banked by pyramids of flowers reaching to the roof Here were carnations of every hue, their spicy aroma filling the air. There the graceful heliotrope nodded to her dainty neighbor, the lily of the valley, while the callas, drawn up like soldiers on guard, were surrounded by delicate, waving fern. And over it all floated the fragrance of roses.

During my walk among the flowers I had several times encountered a stout, elderly lady, richly dressed, accompanied by a very handsome young man who called her "aunt," and whose blue eyes looked into mine so earnestly each time he passed that I turned away blushing. Presently I found myself close behind them. I had stopped to examine a large cactus, and they had evidently halted for the same purpose, the lady lifted her arm to point toward the plant, and I was admiring the long, beautiful fringe on her mantle, when the crowd surging, pushed me against her, and it became entangled about one of my earrings. The owner of the fringe, perfectly unconscious hurried on to join her handsome nephew, who was a little in advance, while I, much against my will was obliged to keep pace with her.

The absurdity of the situation forced itself upon me, and I trembled with suppressed laughter. There I was being led along like "a lamb to the slaughter," vainly endeavoring to free myself without attracting attention and without injuring my precious ear-ring. Had there not been a young man in the case I should have spoken, but I had no desire for that particular one to see me in such a ridiculous position. But, alas! it was to be. In despair I gave a frantic tug at the fringe, that seemed to possess the strength of a cable. It parted so suddenly that my clenched hand struck the broad back before me with such a resounding whack that the old lady was rendered quite speechless for a moment.

"What in the world do you mean, young woman?" she finally grasped, irately.

"I—your fringe—my earring," I stammered, turning scarlet as I saw those blue eyes again looking into mine.

"Did it hurt you or injure your earring?" he asked kindly, as if he pitied my embarrassment.

"That is not the thing," the old lady ejaculated crossly, before I had time to answer. "My fringe is quite ruined; several strands are gone. Ah! it is caught on your miserable earring, that did all this mischief," she said tartly, stepping up to me to loosen it.

Then she dropped her hands with a little shriek, and clutched me tightly by the arm.

"Gilbert, look!" she cried excitedly. "My emeralds, my stolen emeralds! Ah, you wicked creature!"

"Hush! aunt," her nephew said in a low tone. "That girl is not a thief, and there is more than one pair of earrings in the world."

"There is not another pair like mine," she said decidedly, looking scornfully at me."

It had all taken place so suddenly that I stood like one dumb; but now I cried out passionately:

"I did not steal them—I bought them only last night."

The old lady sniffed contemptuously, and glanced suspiciously at my well-worn black gown; but her nephew said gently:

"I believe you, and regret that my aunt is so severe; Will you not come with us to a more private place and tell us about it?"

He courteously offered me his arm, but I proudly declined it, and walked by his side with head erect and burning cheeks. I, Mildred Heath, accused of stealing! We entered a room at the end of the long hall used as an office but now quite deserted; and without further ado I began tremulously—for a lump would come into my throat:

"My name is Mildred Heath, and I am a school-teacher. I saw the emeralds in a pawnbroker's window, and, although it was a foolish thing to do, I admired them so much that I bought them."

I handed the jewels to their owner, but her nephew interposed.

"Keep them just one moment, Miss Heath; I am very glad to hear your explanation, and beg that you will pardon my aunt's hasty words. Now I think an explanation is due you. My aunt, Mrs. Radcliffe, had a valuable pair of emerald ear-rings taken from her hall table, where she had carelessly left them. The front door stood open at the time. We had never been able to trace the jewels; these may or may not be hers. Will you kindly look on the rim of the setting and see if there is engraved there the letter 'R'?

I looked at the setting closely, and there, so small that the naked eye could scarcely see it, was the letter.

"Yes," I said, "the earrings are undoubtedly Mrs. Radcliffe's," and I gave them to her, when she was as profuse in her apologies as she had been in her accusations.

"I have a favor to ask of you, Miss Heath," Gilbert Radcliffe said. "Our carriage is at the door, and I should like you to take us to the pawnbroker from whom you purchased these earrings. Through him we may locate the thief."

We drove quickly there. On entering the dingy shop we saw a young woman eagerly displaying something to the proprietor. Seeing us she concealed the article, and, pulling down her veil, was about to make a hasty exit when Gilbert Radcliffe caught her by the arm, saying quietly:

"What have you in your pocket, Mary?"

The girl hesitated, then, bursting into tears, handed him a case containing several pieces of jewelry, the property of his aunt. Mary was Mrs. Radcliffe's maid. The pawnbroker being her brother she had no trouble in disposing of her stolen goods. So this explained the disappearance of the emeralds.

* * * * * * *

As I write the earrings gleam brightly on me from my toilet-table, for I am now Mrs. Gilbert Radcliffe, and they were one of Mrs. Radcliffe's gifts on my wedding day—a gift I did not want to accept at first, they brought back so vividly that first unhappy day. But when Gilbert reminded me that but for them we might never have met I became reconciled to their possesion, and the place of honor in my jewel case is filled by the emerald earrings.—Elno Parr, in Waverly.

CHEAP LITERATURE.

It Took Him Four Hours to Discover His Eyes Were Weak.

He had a hand-cart loaded with novels, says the New York Evening World, all of which were marked at the extraordinary low price of 10 cents. He took his station near the corner of Broadway and Murray street, and presently a man came along and halted and ran his eye over the books.

"Take your choice for 10 cents," said the dealer in persuasive tones.

"That seems to be remarkably cheap," replied the man.

"It is, sir. Any one of these books retails at 25 cents elsewhere."

"Does, eh? Well, mebbe I can find something to interest me."

He put on his eye-glasses and began to search. This was 10 o'clock in the forenoon. He picked up several books and read a few pages, and at 11 o'clock the dealer observed:

"Only 10 cents for your choice of any of these 25-cent books."

"That's remarkably cheap—remarkably cheap," replied the man, as he sat down on a box and continued to read.

Twelve o'clock came and he was right there. He had changed off from "A Heartless Wife" to "A Too Loving Husband," and the dealer hitched about uneasily as he announced:

"Make your choice now. These are all 25-cent books going for 10 cents."

"Can't see how you can afford it, but I suppose you picked up a bargain," replied the customer.

At 1 o'clock he let go of love and picked out a pirate story, and he was on page 31 when the dealer took occasion to remark:

"These books are for sale at 10 cents each. This is no free reading-room."

"Ten cents is cheap—remarkably cheap," replied the man. "I'm not posted, but I should say the ink alone cost as much as that."

It was 2 o'clock, and he had changed off on a detective story when the dealer felt that the limit had been reached, and bluntly demanded:

"Do you want to buy a book, sir?"

"Ten cents apiece, you said?"

"Yes, sir."

"And they retail everywhere else for a quarter?"

"They do."

"Remarkably cheap, and I don't see how you can afford to do it. If a feller wanted a book this would be a great opportunity for him——"

"Do you want a book, sir?"

"No, I guess not. They are remarkably cheap, but I don't find exactly my style, and my eyes also bother me considerably. Ten cents is dog-cheap, but I suppose you got a bargain. I guess I'll be going, but I hope you'll sell 'em all. It's a great opportunity, and the public ought to take advantage of it. Good-by!"

To Make Grape Wine.

Now that grapes are so cheap and plenty, the housekeeper who has storeroom for it may easily supply herself with an excellent light table wine. Buy your grapes in a quantity, say twenty pounds at once; pick from the stems, throwing out all imperfect ones; mash thoroughly, without crushing the seeds, and put into a large earthen or wooden vessel. For every gallon of mashed grapes add two of boiling water. Let it stand twenty-four hours; then strain and add to each gallon of liquor two to three and one-half pounds of granulated sugar. Stir with a wooden spoon till the sugar dissolves, then cover lightly—a thin cloth is best—and let it stand six weeks in a moderately warm place. Draw it off carefully from the lees, wash out the vessel clean, put back the wine and leave it a month longer; then bottle and seal or put into stone jugs corking them well.

Do not fill the jar at first by at least six inches, or it will run over when fermentation is well under way. Two pounds of sugar to the gallon makes a wine very like claret; three and a half gives one very sweet and quite strong. Do not risk less sugar. Fermentation turns it first to alcohol, later to acetic acid. If there is not sugar enough there will not be enough alcohol to check fermentations in time. The result will be a vinegar a liquid fit for nothing under the sun.

Some grapes will make wine without the addition of sugar. If you choose to experiment, press out the juice without water and see if it will float an egg so as to show the size of a quarter dollar. If it does the must will ferment into wine; if not it will go on to vinegar if you do not add sugar till the egg does float.

Prompt and Heroic.

All Australian boys are taught the neccessity of guarding against snake-bites. The treatment of such wounds is a necessary part of their education. One day two little fellows, 6 and 8 years old, went into the brush to play. The smaller one, chasing a rabbit into a hole, pushed in his hand, and brought it out quickly with a head of a venomous snake attached to the end of the fingers. "Quick, Charley!" he cried, putting his hand down on a stump. "Chop off my finger! The snake has bitten it." Charley, without a pause, lifted his axe and chopped, not only the damaged finger, but two of the others as well. Then the boy ran straight into town, over a mile distant, and sought a surgeon, who dipped the injured members in ammonia before dressing them. Imagine the pain of such a burning bath! A young Australian lady was walking along the street, when she saw a dirty and wretched-looking tramp to whose leg a venomous snake had affixed itself. After killing the reptile with her parasol, she borrowed his pen-knife cut the trousers away from the wound, and then cutting a cross upon the bite itself, applied her lips to it, and sucked the poison away. The tramp's life was saved, at the sacrifice, perhaps of some dainty scruples.—Youth's Companion.

Luck.

"German Syrup"

A Throat and Lung Specialty.

Those who have not used Boschee's German Syrup for some severe and chronic trouble of the Throat and Lungs can hardly appreciate what a truly wonderful medicine it is. The delicious sensations of healing, easing, clearing, strength-gathering and recovering are unknown joys. For German Syrup we do not ask easy cases. Sugar and water may smooth a throat or stop a tickling—for a while. This is as far as the ordinary cough medicine goes. Boschee's German Syrup is a discovery, a great Throat and Lung Specialty. Where for years there have been sensitiveness, pain, coughing, spitting, hemorrhage, voice failure, weakness, slipping down hill, where doctors and medicine and advice have been swallowed and followed to the gulf of despair, where there is the sickening conviction that all is over and the end is inevitable, there we place German Syrup. It cures. You are a live-man yet if you take it.

—[Fargo Republican.

Pembina County.

The settlement of the Red river valley practically began in this county. In 1875 the wheat acreage was 400 acres, representing the entire valley. This year the wheat area of the six North Dakota counties was 1,676,678 acres, producing over 33,000,000 bushels. Pembina county has an area of 820,440 acres, of which less than a third was in crops in 1891, wheat leading with 218,006 acres.

The assessed valuation of the county is about $6,000,000. The crops of 1891 will have a value very close up to these figures. The county is well supplied with schools, there being ninety districts. There are five newspapers, nine banks and thirty-four postoffices.

The railway facilities are good, the Great Northern having two lines, reaching Bathgate, Cavalier, Crystal, Glasston, Hamilton, Neche and St. Thomas, all excellent market towns. The population is about 15 000

O. Van Camp, of St. Thomas, averaged over 30 bushels of wheat from 100 acres.—Times.

Frank King, at his Jolliette farm, is now threshing thirty-two and one-half bushels of No. 1 Northern per acre, and his Crystal farm did better.—Times.

Fred Phillippe was in the center last Saturday. He says that where he is threshing, south of Young, the grain is turning out 28 to 30 bushels per acre of No. 1 hard. Good enough.—Cavalier Chronicle.

M. McAndress, who has been running his threshing machine for over two weeks, said to the Times man Tuesday: "I have not threshed any less than twenty bushels of wheat per acre this season, and some of it has run as high as thirty-five bushels. The yield this year is immense."—St. Thomas Times.

Walsh County.

The area of the county is 1,206 square miles, or 820,440 acres. The acreage in crops in 1891 was as follows: Wheat, 241,673 acres; oats, 33,341; barley, 14,397; flax, 4,927; potatoes, 15,457; grasses, 13,609. About one-third of its fertile area is under cultivation.

Lands here, as in the other counties, to be had on crop and other plans.

The population is about 17,000; there are 116 school districts; all the leading religious demoninations are represented; there are seven newspapers, six banks and twenty-five postoffices; the assessed valuation is about $6,00,000, not much in excess of the value of this year's crops. Read below about the crop yields.

The Great Northern, with three lines, is the principal railway; reaching Grafton, Minto, Ardock, Park River, Edinburg, Auburn, Conway, Pisek, Nash and Hoople.

Good lands can be bought here, as in other counties, on reasonable terms, either cash or crop payments. By the latter plan farms are often paid for in a year or two. There are many instances this year where not only was the land paid for, but other expenses and a surplus left besides.

John Wright has wheat that produced 54 straws to the stool and the heads measured 6½ inches.—Minto Journal.

Mrs. Charles A. Olson and daughter make the best record to date. They shocked 200 acres which the husband and father cut.—Park River Gazette-Witness.

Good yields of wheat are continually being heard from. Forty bushels per acre has been reported in some cases, but the run is from 25 to 35.—Grafton News and Times.

D. P. McLeod is busy threshing this week. His grain is turning out about thirty bushels per acre His barley went a little over sixty bushels per acre.—Grafton Advocate.

Dr. W. Livingstone threshed 1,850 bushels No. 1 hard wheat from 65 acres. The doctor thinks that is pretty good, but he has a granary of his own that holds 20,000 bushels, and there the 1,850 bushels will rest until the worth of it can be obtained, which, he thinks, is not just now.—Park River Gazette-Witness.

D. L. Aiken left in our sanctum the past week a fine garden carrot that shows what careful cultivation can do. It measured eighteen inches in length and is a beauty. He also showed a ripe tomato that measured fourteen inches round and fourteen ounces in weight—an ounce for every inch.—Grafton News.

Here are a few sample returns handed in from Forest River: R. B. Warren threshed 143 bushels wheat off from 3 acres, and realized $106.40 for it; 26 acres yielded him 1,152 bushels. John Carpenter cleaned up 4,850 bushels wheat off from 150 acres, and William Sprague had 1,500 bushels oats on 20 acres.—Minto Journal.

Here are some grain yields in this vicinity; J. Lovcik, Sr., threshed 1,100 bushels No. 1 hard from 22 acres—50 bushels exactly per acre; Ole Christiansen threshed 520 bushels from ten acres—52 bushels exactly per acre; H. J. Randall claims 127 bushels of oats to the acre; J.J. Dougherty 100 bushels of oats to the acre.—Park River Gazette-Witness.

John Harmon, near Park River, offered a quarter section for sale last spring for $2,000, or $12.50 per acre. He has taken from the land a crop of wheat worth $28 an acre, or more than twice the price he held his land at in the spring. There are ever and ever so many cases in the state where the crops raised this year are worth more than the value placed in the land last spring.—Grafton News and Times.

P. Stoughton, three miles east of Ardoch, from 85 acres threshed 2,960 bushels, an average yield of 34.8. J. Danley, three miles southwest of Ardoch, from 75 acres, threshed 2,325 bushels; average, 31. J. McGilvery, four miles southwest of Ardoch, 160 acres, threshed 4,800 bushels; average, 30. J. Harrison, three miles west of Ardoch, 70 acres, threshed 2,170 bushels; average, 31. G. Stevenson, one mile east of Ardoch, 50 acres, 1,514 bushels; average, 30.2.—Grand Forks Plaindealer.

H. J. Randall, of Park River, on a half-section of land that he would have gladly sold last spring for $3,000, has raised 260 acres of wheat yielding 8,000 bushels of No. 1 hard, which, at 80 cents a bushel, will bring $6,400. From 30 acres he had 2,000 bushels of oats and barley worth $700. And since harvesting his crops he has sold his half-section for $5,000. His crops and sale of farm amount to $12,100, or after deducting all expenses for seed, labor, threshing, marketing crop, etc., leave Mr. Randall three times the amount that he would have sold for in the spring.—Grand Forks Herald.

Traill County.

Contains a little over 900 square miles, or about 567,000 acres. The wheat area in 1891 was 269,426 acres; oats, 33,689; barley, 11,904; flax, 1,703; grasses, 12,194. The yield of wheat is figured at 20 bushels to the acre, according to items quoted below. The county is well supplied with schools, churches, banks, etc. There are 15 postoffices and 5 newspapers.

The railway facilities are of the best. The Great Northern has three lines, reaching the towns of Hillsboro, Buxton, Blanchard, Clifford, Cummings, Galesburg, Hatton, Kelso, Mayville and Portland.

The celebrated Grandin farm is in large part in this county.

Pat Kelly threshed the biggest crop of wheat in this vicinity—1,860 bushels from fifty acres.—Caledonia Times.

P. S. Peterson raised on eighteen acres, 1,422 bushels of oats—elevator weight. This makes seventy bushels to the acre.—Hillsboro Times.

C. W. Sutton says to the Hillsboro Banner: "I threshed 20,000 bushels of wheat off a little over 600 acres, and expect to get at least 60,000 bushels from the 2,000 acres I had in. He expects to net $30,000 from the various crops he has raised on has 2,600 acre farm—this above all expense, taxes, interests, etc.

Last summer Messrs. Barnum & Rice, of this city, purchased a quarter section of land a few miles north of here, the purchase price being $10 per acre, or $1,600. One hundred acres was prepared for cultivation and the yield was 36 bushels per acre, quality No. 1 Northern. Three thousand six hundred bushels at 75 cents per bushel, present market price, figures up $2,700, which pays for the land, leaving a surplus that pays all expenses and leaves a tidy sum besides.—Maysville Tribune.

Last Friday one of the Grandin threshing rigs was on section 17, where the wheat shocks stand pretty close together, and Superintendent Dalrymple concluded to see what the machine would do. When the engineer closed down at night 3,400 bushels of wheat had been threshed and by noon of the next day 1,800 bushels more were turned out. On Saturday the rig turned out 3,700 bushels and the next day the world's record was beaten by threshing 3,859 bushels of wheat. Superintendent Dalrymple declares he will make it an even 4,000 bushels.—Hillsboro Banner.

Grand Forks County.

Has an area of 1,440 square miles, or 922,600 acres. The crop acreage, as shown by assessors, in 1891 was as follows: Wheat, 262,922 acres; oats, 38,334; barley, 18,359; flax, 1,559; potatoes, 1,159; tame grass, 10,048—about one-third of its area in cultivation. The small grain crop in 1890 was over 300 bushels per capita. The crop of 1891 is far in excess of that. The wheat yield alone is estimated at 5,000,000 bushels, without considering oats, barley, rye, flax, corn, potatoes, hay, wool, butter, live stock and other products of the farm. Read the returns given below. The assessed valuation of the county is over $10,000,000. The population exceeds 19,000. There are 111 school districts, 36 churches, 25 postoffices, 10 newspapers and 9 banks in the county. It has splendid railway facilities, the Great Northern system spanning the county in the form of the letter H, reaching the towns of Grand Forks, Larimore, Arvilla, Emerado, Inkster, Kempton, McCanna, Manvel, Merrifield, Niagara, Northwood, Ojata, Orr, Reynolds and Thompson.

Thomas Mooney—Yes, we are threshing most every day. The wheat is averaging 28 to 35 bushels to the acre.—Larimore Pioneer.

Amos Henry—We have the finest crops down in our section of the country that I ever saw grown. It will average 30 or 45 bushels to the acre.—Larimore Pioneer.

C. H. Baldwin has finished threshing on his Emerado farm and has about 15,000 bushels of as fine wheat as man ever saw. The average yield per acre was 31½ bushels.—Grand Forks Plaindealer.

E. M. Paulson—I told my men last evening to tresh only every other shock, as I was getting so much wheat I could not pay the threshing bill. I have 130 acres, having threshed 3,700 bushels.—Northwood Gleaner.

Ninety acres of land on P. Cummerford's farm, four miles west of here, yielded 2,765 bushels of No. 1 wheat. Twelve acres of land on Fred Christinia's farm yielded 504 bushels of wheat, and the balance of the farm yielded nearly as well.—Manvel Graphic.

R. B. Warren threshed 143 bushels of wheat off from three acres and realized $106.40 for it. Twenty-six acres yielded 1,152 bushels. John Carpenter cleaned up 4,850 bushels of wheat from 150 acres, and William Sprague had 1,500 bushels of oats on 20 acres.—Gilby Globe-Gazette.

The lowest yield I have heard of was twenty-seven bushels, and the highest forty-two, on Mr. Steele's place, the most of it running between thirty and thirty-five bushels. It is nearly all grading No. 1 hard, some late wheat which was touched by frost being off a grade. Of seven cars shipped from our elevator six went No. 1 hard and one No. 1 Northern.—John R. Barker, in Grand Forks Plaindealer.

And still the hum of the threshing machine is heard on every hand, and it is telling the same good story, of yields averaging all in the vicinity of 30 bushels to the acre. We have yet to meet the farmer hereabout that places his average much below that figure. We had thought of publishing more of these as they are given to us. But there is such a sameness, "Thirty bushels per acre," ditto, ditto, ditto.—Gilby Globe-Gazette.

The Grand Forks Plaindealer prints returns from over 200 farms in various parts of the county, the general average being twenty-nine bushels to the acre. The following are from the beginning of the list:

R. Newall, one mile west of Arvilla, from 38 acres had 1,200 bushels, average 31.3.

L. J. Zimmer, half mile east of Manvel, 68 acres, threshed 1,800 bushels, average 26.4.

Thomas Foley, two miles southwest from Arvilla, 160 acres, threshed 5,100, average 32.5.

John Nagle, three miles east of Manville, 93 acres, threshed 2,800 bushels, average 30.01.

William Nagle, three miles from Manvel, 80 acres, threshed 2,500 bushels, average 31.5.

E. J. Smith, half mile north of Arvilla, from 40 acres threshed 1,240 bushels, average 31.

Hancock & Gerard, quarter mile west of Emerado, 135 acres, threshed 4,000 bushels, average 29.5.

M. McDonald, four miles southwest of Arvilla, from 175 acres had 5,465 bushels, average 31.2.

Peter Harvey, three miles southeast of Manvel, 120 acres, threshed 3,300 bushels, average 27.5.

T. C. Warren, five miles southwest from Arvilla, from 160 acres threshed 4,320 bushels, average 27.

Cass County.

The most populous and wealthy county in North Dakota. It has an area of 2,451 square miles, or 1,568,640 acres. The land in crop in 1891 was as follows: Wheat, 527,070 acres; oats, 70,695; barley, 12,915; flax, 1,745; potatoes, 1,645; corn, 1,630; grasses, 16,835. A little over one-third of the total acreage in cultivation. Room for more people. The crop of wheat this year at ten bushels to the acre would amount to 5,000,000 bushels, but the returns show that it will be twenty or more, or a total of 10,000,000 bushels, worth $9,000,000. Note newspaper extracts below showing how the fields are turning out.

The yearly gold and silver products of all the far-famed Black Hills mines is but $3,500,000. One season's wheat crop alone in Cass county is worth nearly as much as the output of three years. And the wheat is made in five months' work, while the rugged labor of the mines lasts all the year; and the other crops and live stock are not taken into the account.

The population is over 20,000. There are 9 banks, 37 churches, 8 newspapers and 116 school districts in the county. The crops of all kinds this year will nearly equal the assessed valuation of $14,000,000.

The Great Northern is the principal railway of the county, having four different lines, reaching Fargo, Casselton, Davenport, Ripon, Everest, Ayr, Page City, Absaraka, Dasbin, Addison, Kindred, Oatland, Erie, Harwood, Amenia, Gardner and Grandin, or eighteen of the twenty-three postoffice towns in the county.

Peter Goodman gathered $24 worth of wheat from $20-an-acre land this fall.

F. W. Warren's 700 acres of wheat is averaging 30 bushels to the acre.—Mayville Tribune.

Charley Gunkel has threshed 4,000 bushels of wheat off of 100 acres, or 40 bushels to the acre.—Casselton Republican.

Thomas Knox threshed the banner acre of wheat Saturday, which yielded forty-five and one-half bushels. Who can beat it?—Grandin Graphic.

Joe Lean has finished threshing 50 acres of wheat which has yielded 32 bushels to the acre. His crop will average over 25 bushels.—Casselton Republican.

Charley Gunkel has threshed 4,000 bushels of wheat off 100 acres, or 40 bushels to the acre. This is the largest yield yet reported in this vicinity.—Casselton Republican.

G. Lee Clark has finished threshing on his home farm of 320 acres. His wheat averaged 23 bushels to the acre; barley, 30 bushels and oats 40 bushels.—Casselton Republican.

It is a merry tale that the threshing machines throughout North Dakota are telling these days. Nearly every farmer finds he is in error—in underestimating his crop.—Fargo Argus.

County Commissioner Holes harvested 9,000 bushels of wheat from 300 acres. He says the crop of Cass county will average twenty bushels to the acre and the acreage in over 500,000.

Talk about threshing. On Monday last J. M. Watson's outfit at Eldred, turned out 675 bushels of oats in just one hour and five minutes. Who can beat this?—Mayville Tribune.

Oliver Dalrymple is threshing nearly 75,000 bushels of wheat daily. He has six threshing machines running. Mr. Dalrymple will thresh nearly, if not quite, 500,000 bushels of wheat this year.—Fargo Argus.

Up in Elm township Peter Madson owns a gold mine in the shape of a section of land. He has finished threshing his wheat, the average yield per acre being 32 bushels and 6 quarts of No. 1 hard.—Casselton Republican.

Walter B. Pinkham threshed 157½ acres of wheat, which yielded 4,500 bushels of No. 1 hard, which he contracted at 88 cents. The average is a little over twenty-eight bushels per acre. Does it pay to farm in North Dakota? Some.—Fargo Republican.

R. S. Eyres, of Hunter, indulged in the rather pleasant pastime of fanning his heated brow with a roll of bills one day this week. The roll contained $630, the proceeds from the sale of his crop of twenty-seven acres—and he has more that will pan out better.—Hunter Eye.

The report comes in along with other big yields that Alex McCleod, three miles east of Ayr, threshed 30 bushels to the acre from 40 acres, and it all graded No. 1 hard. He received $1,200 in cash from the 40 acres. Beat this if you can, and we will come again.—Wheatland Eagle.

W. H. Best—I have sold more farm lands in the last three months than I have for the past five years. There is a brisk demand for improved farm property, and prices are ranging higher than for years. Real estate will be in big demand this winter and next spring.—Casselton Republican.

J. W. Lofthouse has put a little over 5,000 bushels of No. 1 hard in the elevators from his 143 acres at Kelso, Cass county. He sold it for $4,000. He bought the farm last winter and paid $2,100 for it, and now, after working it for one season, he has the land, machinery and stock paid for out of his crop and has over $1,000 in the bank to boot.—Fargo Republican.

Joseph Hunter, who has charge of a threshing crew on the Grandin farm in Cass county, N. D., reports some of the good work of Anoka men. Frank Pratt, on the eighth division in one day, threshed 3,700 bushels of wheat; Mr. Hunter's best two days on the third division were 3,197 bushels of wheat; the next day threshing 4,500 bushels of barley.—Anoka (Minn.) Union.

"I have never seen North Dakota so properous in the thirteen years in which I have lived in that state," said Maj. Edwards, of the Fargo Argus. "The fact is, if we had no wheat at all, the people as a whole would advance in material interests some hundred thousands of dollars in their sheep and cattle investments. North Dakota has over 500,000 sheep, and next year she will have 1,500,000. The amount of money which the North Dakota farmers will receive this year for their grain would have purchased their farms one year ago."

I have lived in the Red river valley twenty years and farmed it. I never had an average under twelve bushels of wheat per acre, and the average for the twenty years will not be under twenty-five bushels. The lowest I ever sold my wheat was for 54 cents, and the highest I ever got was $1.35 per bushel. It is safe to say that I have received at at least 60 cents per bushel on the average, and that is a return of $15 per acre for every year. Where is there a country which can make such returns on the amount of labor expended? The trouble here with farmers is that they do not take good care of their farm machinery, and are not careful enough about little matters. For a farmer the Red river valley is a paradise.—Tom McKenzie in the Fargo Argus.

No, sir—look at that magnificent map of plenty painted upon the broad fields of North Dakota by the hand of labor guided and directed by the good God! The men who are harvesting today in those fields are not begging the United States government for charity. They do not want the nation to become their bankers even. The same old stocking leg used by their fathers is good enough for them so that it always remains comfortably full. And every stocking leg in North Dakota will represent the horn of plenty this fall. The sub-treasury of the North Dakota farmer is found in reasonable prices reasonable crops. This year we shall have that.—Col. W. C. Plummer in Minneapolis Journal.

Ramsey County

Has an area of nearly 700,000 acres; contains Devils lake, the largest body of water in North Dakota; had 70,000 acres in wheat this year, and extracts given below will show what the yield is. The county is on the main line of the Great Northern, with a branch running from Church's Ferry to the Turtle mountains. There is still government land to be taken in the surrounding country.

A. D. Cleveland threshed 2,604 bushels from 100 acres—measured.—Sun.

Crary Bros., near Crary, have one patch that averaged 35 bushels of wheat to the acre.—Sun.

Commissioner Graham, of Ramsey, threshed forty-five acres of wheat that went 48 bushels to the acre.

J. B. Easton had 60 acres in wheat, which averaged 37 bushels to the acre. Sixteen acres averaged about 42 bushels.

John Sterret's homestead yielded 47 bushels per acre. The rest of his land is averaging about 40 bushels an acre.—Church's Ferry Sun.

John Erie's farm turned out 29 bushels of wheat per acre. H. A. Noltimier's wheat yield was about 30 bushels an acre.—Church's Ferry Sun.

Ole Ugland, of Crary, harvested and threshed sixty acres, realizing twenty-nine bushels to the acre, and sold it for No. 1 Northern at 77 cents.—Devils Lake News.

John Slayberg, who is threshing for the Baker Bros., of Freshwater, says their wheat is averaging about forty bushels to the acre. They will have over 20,000 bushels.—Sun.

Here's the biggest yield on record: Hans Bryn, who lives south of Grand Harbor, threshed out 1,628 bushels of wheat—machine measure—from 32 acres, an average of nearly 51 bushels to the acre.—Sun.

Commissioner Regan says his wheat is averaging about thirty-five bushels to the acre, although he can't tell definitely until he gets through threshing. It was graded No. 3 at the elevator, and he says he will ship it.—Sun.

Morrison Bros. are now at work threshing their own grain. They say it will average about 40. bushels to the acre. They have threshed 5,600 bushels from one quarter section and it will require a day's work to complete the job. They expect 7,000 bushels from this particular quarter.—Sun.

The first load of new wheat was brought to the Devils Lake market Sept 1 by Edward Lohnes. It graded No. 1 hard, weighed 61 pounds to the bushel and sold for 80 cents. His field averaged 48 bushels to the acre. Barley is averaging 60 to 70 bushels to the acre.—Inter-Ocean.

Ole Moe threshed out 27 bushels of No. 2 Northern to the acre on 150 acres. Thorald Torgeson realized 34 bushels to the acre of No. 1 hard on eighty acres. Eugene Bullock got 50 bushels of oats and 44 bushels of barley to the acre. That's all the threshing I know of in that vicinity.—Devils Lake News.

James Perkins threshed 50 acres which averaged 33 bushels and 25 acres which averaged 37 bushels. The first piece was well prepared and the seed was drilled in crossways. The second piece was some millet ground and about eight acres of stubble, seeded one way. His wheat grades No. 1 hard and No. 1 Northern.—Sun.

A telegram to a daily paper from Devils Lake states that threshing will not be completed in Ramsey county before snow flies. This is slightly incorrect. Unless the farmers get more help from some quarter it will not be completed before the 4th of July. That's the kind of a crop Ramsey county has.—Inter-Ocean.

We were shown a sample of corn this week grown one mile north of York by R. M. Roth. Mr. Roth planted but a few acres as an experiment and the result is entirely satisfactory and proves that corn can be made a paying crop here. The piece above referred to is ripe; was not frosted and will produce sixty bushels per acre—so says Mr. Roth, who is a Missourian, and certainly ought to know something about corn.—Church's Ferry Sun.

John A. Percival threshed an eighty-acre field just east of town, the result being 2,822 bushels of wheat, an average of thirty-five and one-quarter bushels to the acre, which sold for $2,090—$26 an acre. How's that for a crop? He had the land in on shares, furnishing seed and twine and paying half the machine bill. After deducting for interest on the cost of the land and taxes his half of the crop nets him $780, nearly $10 an acre.—Devils Lake Inter-Ocean.

Ed Lohnes has threshed 111 measured acres, 31 acres in one piece and 80 acres in another. From the 31-acre piece he got 1,240 bushels and from the 80-acre field 2,970 bushels, giving him a total yield of 4,210 bushels and an average of 38 bushels to the acre. This is machine measure, and it overruns considerably. His wheat grades No. 1 Northern. Fred Baker, two miles north of the Belgrade bridge, got an average of 37 bushels from 95 acres. A 25-acre piece averaged 40 bushels; it grades No. 1 Northern. Paul Hansen, of Minnewaukan township, from a 32-acre field got an average of 39 bushels of No. 1 hard. Frank Cockburn, on his farm two miles west of town, got 2,330 bushels of wheat from 75 acres, an average of 31 bushels; 450 bushels of oats from 8 acres, and 1,400 bushels of barley from 28 acres. His wheat grades from No. 1 Northern down, some of it being badly frosted. He is shipping the latter and expects it will net him about 60 cents a bushel. Joe Graham threshed out 90 acres of wheat on his farm near town and got 3,109 bushels, an average of 34¼ bushels. It is nice wheat, although cut very green, and Joe thinks it will all grade 2 Northern or better. John Graham and Mr. Rutherford, living in the same neighborhood, have also threshed. It is said that their wheat averaged 40 bushels, but the Inter-Ocean is unable to give the exact figures. George Wheeler, of Minnewaukan, is said to have got about 40 bushels of wheat to the acre. From 35 acres of oats he got 1,610 bushels.—Devils Lake Inter-Ocean.

Towner County.

Towner county contains nearly 700,000 acres of land, with some of it still to be homesteaded. The Great Northern railway reaches the towns of Cando, Bisbee and Perth.

I. A. Hendrickson's oats are turning out about 90 to 100 bushels to the acre.—Cando Record.

As near as we can learn wheat is going about thirty bushels to the acre, No. 1 hard.—Cando Record.

J. W. McVey, of Cando, had oats with stalks over six feet high and heads containing as high as 180 grains to each.

There are thousands of acres of government land open for settlement in Towner county. The Great Northern railway runs through the county and reaches the towns of Cando, Bisbee and Perth, affording fine market facilities.

From the best information we can obtain wheat is going 30 bushels to the acre; the poorest field heard of made over 20. Farmers are feeling happy once more; business men are taking fresh courage; stock of all kinds is looking fine, and every indication goes to show that we are on the road to success. Lucky is the man that stood by his Towner county interests, whether farmer, merchant or stockman. Everything is lovely and the goose hangs high.—Cando Record.

Lawyer Meacham, of Cando, was in the city yesterday on legal business. He says that business is rushing in the Coulee country, and that farmers are getting 35 and 40 bushel averages from their wheat. Dave McCanna got 6,000 bushels of No. 1 hard from a quarter section. Henry Dingman did as well. B. F. Berry's wheat averaged twenty-eight bushels. George McWilliam's wheat averaged thirty-five bushels. Mr. Meacham says that these are average crops, and Towner county farmers will be well fixed financially at the end of the season.—Devils Lake Inter-Ocean.

Dickey County.

Dickey county is reached via the Great Northern railway, with stations at Crescent Hill, Riverdale, Port Emma, Guelph, Silver Leaf and Ellendale. It is in the south tier of counties in North Dakota.

They have finished threshing father's wheat and he had an average of thirty-one and a quarter bushels per acre. He cut both his own and mine, and he says mine is heavier than his, so I think mine is good for thirty bushels throughout.—Dr. M. F. Merchant in Ellendale Leader.

Mr. Glover states that fourteen acres in one of his fields yielded him forty-seven bushels of wheat per acre. This is what Dickey county soil can do, with sufficient moisture and good cultivation. His entire crop on 1,500 acres will not average much less than thirty bushels.—Oakes Republican.

Henry Boos has more wheat than he dreamed of. After filling two immense granaries, which he calculated would hold all his wheat, he had to set four teams hauling to the elevator, and they have been at it all week, with 200 acres to thresh yet. His average is about thirty bushels.—Ellendale Commercial.

The first wheat marketed in this city was brought in by John Kearns and sold to James Bell. It was graded No. 1 hard and a first class sample. Kearns tells us he is getting fully 30 bushels to the acre. James Coulter was the first to thresh at Forest River, and his wheat is yielding about 30 bushels.—Ellendale Commercial.

J. Q. Fitzgerald raised 12 acres of wheat this year and last Tuesday he had it threshed. The yield was enormous. Four hundred and sixty-seven bushels by machine measure from exactly 12 acres! By weight the wheat goes 63 pounds to the measured bushel, so that the yield is over 40 bushels by weight per acre.—Ellendale Commercial.

I have finished threshing my shock grain, and the yield was all that I could expect. Some wheat was very good, while other was not so good. I cannot tell what my average was, because in cutting some patches were skipped as not worth cutting. I also plowed up and summer-fallowed 100 acres. I threshed 5,200 bushels, and my headed grain still stands in the stack. Yes, the farm will pay back this year what it has sunk during the two years previous and leave a little margin.—M. P. Axtell, in Ellendale Leader.

Steele County.

C. H. Carpenter is threshing his wheat, and it is turning out about 33 bushels per acre.—Hope Pioneer.

J. A. White commenced last Monday threshing his wheat. The yield, so far, has been over 30 bushels per acre, and is of fine quality of grain.—Hope Pioneer.

Rev. W. C. Whisnand, of Colgate, informs us that one piece of his wheat—40 acres—went 25 bushels per acre, and the balance, 70 acres, went 28 bushels per acre. His oats turned out big, too.—Hope Pioneer.

So far, the yield of wheat in this county is beyond the most sanguine expectations. In this township the yield on the Walters place, east of town, is 28 bushels per acre. On Oscar Cummings' place the yield is 25 bushels per acre. In Highland township Frank Lossing threshed 2,305 bushels on 80 acres, or a trifle less than 29 bushels per acre. In Norway township Ole J. Coltom's farm yielded 30 bushels per acre. These are but fair samples of the wheat for these townships.—Steele County Tribune.

Steele county is reached via the Great Northern railway, with stations at Colgate and Hope. Another line of the same road runs close to the eastern boundary of the county, affording good transportation facilities.

Cavalier County.

There is still vacant government land in Cavalier county. The railway of the county is the Great Northern, reaching the towns of Milton, Osnabrock and Langdon.

Peter McLean—We threshed 21 acres of wheat for E. E. Elford this week which yielded 750 bushels, or 35 5-7 bushels per acre. There is lots more just as good as that.—Langdon Democrat.

On Monday of this week Allan McDonald threshed some oats for George Diebel that were grown on the town site. The average yield was 65 bushels per acre.—Langdon Democrat.

Cashier McPhail has done the first threshing in this neighborhood this season. He has 170 acres of barley which he is threshing out of the shock. As near as he can judge it will yield between 40 and 50 bushels per acre.—Langdon Democrat.

John Swanlaw, with his crew of threshers, was up from Shepard on Saturday. The wheat down there is turning out beyond the expectations of the most sanguine. A field of 200 acres belonging to William Shepard threshed out 6,426 bushels, or an average of 32.13 bushels per acre.

Hon. H. T. Helgesen was in the city today en route from his home in Milton, where he has been for a short vacation, to the state capital. Mr. Helgesen speaks in glowing terms of the magnificent crops in the vicinity of Milton. Wheat is yielding from 30 to 40 bushels.—Grand Forks Plaindealer.

Cavalier county has this year 67,180 acres of wheat; will produce an average of 25 bushels to the acre, or 1,677,700 bushels. With 100,672 bushels kept for seed she will market 1,577,038 bushels. Of oats there are 16,065 acres, or 1,045,-000 bushels. Of barley there are 9,406 acres, or 436,770 bushels.

All available threshing machines are now at work. Although we hear now and then of a piece of wheat that went as low as twenty bushels, with some damaged by blight and frost, still the greater by far majority of reports are from twenty-five to forty-five bushels, and some even exceed that.—Milton Globe.

Harry Dunford, Harvey—Talk about your potatoes, while I was visiting at my old home in Ontario last winter, I saw some potatoes of the Beauty Hebron variety, and brought eight of them home with me, which I planted in my garden last spring. I dug them last week and got just five bushels of potatoes from the eight planted. Some of them weighed from one and three-quarters to two pounds.—Langdon Republican.

Bottineau County.

Balki Bros. had 42 bushels per acre for over 200 acres, which tested 61¼ pounds per bushel.

John F. Scott turned out 2,100 bushels and a little over from his 60 acres wheat, No. 1 hard.—Pioneer.

W. J. Thompson, two miles south of Willow City, had an average of 38¼ bushels of wheat per acre for 160 acres, 90 bushels of oats and 65 bushels of barley.

Bottineau county is in the Turtle Mountain section, and is reached by the Great Northern railway with stations at Wilton City and Bottineau.

Rolette County.

John Wright has wheat that produced 54 straws to the stool and the heads measured 6¼ inches.—Dunseith Herald.

William Merlin, of Cleveland township, had 70 acres of wheat that required over 250 pounds of twine to bind it. The wheat stood 6 feet high.—Dunseith Herald.

Rev. J. R. Crum left at our sanctum for exhibition a stalk of corn that measured 6 feet 8 inches, and contained 6 large ears of corn, also a snow flake potato that weighed 2 pounds, 7 ounces.—Dunseith Herald.

Joseph Cassavant, Little Shell valley, marketed the first load of new wheat for the season, on the 8th instant. The yield was twenty-seven bushels to the acre and was graded by Agent Duncan No. 1 hard (sixty-one pounds to the bushel) and brought 76 cents. Cassavant will have over 4,000 bushels.—Rolla Star.

Joseph Plante who makes farming a support to his mercantile business and a pastime, had in 51 acres of wheat, which yielded 1,631 bushels or just one bushel short of being 32 bushels to the acre—still Joe only claims 31 bushels. He also threshed out five acres of oats and got 402 bushels—80 bushels to the acre. Rolla Star.

Arthur Lemeux, Little Shell Valley, has threshed the wheat from 28 acres and pays for threshing 644 bushels—23 bushels to the acre. It weighed 62 pounds to the bushel, and grades No. 1 hard. Nineteen dollars returns from the acre and the government gave him the land and has more to give in close proximity.—Rolla Star.

Rollette, one of the Turtle Mountain counties, is reached by the Great Northern railway, with stations at Rolla and St. John. Another branch of the same road runs along near the western boundary of the county, the two affording fine shipping facilities.

Richland County.

This county is the southeastern corner of North Dakota, and contains 1,620 square miles, or 1,036,800 acres, of which one-quarter is in cultivation: wheat greatly in the lead, with 156,031 acres. It contains 121 school districts, 26 churches, 19 postoffices, 4 newspapers and 8 banks. The population is nearly 11,000. Can any new region make a better showing of civilizing conveniences for an equal number of people? The county is well supplied with railways, the Great Northern having their lines reaching the towns of Wahpeton, Dwight, Colfax, Walcott, Devillo, Hankinson, Stiles, Sonora and Ledgerwood.

O. Hestdalen, of Colfax, threshed 68 bushels of wheat from 1¼ acres of land.—Wahpeton Globe.

J. S. Parsons was in from Theed Monday and said his wheat averaged thirty-five bushels per acre.—Wahpeton Times.

George Flitt finished threshing for Ferdinand Baker Monday afternoon—some 18,000 bushels of wheat and 6,000 bushels of oats.—Wahpeton Times.

Ferd Baker has finished threshing. He had over 28,000 bushels of grain and gave George Flitt, the thresher, a check for $2,150 for his services.—Wahpeton Globe.

Capt. T. W. Hunt had only two sections in wheat this season, and raised 17,236 bushels. This summer he purchased an addition to his farm of another section, and will have 500 acres of new breaking to seed another spring.—Wahpeton Gazette.

Dan Wright is a young man from Sargent county here and having last year purchased a farm west of the city, will just about pay for it, with this year's crop. Not only this, but Mr. Wright is a hustling thresher, and now operates two steam outfits.—Wahpeton Gazette.

Fields of wheat around the country that farmers thought would yield 15 and 20 bushels to the acre before threshing have yielded 25 and 30 bushels.—Wahpeton Globe.

K. L. Johnson, of Kongsberg, called this morning and reported his wheat crop to be 3,300 bushels from 110 acres. His oats yielded 70 bushels per acre and barley 50 bushels.—Wahpeton Gazette.

Commissioner Stafne remarked while in the Gazette office Monday that he is part owner of a threshing outfit; that the poorest wheat they have threshed this season yielded 26 bushels per acre.—Wahpeton Gazette.

John Busta threshed 2,147 bushels of wheat, 1,000 of oats, 825 of barley and 100 of millet this week. John thinks farming pays, and when we figure the market value of his crop we agree with him.—Ledgerwood Broadaxe.

It is said that nearly every farmer now carries a check book, and they pay all of their bills by giving checks on the banks. They have too much money to risk anywhere only in a good bank.—Wahpeton Times.

R. N. Ink says one of his fields, from which nine successive crops of wheat have been taken, yielded twenty-two bushels per acre this season. How is that for constant cropping, with no fertilizers returned to the soil?—Wahpeton Globe.

Charles Mall bought a half-section of land last season for $5,000 from the Dwight Farm and Land company. His crop this year was 9,000 bushels of wheat. Reckon his grain at 90 cents per bushel, the crop will amount to $8,100, or enough to more than pay for the land and the cost of raising and marketing the crop.

Clarkson Wisbey brought a few sample ears of corn to this office today that takes the cake for a country long considered a non-producer of corn. The variety is yellow dent, and the ears are a foot long, with eight rows of grains. The stocks stood about eight feet high and Mr. Wisbey expects a large yield.—Ledgerwood Broadaxe.

A Globe reporter had occasion to drive out to Marshall county, in South Dakota, Friday and Saturday, and noticed that the farmers are all busy threshing or stacking and are in the best of spirits. They all say that their crops are the largest this year than it has ever been, averaging from 20 to 35 bushels per acre. In the southern part of Sargent county the crops are about the same as those in Richland.—Wahpeton Globe.

What's the Matter With Pierce County?

E. Gunderson's wheat turned out 30 bushels to the acre, Ole Johnson's 37 and Tom Oksendahl's 35, and other farms, too numerous to mention, turned out equally as well. The remarkable feature which is most vividly impressed on the minds of every one is the fact that thousands of acres of just such land as produced these enormous wheat crops are lying unoccupied and open to settlement within ten miles of Rugby, our county seat, a town destined to be one of the most prominent business points in the state, situated as it is in the center of the Antelope valley, and at the junction of the Great Northern's main line and Bottineau branch, with every prospect of another road in the near future. During the past six weeks there has been added to Rugby's business establishments two hardware stores, one general store, with material on the ground for another, a furniture store and a meat market; the lumber yard has restocked with a full line of builders' material and another lumber yard is expected shortly. Now, with our brilliant prospects, let every citizen of Pierce county take hold and try, to get this valuable vacant land settled; try and induce some of your Eastern friends to locate among us; by so doing you are conferring a favor on some overworked relative or acquaintance.—Rugby (N. D.,) Tribune.

The Turtle Mountains.

The Turtle Mountain country is situated in the northern part of the new state of North Dakota, famous for the production of the best wheat in the world's marts and destined to be still more famous as a stock country. The mountain is a plateau, elevated 500 feet above the surrounding prairie, and is 40 miles long and 25 miles wide. It contains fine forests of oak, ash and poplar, numerous extensive lakes and thousands of acres of the most luxurant meadows. The soil of the mountain is a rich black loam and excels in producing all kinds of garden stuff. The mountain contains coal in abundance, of a superior quality, which is invaluable to a prairie country. For the stockman the mountain is a paradise. Cattle and horses run out all winter, find their own feed, and come out fat and sleek in the spring. Successful farming is more easily accomplished here than in any other portion of the United States. The land never bakes or gets muddy, and is always mellow, and produces from 20 to 40 bushels of wheat to the acre, and proportionate amounts of all other crops. There is an abundance of absolutely pure water, in wells, from 10 to 30 feet below the surface. There are many fine streams running south from the mountains, notably, the Willow river, which leaves the mountain about half way along its southern side, flows down across the prairie for a distance of about twenty-five miles, where it empties into the Mouse river. The thriving town of Dunseith is situated on this river two miles from the foot hills. To the south, east and west of town for many miles is the very best of farming land, with no waste or unproductive ground. It is certainly the largest body of land, without swamp marsh or waste of any kind, in the country, and is divided into small farms that is to say, tracts of 160 acres each. There are no large farms in Rolette county as in many other portions of the state, consequently the settlement will be greater, production more diversified, taxation lighter, education cheaper and more easily obtained, and life more enjoyable and sociable. Rolette county is destined to be "one of the finest.—Dunseith Herald."

Paragraphs from the Papers.

Judge Francis, of Bismarck, says that North Dakota will eventually become the leading corn state in the Union, as it is now the leading wheat state.

Erick Ramsted, near Minot, Ward county, threshed 70 bushels of oats to the acre and 34 of wheat. His wheat was just sown on old stubble and harrowed in.

C. J. Atkins, of Cando, N. D., bought two hundred sheep last year. The wool and lambs this year cleared the original cost. Instances of this kind are reported from many localities.

The North Dakota world's fair commissioners have selected the site for the state building. It will be built with North Dakota timber and have thatched straw roof of native wheat straw.

The Emmons County Record says that three Winchester ladies put up 100 tons of hay this summer, and, owing to the scarcity of laborers, ladies have done much outdoor work this summer.

Come to the granary of the world, the garden of America—the great Red river valley—and see the land that has yielded from thirty-five to forty-five bushels of wheat to the acre. The Northwest can feed the world.—Manvel Graphic.

The Grand Forks Plaindealer calls North Dakota "the bread basket of the world." This is not quite correct. The bread basket—and it is empty—is over in Europe. North Dakota has the delightful task of filling it.—Towner News.

There are hundreds of cases in North Dakota where this year's crop has paid the entire cost of the land, and paid the farmer a nice profit beside, which he can place in the bank. Where else in this wide world can a man do so well?—Casselton Republican.

With wheat turning out from 28 to 35 bushels per acre and prices better than for some time past, it would appear to an individual in close proximity to the upper end of a tree that prosperity is smiling on North Dakota this year for sure.—Hunter Eye.

A four-pound potato arrived at the Minneapolis exposition from North Dakota, with a note which reads: "Come over and help us. We are starving. Wheat only thirty-five bushels to the acre, and oats and corn from fifty to sixty. This is one of our potatoes."

North Dakota is claiming a full share of public attention at this time. The state needs nothing so much as population. A half million intelligent farmers are its greatest need. No section of the United States offers equal inducements to industrious, practical farmers.—Fargo Republican.

The last census bulletin shows that in 1880 the assessed valuation of all property in North Dakota was $8,786,572, and in 1790 it was $78,394,536, or an increase of 792 per cent, while the increase of population was 395 per cent. The assessed value per capita in North Dakota is reported at $428.04.

A farmer near Arthur, in this county, has raised over 2,000 bushels of onions on two acres of ground this season. Many of these onions are as large round as a common tea saucer. Vegetables are getting there with wheat this season, and they never fail in yielding an abundant crop.—Oakes (Dickey County) Republican.

Peter Ensted threshed 2,691 bushels of wheat from 80 acres. Fred Ferris was in town last Sunday and informed us that his wheat was going 35 bushels to the acre. One 56-acre field of T. R. Brekken, in Osago township, yielded 762 bushels of wheat, a little over 29¼ bushels to the acre.—Lakota (Nelson county) Observer.

There are said to be only two counties in North Dakota where there was not a big yield of wheat this season, and some of the papers note the fact that, as if to compensate for the shortage of the past few years, a large portion of the wheat has an extra double row of kernels filled out to the top. That will help to swell the average.—Grand Forks Herald.

There is nothing small about potatoes this year. They are bouncing big and prolific, like other things, and there does not seem to be room in the ground for them all. We have been shown vines with small potatoes growing out in clusters from them above the ground like ground cherries, and seemingly large enough for food.—Gilby Gazette.

The census office has issued a bulletin showing the acreage of flax and the number of bushels produced in 1890 in ten states. South Dakota has the largest acreage, but Minnesota produced the largest amount of seed. It is credited with 303,707 acres and 2,721,881 bushels of seed. The total product of the ten Northwestern states is about 10,000,000 bushels.

G. H. Stevens returned from the west last Monday morning, bringing with him over 7,000 head of sheep, which are now located on E. H. Thursby's ranch. This large number, together with other additions of sheep to be placed here this fall, will make McHenry one of the most important sheep raising and wool growing counties in North Dakota.—Towner News.

The acreage of wheat in North Dakota, as compiled from the assessor's returns, is given by Commissioner Hegelson as 2,865,502, an increase over last year of 240,188 acres, or 9¼ per cent. He places the total crop at 48,000,000 bushels. The acreage of other crops is as follows: Corn, 35,698; oats, 420,124; barley, 143,368; flax, 100,618; rye, 11,808; potatoes, 25,566.

Henry Stammen said to the editor of the Minot (N. D.) Journal: "I pulled up a bunch of barley from my field the other day which I am going to bring in to you. The whole bunch came from one grain and contains one hundred and twenty straws headed out. It is the largest stool of barley I ever saw from one grain, and I don't think it can be beat anywhere."

HEAVY BLACK LINES REPRESENT THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Thomas Nugent brought to our office a bushel of barley weighing 56 pounds and a bushel of white oats weighing 38 pounds. Martin Rood says his oats are the best he has ever seen.—Manvel Graphic.

An instance of the remarkable fertility of the Turtle mountains is given by Knut Torgeson, who tells us of fine, ripe September strawberries—a second crop growing wild.—Bottineau (N. D.) Free Lance.

Four ladies—Mmes. S. B. Warner, L. Leadbetter, B. F. Wise, B. Green—went plumming on Monday afternoon and gathered eight bushels of the golden fruit. The fingers must have moved in a lively fashion.—Park River Witness.

As an instance of how the threshing machines turn out work, Sheriff McLaren, of Cass county, N. D., says a machine on his farm cleared up the grain from 2¼ acres in 30 minutes, the yield being 128¼ bushels, or 57 bushels to the acre.

The Mayville (N. D.) Tribune says 200 acres on the Horton farm yielded 6,150 bushels, or over 30 bushels to the acre. It is thought the remaining 1,200 acres will do as well. M. Anderson, a Goose river farmer, had 35 bushels per acre for the first 100 acres of his 500-acre patch.

All authorities on Dakota climatology agree that this is only the beginning of a series of favorable years for wheat raising. The present crop gets the farmers out of debt, as a rule, with a good balance for renewing machinery and buying stock. Another big crop will dot the prairies with new houses and barns, and make the state wonderfully prosperous.—Northwest Magazine.

It looks as though the farmers of North Dakota would walk on velvet and wear diamonds next winter and that banks of deposit would have to be established on every crossroad. The man who holds a mortgage on a North Dakota farm after the present crops are harvested will be hunted by the mortgagor with a shotgun in one hand and the cash in the other and compelled to hand over the mortgage for the money.—Steele Ozone.

A gentleman from the East, after driving over a number of wheat fields during the harvest, and being both charmed and astonished at the vast yield of grain, said: "That's enough. Let's go back. My reputation won't be worth a cent when I get home. If I tell people in Pennsylvania that I have seen hundreds of acres of wheat in one body that would yield 30 bushels to the acre they'll say I lie. If I stick to it they'll think I'm crazy. But it's the cold, hard fact, just the same.—Grand Forks News.

There is a marked difference in values between North and South. North Dakota sold its school lands at an average of over $20 per acre. Texas last week auctioned its school lands at $3 to $4 per acre on forty years' time.—Park River (N. D.) Witness.

When we see by the crop reports that a region in which there were but two or three thousand white settlers twenty years ago, and which has been known for a short time as the State of North Dakota, has just harvested a wheat crop of over 50,000,000 bushels, we need no further evidence in support of the oft-repeated statement that this is a growing country.—New York Sun.

Henry Larson says to the Fargo (N. D.) Argus: I am well satisfied with the crop on my farm, near Gardner, Cass county. I had in all 450 acres seeded, 390 with wheat and 60 with oats. Most of the wheat is in stacks, and what has been threshed went 23½ bushels to the acre. On the 60 acres with oats I got 3,000 bushels. Last year I raised 20 bushels of wheat an acre and it all graded No. 1 hard.

Merchant Griffin says it pays a tenant farmer to rent land at $1 per acre in North Dakota. He rented 78 acres of land to William Forquer at Carrington this year at $1 per acre, and yesterday he received a letter from Forquer saying he had threshed over 2,000 bushels of No. 1 hard wheat from 78 acres, or over 25 bushels per acre. The owner of the land will get $78 and the tenant will receive about $1,500.—Jamestown Alert.

The theme of conversation throughout North Dakota is much like a jug with the handle on one side—it is grain for breakfast, threshing grain for dinner and yields of grain for supper, and during the night dreaming where to store the surplus for want of room in the granary. In some cases, for want of room, grain has been piled up in the field, covered by the canopy of the heavens.—Ellendale Leader.

George W. Pease, on the Wild Rice, seems to be enjoying the smiles of Providence along with his brother farmers. In three days D. M. Wright threshed for him 6,000 bushels of wheat, which grew on 226 acres. At 80 cents a bushel, which is 10 cents lower than the price some sold for in that neighborhood, his wheat would sell for $4,800, not a bad sum for an old soldier to earn who was seriously maimed in the war, and has been assisted only a part of the time by his two boys.—Casselton (Cass Co.) Republican.

D. Howrey threshed from one field of 60 acres 1,600 bushels or 26⅔ bushels per acre. The next field of 35 acres yielded something over 800 bushels, or over 23 bushels an acre. About half of the first field graded No. 1 hard and the rest No. 1 northern. The machine is now at Peter Anderson's and judging from the threshing already done he will have about twenty-nine bushels per acre.—Leeds (Benson Co.) News.

Visitors to North Dakota this year will find in addition to an unparalleled yield of wheat, 20 to 40 bushels to the acre, that nature has turned all the other cereals into the lap of industry with an equally lavish hand, and there is no end to cabbages, onions, turnips, carrots, rutabagas, beets, etc., etc., of remarkable size and of the sweetest flavors. Come while the opportunity offers to get free homes, or farm lands at a very reasonable figure in the more settled localities—come to balmy, bustling Benson county where industry is rewarded.—Siftings.

The Door Is Open.

The door is just now open to the 10,000 young men who are wondering what they shall do to make themselves useful to themselves and their fellows during this brief life of ours. North Dakota has millions of unimproved acres waiting the magic touch of labor to blossom into honestly earned competency for young men of energy and resource. Will the young fellows of Yankee blood leave these prizes to those of foreign birth and alien extraction? Then they need not charge the fault of future disaster to the fates. There is room for tens of thousands of those of Puritan blood and Puritan energy right here in North Dakota, and those who come now can take the prizes by reaching out for them.

FRANK J. MEAD.

Where the Next Boom?

Where will the boom strike next? many people ask. Where is the next new region to be developed by railways, to receive a great rush of population, to build towns in a month and to make fortunes in real estate speculations? The answer is, nowhere.

There is no new country left except Alaska, and that is a sodden forest, enveloped in almost perpetual night for half the year and incapable of agricultural settlement.

Western progress in the future will consist of steady improvement of districts already well known and thinly occupied and already accessible by rail. New roads will be built, new towns will be founded, new mines will be discovered and new industries established, and there will be speculative opportunities for years to come, but the era of the creation of new states in the wilderness is definitely closed.

The next marked advance in population will be made in the Dakotas and Manitoba, for the reason that on the great plain that extends from the Manitoba lakes to the Missouri in South Dakota there still remains hundreds of thousands of fertile acres not yet occupied by settlers. Now that the climate of this great prairie country, with its alternating dry and wet periods, is well understood, and safe and profitable methods of husbandry can be practiced, the region will surely attract a great tide of immigration. The towns are established and the railways built and the new settlers will go upon the soil with all the comforts of civilization right at hand.

The higher price of cereals and cattle now prevailing and the recent success in wool growing in both Dakotas give these states now attraction for home seekers. The foreign immigrants are the first to take advantage of their cheap lands, but in another year or two they will receive a strong movement of American farmers.

The population of the United States is increasing so fast that it cannot be many years before the last reserve of good prairie land will be occupied.—Northwest Magazine.

The Question of Rent.

Charles Leonard, of Niagara, reports the crops out there will average thirty bushes to the acre or better. Speaking of the value of Dakota farms and how their value is not appreciated, he said:

"My uncle had a quarter out north of Larimore. The soil was a little light and he was offered a trade of a house and lot in Lockport, N. Y., for it. The house was renting right along for $7 per month and was good property. He was about to trade, but before the papers were made out he was persuaded to hold on to the farm another year. This year his share of the crop rent was $450. This was more than $9 a week he got for the rent of his farm, as against $7 per month which the house rented for in Lockport—more than five times as much rent. So you see the Dakota farm is better property to rent than city property in Lockport, as he can rent the farm one year in five and do better than to own that city property and have a paying tenant all the time."—Grand Forks Plaindealer.

Good Opinion.

A dispatch from Moorhead says ex-Gov. McGill and ex-Congressman Comstock are of the opinion that the next great boom would be in Minnesota and North Dakota. They thought farming would push to the front as the safest money-making business that could be engaged in, and that the higher prices would be lasting.

Mr. Comstock estimates the wheat crop of the Red river valley this year at 50,000,000 bushels and its cash value at $40,000,000. What a stride is there! Ten or twelve years ago 5,000,000 bushels was looked upon as remarkable. Comstock & White have traveled extensively all over the West this year. It has been their business to watch real estate transactions. While they have great confidence in the development of Montana and Washington and value the stability of their resources, they say there is no part of those states or any states that can equal the Red river valley and the Park region of Minnesota in productiveness.

Daily Growing Rich.

There are but few short cuts to wealth. Occasionally we hear of an instance where some individual has suddenly acquired great riches, but these instances are exceedingly rare. Not a large number of people can ever become wealthy by accident, nor can any class of people, as a class, ever become rich except by the regular and continued operation of great causes.

The Plaindealer believes that the time is not far distant when the farmers, as a class, will be the richest people on earth. And there are not lacking those who predict that the Red river valley will be the wealthiest section of country on the globe.

But beliefs and predictions are but an empty fool's paradise when unsupported by sound reasons.

It is a fact easily grasped by all minds that the earth upon which we live will grow no bigger. It is also a plain fact that the population of the globe keeps right on increasing. Accurate statistics show that the demand for food products, especially cereals, is increasing much more rapidly than the cultivated area. The inevitable result of this growing disproportion must be to increase the price of agricultural commodities and the profit to the producer. The situation will admit of no other conclusion. The farmer will take his place—and speedily—at the head of the industrial procession and will become the most prosperous producer in the land.

While this is true of the farmer at large, it is particularly true of the farmer of the Red river valley. Here is the bread basket of the world. Here is the native home of hard wheat. No other combination of soil and climate on this whirling ball of mud can produce the little hard kernels that make the fine white bread which is the staple article of food to the wealthy people of earth. And the area of the earth's surface which produces this staple cannot be expanded without first changing the laws of Nature herself. The number of bread acres cannot be increased. The number of mouths are daily increasing. They will go on increasing indefinitely.

And this cereal, so essential to man, is produced with ease and in abundance in the Red river valley. The expenditure of money is reduced to the minimum. The fertile soil and the magnificent climate render agriculture easy and successful. Its pursuit is attended by none of the obstacles which are encountered in so many other localities, and its rewards are practically unfailing. The cheapness of the land makes the investment small, while a convenient and accessible market increases the profits of farming.

The ultimate prosperity and wealth of the farmers of the Red river valley is as certain as the change of seasons. A lack of thrift could hardly prevent the growth of wealth in a region so singularly favored by nature. The increasing prevalence of economy and scientific agriculture will render rich returns certain. All of the conditions are shaping up to insure the opulence of the farmer in this fortunate section, and it is as impossible to consider the fortune of Grand Forks city apart from the happy change in the agricultural situation as to divorce cause and effect.—Grand Forks Plaindealer.

Here Are Some Specimen Facts—Comment Is Unnecessary and Conclusions Will Present Themselves.

Facts and Figures.

The threshers report from 20 to 25 bushels to the acre.—Alexandria (Douglas Co.) Post.

The results thus far in Wilkin county are wheat 20 bushels per acre and oats from 40 to 60 bushels of very fine quality.—Gazette.

Barley is turning out about 45 bushels to the acre, white oats run as high as 70 bushels per acre.—Moorhead (Clay Co.) News.

A field of 10 acres near Robbindale, Minn., cropped to wheat for 24 years, yielded an average of 27¼ bushels this season.

The wheat on Henry Murphy's farm next to James Neal's yielded 31 bushels to the acre. Such is life in Swift county this year.—Benson Monitor.

The wheat average here so far has been 32 bushels of No. 1 hard per acre, and oats as high as 80 bushels per acre. —St. Hilaire (Polk Co.) Spectator.

The potato starch factory at Anoka is one of the largest of the kind in the country, and from this year's crop will make more starch than ever before.

From all reports the present crops will average as follows: Wheat, 25 to 30 bushels per acre; oats, 30 to 60 bushels per acre.—Fosston (Polk Co.) Thirteen Towns.

Ed Carey reports a yield of 30¼ bushels to the acre, by weight, on a 38-acre field. The wheat sold for $1,132.50, a little less than $30 per acre.—Hallock (Kittson Co.) Enterprise.

A. J. Voke, of Hendrum, says that his wheat went 22 bushels to the acre, and so far none had been threshed in his vicinity that had went less.—Ada (Norman Co.) Index.

Some farms are reported at 35 bushels, machine measure. In many cases the wheat bins are too small, so far does the yield surpass expectations.—Litchfield (Meeker Co.) Independent.

The largest cabbage we have seen this season was brought to town by Dr. G. W. Maughan, which weighed, with all the outside leaves and roots taken off, 16¼ pounds.—Morris (Stevens Co.) Tribune.

H. F. Woodard—There is a farmer in Girard who bought a piece for $1,300 last fall. The crop raised on it this year will pay for the farm and leave him $1,000 in cash.—Fergus Falls (Otter Tail Co.) Journal.

The rush of potatoes at the starch factory is greatly on the increase and it run not only night and day, but Sundays. Potatoes are turning out better than anticipated.—Clear Lake (Sherburne Co.) Times.

The wheat crop is being threshed, and the lowest reported, with one exception, was 18¼ bushels to the acre, while the highest was 26 bushels, and all of the wheat grades No. 1.—Atwater (Kandiyohi Co.) Gazette.

Harry Reid is getting an average of 26 bushels of wheat per acre on his farm so far as threshing has progressed. He has several thousand acres. On the Hill farm some acres have gone as high as 32 bushels.—St. Vincent (Kittson Co.) New Era.

We have not heard of an acre going less than 15 bushels, and have heard of hundreds going 25 and 30. This year the valley and all Northern Minnesota and Dakota have the largest crop in their history.—Barnesville (Clay Co.) Review.

Threshers are running all over the county now and grain in the shock is rapidly disappearing. The yields as far as reported run from 17 to 30 bushels per acre. Around Ada the average points is about eighteen bushels.—Ada (Norman Co.) Index.

P. H. Lamb—Our wheat crop will average about 22¼ bushels per acre. We are very well satisfied with it.—Moorhead (Clay Co.) News.

William Stanley reports his wheat as having averaged thirty-eight bushels to the acre and that from one and a half acres of oats he got 170 bushels.—Delana (Wright Co.) Eagle.

Will Bradley, who lives a few miles south of Warren, threshed wheat from eight acres, and it averaged thirty-seven bushels per acre and graded No. 1 northern.—Warren (Marshall County) Sheaf.

There are thousands of acres of government and railroad and state lands in the Red river valley, the former waiting free occupancy under the homestead law, the latter for sale at reasonable prices.

The growing of wheat has been so profitable in the Red river valley, owing to the large yield and high grade, that the one crop has overshadowed all others. Diversified farming, however, is making progress, as shown by the increase of fine stock and the multiplying of dairy products.

Fred Dale has 4,000 bushels of wheat from 200 acres; F. Dittes, Sr., has about 7,000; M. W. Dale. 7,500, and S. Piechowski nearly 9,000. Wheat yields still continue as good as at first reported, and the average for the county will be close to 20 bushels per acre.—Brown Valley (Traverse Co.) Footprints.

Johnston Wagner—I have finished threshing. My crop is a good one and the wheat averages 22¼ bushels per acre on an average of about 330 acres. One piece of 160 acres gave an average of 24¼ bushels. There is no question at all of the bountifulness of our grain crop this season.—Moorhead (Clay Co.) News.

The Skree farm, on the Buffalo in Moland township, scores 22 bushels all round of wheat, 47 barley and 56 oats, machine measure—a very pretty season's record. Oats overrun heavily in weight. Henry Schroeder, near Sabin, gets 19¼ bushels average of wheat. He is now filling an order of 1,000 bushels early Ohio potatoes at 25c. Sold oats at 30c Fargo.—Glyndon (Clay Co.) News.

J. S. Niles, a farmer residing four miles north of Hector, Renville county, threshed his oats and was considerably surprised at the result. He had eight acres and threshed an average of 99¼ bushels to the acre, a total of 796 bushels by measure. The oats weighed 43 pounds to the bushel, making a total yield by weight off the eight acres sown, 868 bushels, or 108 bushels to the acre.

One of the wealthiest loads of farm produce ever hauled through our streets was brought in by George Struble last Tuesday afternoon. The load was comparatively small, but the gold was sticking out at the top of every sack. He had on a trifle over seventy bushels of Alsace clover, which sold for $7 per bushel or about $500 for the load.—Plainview News, Sept. 10.

You must talk about wheat now or address your words to empty space. Nothing else goes. To be popular and have every ear hang on your words you must swear that every bushel of wheat in the country is good enough to grade No. 1 hard. Everything heard from so far has gone over twenty to the acre. The unusual report is from 25 to 30. The man who always gets more than his neighbor still lives.—Stephen (Marshall Co.) Leader.

The writer returned Tuesday from a trip across the state. The towns and farming localities through which he passed never presented a more prosperous appearance than is noticeable just at the present season. The wheat crop has yielded all the way from 20 to 40 bushels per acre, and the prices have been commensurate with the yield. The berry is plump and hard and often tips the scale at 61 pounds to the bushel.—Mora (Kanabec Co.) Times.

Encouraging reports continue to come from the threshers. W. N. Box finished threshing yesterday, and says that his wheat went over thirty bushels to the acre. The wheat on T. E. Moulton's farm averaged thirty-five bushels to the acre.—Warren (Marshall Co.) Sheaf.

S. C. Stilwill—I have finished threshing wheat and barley. I got 3,945 bushels of wheat off 200 acres, an average of 19¾ bushels per acre. I had a piece of 38 acres of blue stem wheat that yielded 30 bushels per acre. Barley yielded 40 bushels on the average.—Moorhead (Clay Co.) News.

The largest and finest body of pine timber in the United States lies to the east of the Red river valley, 200 miles to Lake Superior, interspersed with veins of silver, copper and iron, quarries of building stone and other resources destined to give employment to an army of workmen and consumers of farm products.

On Saturday last the Great Northern pulled more loaded cars out of Fergus Falls east bound than ever before in its existence. No less than 462 cars went out during the day, of which 400 were loaded with wheat and 62 with stock. The road seemed to move the business with little or no friction.—Fergus Falls (Otter Tail Co.) Journal, Sept. 21.

One striking thing about the Northwest is the long days of summer. The country is so big that it takes the sun all night to go down. One can read the newspapers in the Red river valley till near 10 o'clock at night by daylight. Perhaps here is one of the secrets of the rapid maturity of the grain, root and vegetable crops. This country has over 200 hours more light during May, June and July than you have at Indianapolis, and light is the great factor in growth. —Indiana Farmer.

As one rides through this grand valley and sees the large area that has never yet been made to contribute to the wants of man, land the most fertile, it seems a pity that there should be such a waste. There is room in this county for a thousand more farmers. Let us inform those desiring homes in the West of the opportunities here presented, and soon our products will be doubled, we shall have more neighbors, larger schools, more life.—East Grand Forks (Polk Co.) News.

G. W. Tomb threshed 100 acres that went 28 bushels to the acre. It was all frozen down in the spring and he did not think at that time it would ever be worth cutting. Mr. Sinclair, the old man, had 2,700 of wheat from 100 acres. Dave Young got 29¼ to the acre right through. Henry Hooper has threshed 40 acres, getting 29¼ bushels to the acre. Frank Russell had 40 acres of barley that paid over $25 to the acre. It yielded about 60 bushels to the acre.—Stephen (Marshall Co.) Leader.

If we can't get rich ourself we enjoy other people's prosperity. We noticed in last week's issue a sale Mr. Camp made of a fine pair of 3-year-old mares for $325. This notice brought him another customer who has purchased another of his young teams for $350. By the way, this makes thirteen horses and colts Mr. Camp has sold this season for the snug sum of $1,965. Two were very young and sold for $100 each. This brings the average of the others to $160 each.—Morris (Stevens Co.) Tribune.

Yesterday's shipments of wheat over this division of the Great Northern exceeded any previous record. Nearly 1,000 cars were handled in the yards here. There was shipped from St. Cloud 450 loads of wheat for West Superior and Duluth during the day. Eleven through trains were sent out. The 450 cars if coupled together would cover a distance of 15,570 feet or three miles long. The receipts of the day were nearly as much. From Barnesville about 250 cars were brought here and 200 were received from the Willmar line.—St. Cloud (Stearns Co.) Times, Sept. 17.

Minnesota has 1,300,017 population. Ten years ago the population was 780,778. In 1870 it was 439,706. The gain of the past decade is very considerably greater than was the total population of 1870. Minnesota does not appear at all in the federal enumerations until 1850, when it was credited with 6,077 people. In 1860 it had 172,023. It is hard to realize that there are eight times as many people in the state as there were in the war times. The average rate of increase for the whole country from 1870 to 1880 was 30 per cent, while Minnesota's gain was 77¼ per cent. From 1880 to 1890 the gain of Minnesota has been some 64 per cent—nearly three times the rate of the country at large.

It was but a short time ago that Minnesota was simply an agricultural state. Our fame rested on hard wheat and flour, supplemented later with creamery products and live stock. Then we became famed as the lake resort state. Next it is discovered that we can make lumber, and they make us out the first white pine state in the Union. Later, iron ore is found in immense quantities of superfine quality, and statisticians place us among the first iron ore states of the world. In the meantime, stone quarries blossom out all over the state, and factories loom up in scores of industries. Recently sugar and linen production—the great industries of Cuba and Ireland—have been receiving attention.—Minneapolis Tribune.

"Rock county can beat the world on raising flax," said T. E. Andrews, of Minneapolis, at the Herald office Tuesday. "Some time ago," he continued, "Col. McCrory, of our town, selected a fine sample of flax raised in one of the northern counties of Minnesota and sent it to the linen mills of England for inspection. The flax sent by Mr. McCrory measured thirty-two inches in length, and the Englishmen got the laugh on the colonel by sending to him some English flax which measured thirty-six inches in length." Ever since that time Mr. McCrory has been searching for flax that would beat the Englishman's, and Mr. Andrews has come to his rescue with a whole field in this county which measures 41¼ inches in length. A large bundle of the grain was secured and taken to Minneapolis by Mr. Andrews, which will be shipped to England. We have no doubt that even this field could be beaten if a careful search were made, but as Rock county flax is still in the lead we can rest contented until the Englishman is heard from again.—Luverne Herald.

We say the farmers of Wright county have the finest land and the best farming country in the world. We hear no talk about emigrating only from those who do not love work any too well, and hundreds of those brave pioneers who settled in the big timber with little or no capital are today not only in comfortable circumstances, but have money out at interest. Generally speaking, if a man mortgages his farm nowadays it is but to acquire more land, and not because he is so poor that he cannot pay accrued debts without borrowing money. The day is not far distant when broad acres in Wright county will be worth big money, and we would advise those in search of a location to see what the farmers of this section are doing before locating elsewhere.—Delano Eagle.

Stevens County Is in It.

We will be pardoned for again speaking for Stevens county, for we have a pardonable pride in the county just at this time, and we can't help crowing a little about it.

The wealth of this county must continue to be in the farms and stock; we have not sufficient water power to establish any large amount of manufacturing, and we need not hope to soon be able to compete with the Twin Cities in the use of steam. It is therefore the business of the county to devote its whole attention to agriculture and stock. For this we have everything in our favor: good land, good water, good grass and a fine assortment of stock; healthy climate and all the facilities for good markets. We give below the yield of a few of our farms that have just come under our notice, not selected as the best:

James Brennan, 35 acres, threshed 34 bushels No. 1.

Delahunt Bros., 200 acres, average 28 bushels No. 1; 50 acres oats, average 60 bushels; 15 acres barley, average 50 bushels.

H. K. Helgeson, 35 acres fife wheat, 3 bushels No. 1 hard.

M. Finnegan, 160 acres wheat, average 28 bushels No. 1.

C. Cross, 60 acres wheat, average 40 bushels No. 1.

Pierce & Judson, 350 acres wheat, average 27 bushels No. 1.

Thomas O'Reilly, 10 acres wheat, average 34 bushels No. 1.

Mr. Van Kleet, 60 acres wheat, average 25 bushels No. 1.

John Bucklin, 100 acres wheat, average 24 bushels No. 1.

E. W. Randall, 60 acres wheat, average 21 bushels No. 1.

W. K. Walker, 18 acres corn, 91 bushels per acre.

J. D. Keyser, 10 acres corn, 90 bushels per acre.

Milo Camp, 200 acres wheat, average 27 bushels No. 1; 48 acres oats, average 60 bushels.

These yields would be a fair estimate for the entire county.

Twenty years ago the first settlers began to come here and nearly every one was as poor as he well could be. While the poor we have always with us, the great bulk of the farmers are well off. They say they are working for a bare living, but offer to buy one of them out root and branch and you will find it will take quite an amount of money to do it. The truth is, the farmers are richer than they think they are; their farms are improving, their stock is increasing and they are adding to their buildings continually. The farmers of Stevens county need no pity.—Morris (Minn.) Sun.

The Red River Valley of Minnesota.

The most northerly county is Kittson, with a population of about 6,000. It is largely prairie, with timber belts along the streams. It contains 1,385,000 acres, less than half of it occupied. The county seat is Hallock, 370 miles from St. Paul and Minneapolis, with which it has direct connection via the Great Northern railway. The other railway market towns are St. Vincent, Humboldt, Northcote, Kennedy and Donaldson.

The second county is Marshall, with a population of nearly 10,000, and an area of over 1,000,000 acres. It is also prairie, with timber along the streams. Warren, the county seat, is on the Great Northern railway, 330 miles from St. Paul, the other railway market towns being Argyle and Stephen.

The third county from the north is Polk, with over 30,000 population. The county seat is Crookston, 299 miles from St. Paul. It is the best settled county in the valley, but has room for thousands more people. The Red Lake river, heavily timbered, runs through from east to west, and lumbering is quite an industry. The Great Northern railway has its main line and several branches in the county, with stations at Crookston, Fosston, St. Hilaire, Wiley, Ives, Sherley, Angus, Euclid, McIntosh, Erskine, Mentor, Dugdale, Benoit, Burwell, Carman, Kittson, Russia, Beltrami, Maple Bay, Fisher, Mallory and East Grand Forks.

The fourth county is Norman with a population of nearly 11,000. The county seat, Ada, is 265 miles from St. Paul. The other towns on the Great Northern railway are Halsted, Hendrum, Perley, Sundahl and Rolette. The surface of the county is well divided between prairie and timber.

Clay is the fifth county. It contains about 12,000 population. Moorhead is the county seat, 241 miles from St. Paul. The other towns on the Great Northern railway are Barnesville, Downer, Sabin, Glyndon, Averill, Felton, Borus, Comstock, Elmer, Finkle, Kragnes and Georgetown. Like the others, it is a fine agricultural county, with room for more people.

The sixth county, at the upper end of the Red river, is Wilkin. It is largely prairie, and the smallest and least populous, there being about 5,000 inhabitants in the county. Breckenridge, the county seat, is 217 miles from St. Paul, on the Great Northern railway. The other railway towns are Doran, Campbell and Childs.

Northwestern Prosperity.

It has been a pleasure for the Pioneer Press to state and restate in its columns the indications of the approach of a prosperous era, for the promises rest upon what seems an assured basis of fact. The merchant read the promises in the orders received, and from them it is evident that the farmers are in the midst of a bounteous period, caused by large and excellent crops and high prices. They will sell the grain, pay their debts, and with the surplus add to their farms, erect new houses or barns, newly equip the farm with machinery, buy necessaries and indulge in luxuries. This means a corresponding degree of prosperity in other lines, for mechanics must work to supply such a demand, and the jobbing houses will be kept busy filling the orders.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

All Things Considered.

There is scarcely a state in the Union, all things considered, that offers such splendid opportunities to the industrious and intelligent home-seeker as Minnesota. The sun shines upon no better soil in all his rounds Only about one-ninth of the whole area of the state is under plow. There are more than 20,000,000 acres of as good soil as ever responded to the plow and the harrow yet undespoiled of any part of the richness that ages have stored up in it. The distribution of wood, water and upland is unsurpassed. There is an immense lumber region of the best pine, with innumerable streams to float the logs to the mills. There is a very large number of magnificent water powers. There are stone quarries without end, containing almost every variety of stone, while our mineral resources are absolutely inexhaustible. A very large portion of these natural advantages are not utilized,

A Debt-Paying Year.

This is a debt-paying year. The Northwest has a habit of disappointing people who do not expect much of it. For the last two or three seasons it has been paraded in the East as a drouth-stricken region, worthless for agricultural purposes, and yet it has, with the exception of a comparatively small percentage of its acreage, gone right on raising big crops of wheat, and this season almost every county is in line with the largest wheat crop ever grown. Not having anything else to say, the "calamity" shriekers mourn because the proceeds of the crop go to pay debts. Now, there is no better use for money than to pay debts, and the fact that the proceeds of one or two crops will pay off all the debts a farmer is likely to incur is one of the best recommendations of this new country. After the crop is sold the farmers of the Northwest will owe less money than those of any other state in the Union.—Northwestern Agriculturist.

Advantages of Minnesota.

Let me mention some of the advantages offered by the State of Minnesota to those who are willing to make their homes with us and engage in manufacturing enterprises. These may be summed up as follows:

1. A great variety of raw materials, so distributed that they can be obtained at a moderate cost at many points.
2. Numerous water powers in almost every part of the state; cheap wood from the ever-growing forests, or cheap coal from the coal fields of Iowa or Illinois.
3. A climate unsurpassed for health, and in every way favorable for industrial pursuits at all seasons of the year.
4. Convenience to markets, East, West, North or South, by rail and by river.
5. A good supply of labor, which can be had for fair and moderate wages.
6. A large surplus of the very best of food for man and beast.
7. Homes, the fee-simple of which can be bought by the savings of ordinary industry.

The immense army of people could not all engage in manufacturing, but many of them could find homes on unimproved lands and become producers instead of remaining consumers, assured of steady employment and a ready sale for all the surplus they can produce. Stock raising has always been very profitable, and will continue to be until the West becomes so densely settled that stock cannot roam at large. —Gen. R. W. Johnson, of St. Paul, in New York Christian Weekly.

Minnesota's Future.

The rush of settlers through the Northwestern states to the far Western territory would lead a careless thinker into a belief that the nearer states are thoroughly settled. Such, however, would be an egregious mistake. Compared with a period of twenty years ago, the State of Minnesota, for instance, is well settled; but compared with the Atlantic states, or, still more striking, compared with Holland or Belgium, countries teeming with people, the possibilities of the North Star state have not yet been encroached upon. Minnesota contains about 53,000,000 acres of land, and of this 3,000,000, a trifling per cent, is water, most advantageously distributed in lakes and rivers. Probably not over one-fifth of the dry land is in use, leaving a balance of millions of acres, even throwing out some of them as useless, ready for use and occupancy. The use of land as demanded by such conditions as exist in Europe is unknown in this country, but as time brings increasing millions of people it will bring enforced economy of the source of all sustenance.

It is generally believed that Minnesota is an agricultural state entirely. On the contrary, the export of minerals is equal in value to the export of wheat, and the value of manufactured articles exceeds both combined. There are forests without limit, water powers without number, quarries of every kind. Climatic conditions could not be improved and waterways reach to the Atlantic and the gulf. What more could be asked by reasonable settlers? The result of such conditions is as certain as fate, for they weave the destiny of the state. The immigrant of the present day may hasten to other fields, attracted by the enthusiasm of a boom, but the population of a state like this will go on increasing in spite of every form of competition.—Northwestern Agriculturist.

AROUND THE GLOBE.

A Record of the Week's Happenings That are Now Part of the World's History.

The More Important Foreign and Domestic Events Arranged for Rapid Reading.

WASHINGTON.

INDIAN COMMISSIONER MORGAN issues important instructions regarding the education of Indian children.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY CROUSSE has appointed Leopold Markbreit, of Cincinnati, a member of the Pueblo site commission in place of Charles McCoy, declined.

THE governor of New Mexico has sent his annual report to Washington. He recommends the admission of the territory as a state, and deals at length with public schools, irrigation, climate, rainfall, stock raising and agriculture.

THE Brazilian government has made two new consular districts in the United States, one at San Francisco, with jurisdiction over the state of California, and the other at New Orleans, with jurisdiction over the state of Louisiana. Dr. Epamdondos Leite Chermont is appointed consul at San Francisco, and Dr. Jose Manoel Cardosa de Olvria, consul at New Orleans.

BRIG. GEN. A. V. KANTZ, commanding the department of the Columbia, in his annual report to the war department, speaks of the repeated troubles between Indians and white settlers in the Kootenai river country. The Indians in that section are unprovided with an agent, and seem to have no one to look to for aid or counsel. Gen. Kautz says that in the near future a great increase in the number of settlers will precede the building of the Great Northern railroad and trouble will follow unless some provision is made in anticipation.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

CANOVAS DEL CASTILLO, the Spanish statesman, is so far improved in health as to be able to leave his bed.

THE condition of Private Secretary Halforn does not show the improvement hoped for by his friends, and it is causing them some anxiety.

HERMAN MACKWORTH, an attorney of Cincinnati, has undertaken to contest the will of the late John Manson, of San Francisco, whereby his millions of wealth went into the hands of J. T. Hill who lives near San Jose, Cal. The contestants, Mrs. Lida Patterson, Misses Sarah and Agnes Miller and Edward Schmede, all claim to be legitimate heirs of Manson.

Two of England's most distinguished women have arrived in New York. They are Lady Henry Somerset president, of the British Woman's Temperance association, and Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, authoress of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." These ladies are the advance guard of the great army of White Ribboners that will assemble in Boston on November 10 to 18 for the world's and national W. C. T. U. conventions.

CASUALTIES.

FIRE at Tonawanda, N. Y., destroyed the American hotel and several stores. Loss, $150,000; insurance, one-half.

HEAVY northeast tides have carried away the front brick wall of Postmaster General Wannamaker's Cape May Point cottage yard, and with it three feet of beach front.

A YOUNG lady, Mary McLaughlin, bound for Bay City, Mich., left the sleeper of a train near Batavia N. Y., and was found fatally injured near the track. She is supposed to have been asleep when she walked off the train.

THE train on board of which were Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Stanley and Mrs. Tennant, mother of Mrs. Stanley, has been completely wrecked at Carovigno, Italy. The Stanley party was on its way to Australia, where the explorer is to lecture. They had a narrow escape from death.

SINS AND SINNERS.

TRAMPS seriously stab two men at Barnesville, Minn.

THE grand jury gets after St. Paul saloonkeepers running wine rooms.

AT Norfolk, Va., a negro, named George Dyer, 23 years old, was lynched for the murder of Mrs. Fannie Fadden.

AT Scranton, Pa., Stephen D. Ayala shot and instantly killed his wife recently. Cause, jealousy.

THE dead body of a pretty young girl about 10 years old was washed up on the beach at Bedloe's Island, recently. The throat was cut from ear to ear.

IN a drunken row at Louisville a workhouse guard named Denis Fitzpatrick was killed either by Letter Carrier John McGrath or Dan McAuliffe. Both were arrested.

AT Helena, Ga., Sam Wright, colored, was hanged by a mob recently for assaulting Miss Ada Beckwith. He denied his guilt, but Miss Beckwith positively identified him.

MAJ. CHARLES B. THROCKMERTON, U. S. A., commandant at Fort Schuyler, N. Y., has been placed under arrest and relieved of his command pending and investigation of charges of issuing worthless checks and duplicating his pay vouchers.

FOREIGN NUGGETS.

ONE more plot to kill the czar is discovered.

THE steamers Umbria and Augusta Victoria are struck by a cyclone on the Atlantic, and many passengers are badly hurt.

MONTREAL greatly fears a repetition of the small pox epidemic of 1885 during the coming winter.

THE rumors that an attempt was made on Premier Mercier's life is denied at Quebec.

THE new Mexican tariff law, which goes into effect Nov. 1, is meeting with strong opposition in many parts of the republic.

M. BRISSON, ex-president of the French chamber of deputies, intends introducing a bill granting amnesty to political offenders, including the exiled prince and M. Rochefort.

THE police of Vienna have arrested a man named Steinart, of Cracow, who is believed to be implicated in the recent bomb outrage at the Rosenthal railway bridge in Bohemia, whereby the life of the Austrian emperor was jeopardized.

LORD SALISBURY, on behalf of England, has politely informed the porte that if vessels of the Russian volunteer fleet are allowed to pass the Dardanelles Great Britian claims the same right for her "volunteer" vessels.

THE Russian government is purchasing corn for the purpose of feeding the famishing peasants of the stricken districts during the winter months. The sufferers in the Volga district will be the first to receive assistance, as it is absolutely necessary to succor them before the volga is frozen over. Twenty pounds of wheat will be given to each person.

AN atempt was made early by a corporal of the palace guard, named Carlos Perez, to assassinate President Sacasa of Nicaragua. Perez was caught on top of the roof over the president's sleeping apartment. He had already made an opening in the roof. Sacasa was awakened by the noise and called the guard, who placed Perez under arrest. He will be court-martialed.

ADVICES from various points in Russia state that great masses of peasants are flocking into the towns from the country districts perishing from the want of food. At least 55,000 have passed through Tninien alone seeking food. Many are falling by the roadside and dying in their tracks. The wanderers have no fuel and the cold is intense. Incendiarism and pillaging are spreading.

THE Chinese minister to Germany has arrived at St. Petersburg from Berlin in consequence of sudden and urgent orders from Pekin regarding the Russian encroachments upon Pamir. The Chinese government became alarmed over the advices that the Russians had penetrated far beyond the frontier of this district, and the minister was instructed to proceed to St. Petersburg and obtain positive assurances with regard to the intentions of the expedition. China and England are acting in concert in the matter.

LABOR CIRCLES.

THE National Laundrymen's association is holding its eighth annual session in St. Louis.

ANDREW CARNEGIE has cut the wages of his men in his steel works, in some cases as much as 60 per cent.

THE Granite Cutters' National Union, the Marble Cutters' National Union, the Journeymen Freestone Cutters' National Union and the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Association of North America have decided to take a united stand against the employment of convicts in their trade.

SPORTING MATTERS.

THE Dwyer stable this season won $175,000, the highest of any stable's winnings.

TWENTY-EIGHT horses sold at Lexington, Ky., at Woodard & Shanklin's sale for $24,455, an average of $873.

AT Woodward Shanklin's sale at Lexington, Ky., sixteen horses sold for $500 and over. Total number sold, twenty-nine; amount of sale, $20,150; average $691.

THE principal event in English sporting circles was the race at Newmarket for the Czarowitch stakes, for three-year-olds and upward, two miles, two furlongs and thirty-five yards, with eighty-six subscribers. It was won by the duke of Beaufort's three-year-old Ragimund.

THE RAILROADS.

SUIT has been brought at Portland, Or., by the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York against the Oregon & Washington to foreclose a consolidated mortgage.

THE Texas & Pacific recently announced a reduction of 10 cents per 100 pounds on all cotton, without regard to destination. The Santa Fe and 'Frisco people had no instructions, but promptly met the reduction.

GEORGE M. PULLMAN, who controls the stock of the Pullman Palace Car company, has decided that at the annual meeting of the company, the capital stock shall be increased from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000.

CHAIRMAN WALKER, on behalf of the board of commissioners of the Western Traffic association, has issued a circular authorizing the Western roads to put in effect the divisions promulgated by the joint rate committee without paying attention to the action of the Eastern lines. The Western roads seem to be much elated over this happy solution of the "three I's" rate problem.

JUDGE HAWLEY, in the United States court at San Francisco, has made a decision in the case of the Standard Oil company versus the Southern Pacific and Whittier, Fuller & Co. The latter firm had a contract with the Southern Pacific company to haul oil for them in a certain kind of cars. The Standard Oil company claimed that this car was a patented invention, which it controlled, and secured a temporary injunction restraining the railroad company from hauling Whittier, Fuller & Co.'s oil in such cars. Judge Hawley decides that the cars in question are not patented inventions and that any one has a right to use them.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE Pennsylvania state senate begins its investigating session.

MR. CLEVELAND addresses a Democratic meeting in Brooklyn.

ST. PAUL Republicans decide to help the Minneapolitans secure the Republican national convention.

THE Pan-Republic congress committee, which has been in session in Philadelphia, has adjourned to meet in Omaha April 10, 1892.

THE custom receipts at the port of New York for the first ten days of October were $2,684,556. For the same days last year they were $7,592,912.

THE Republican convention placed in nomination Charles E. Belknap to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Melbourne H. Ford, congressmen-elect for the Fifth district of Michigan.

THE steamer San Juan, Capt. Crane, arrived at San Francisco from Panama. It was thought that the steamer would have a number of Chilian refugees, but there were none on board.

SOME time since the city council of Cleveland, Ohio, passed an ordinance reducing the price of illuminating gas from $1 to 60 cents per thousand feet. The gas companies have resisted the proposed reduction in the court, and begin a suit in equity in the United States circuit court praying for relief.

THE board of control of the World's Fair met and considered the director general's report on the expenses, departments, etc. Work upon the $5,000,000 loan bill will be taken up at the joint session of the board of conference and control. The department of publicity and promotion will not be abolished.

F. J. SMITH, who operates a Mergenthaler typesetting machine on the Toledo Commercial, beat the world's record for machine composition recently, setting 47,900 ems corrected matter in exactly eight hours. He took the regular run of copy for publication. His previous record was 45,900, made in Brooklyn.

THE legislative committee investigating the conduct of the offices of auditor-general and state treasurer of Pennsylvania by the present incumbents met at Philadelphia. The editors of several papers testified to having paid commissions for advertisements of the commercial list, but declined to name the persons to whom the money was paid.

THE Sabbatarian Society, of Pittsburg, has decided to inaugurate a war on Sunday newspapers. Capt. Wishart, president of the Law and Order Society, will have charge of the movement, and will arrest all editors, reporters, compositors and pressmen found working after midnight. If the papers are published on Sunday morning, the carriers and newsboys will also be arrested.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell.

MINNESOTA

Frank Rice, 17 years old, became insane at Hutchinson from the use of tobacco.

George Annis was accidentally struck by a crowbar at Rochester and probably fatally injured.

Rev. George D. Herron has resigned the pastorate of the Lake City Congregational Church to go to Burlington, Ia.

Rev. W. N. Squire was adjudged insane by Judge of Probate O. D. Anderson at Zumbrota and was taken to the Rochester asylum for treatment.

Gottlieb Fanrey, a farmer of Montivideo, was killed while driving to his home from town. He is supposed to have fallen from his wagon.

Rev. Edmund Gale resigned the pastorate of the Faribault Congregational Church after twenty years' service in that parish. He is seventy years old.

Three burglaries in one night were committed at Barnesville. The victims were J. Marth, clothier: H. Peterson, merchant, and the F. N. Elevator office.

Peter Hanson, an oiler, met a frightful death in elevator H at Duluth. His clothing caught in the shafting, and before the machinery could be stopped he was wound about it and killed.

A large pack of wolves attacked sheep in a fold in the northeastern part of Kanabec county, and killed two before they were driven off. Hunters are now after the pack, which were the first seen in this section in years.

William Campbell, an employe of the Nelson Lumber company at Cloquet, was instantly killed by the projecting logs on a train where he was coupling cars on their logging railroad, thirty miles above there.

Julius Anderson, who was indicted by the grand jury at Winona for raising American express money orders, was found guilty of forgery in the second degree. Anderson recently completed a term at Waupun, Wis., on the same charge.

A farm laborer named Erick Swanson, who joined a threshing crew near Royalton, had his hand and forearm crushed so badly that amputation was necessary. He narrowly escaped being dragged into the cylinder.

An agitation against the lithographs used to advertise gaiety companies is going on at Mankato and the council has taken hold of the subject, at the request of Mayor Willard. An ordinance relating to the matter will be presented at the next meeting.

The Northwest Thompson-Houston Company, of St. Paul, who have purchased the street railway in St. Cloud, have shipped ties and rails for the new track, and work will be begun in a few days on making the change from horse to electric power.

Robbie Burkel, an employe at the Northern Pacific station here, was almost instantly killed. He was engaged in sealing cars, and in some way which is very mysterious, was injured by them. His body was not mutilated and the coroner is trying to ascertain how he came to his death.

Joseph Uhl, a farmer living two miles northwest of Dover, was arrested and taken to Rochester. It seems Uhl hired Charles Miller for the season. Two weeks ago Miller left. He went back after his clothes and while there they quarreled and Uhl pounded Miller.

John Hughes, canvas boss at the Western tent show at Hastings, replenished the city treasury by paying a fine of $15 for an assault upon the eight-year-old son of Theodore Schabert, proprietor of the Union house. The Western tent show, or rather circus, came here a few days ago from St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Aleck Johnson, a young farm laborer, was shot at a late hour in front of Anton Smith's saloon at Mora, by the barkeeper, James Cameron, the bullet entering the neck, taking a downward course. Johnson is said to have been very drunk and abusive at the time, making an assault on Cameron. Johnson may recover.

There was an Austrian wedding at Soudan recently, and during the dance that followed all of the participants got more or less drunk, when a man named Anderson attempted to run the house to suit himself. The Austrians objected, and one of them took a double-bitted axe and struck the Swede over the left ear, nearly taking the top of his head off, death resulting almost instantly.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

South Dakota will have two sugar beet factories, one of which will be located at Aberdeen.

Waters was bound over at Miller in $400 on the charge of illegally taking mules and other property from a Mrs. Strellner.

Wm. Benorst, the well known Indian interpreter, says the Sioux Indians are now well content and seldom refer to the late outbreak.

The land office at Mitchell has been notified that 320 acres of land in section 13, township 107, range 61 Sandborn county, has been patented to the state for university purposes under act of congress.

A 4-year-old boy named Cazan, whose father is bartender in Cleven's saloon on the island at Cloquet, while playing near the edge of the river fell in and was drowned.

A Stillwater special says: Christian Burkhardt is about to put in an electric plant to utilize the water power and furnish 1,000 horse power for his mills on the Willow river in St. Croix county, Wis.

Conductor French and Frank Dade, a printer, were stabbed by hoboes on Front street, Barnesville. Dade, it is feared, is fatally hurt. His home is in Hastings, Neb.

Students of a certain academy at Northfield called the principal out at midnight recently and demanded that certain grievances be adjusted, making threats if he refused. The principal, however, escaped.

James Dennison, a farmer of Rondell township, near Arberdeen has lost his house, barn and granary by fire. Loss $2,500, partially insured. A horse kicked the lantern over in the barn and a strong wind carried the fire.

The trial of W. H. Waters, at Miller a politician and banker of local prominence, is progressing before Justice Ober. Waters is charged with illegally taking possession of mules and other property belonging to a Mrs. Strellner.

Chamberlain is to have a broom factory.

There is a great sensation in the divorce colony at Sioux Falls because of a write up in a New York paper. Mrs. Blaine is accused of furnishing the facts, with the understanding that she should be excluded.

Charles E. Bowman, who is charged with aiding in producing the fatal abortion on Mrs. Henrietta Bratton, at Dell Rapids, was arraigned before Justice Harrington. He waived examination and was bound over to the grand jury, the amount of his bail being fixed at $1,000. He was given an opportunity to secure the required bonds, with prospects of success.

Fred Sammis, who disappeared from the Black Hills with a lot of money belonging to other people, is said to be in old Mexico. He took with him $5,000 given him to pay to Pilcher Bros. and Wm. Poe owner of the Dansby mines. The money was sent by W. H. Dent, banker at La Mars, Iowa. He also took $3,000 belonging to Nye S. Schneider, grain merchants, whose agent Sammis was. Sammis, in a letter written at Omaha, says he lost the money on horse races.

C. O. Hutchinson, the contractor, who is putting down Mitchell's third artesian well, has been obliged to make a start on another well after going down 125 feet. At this point a heavy strata of quicksand was struck and it was found after the machine had stood two days that it was impossible to sink the pipe or to withdraw it, and after a week's work in the attempt to raise the pipe, two lengths broke off in the ground and cannot be raised. A new start will be made at the side of the other well.

John Cole, a widower of 28, has been bound over at Aberdeen for rape on the person of Mary Mefo, a 14-year-old German girl. The couple have desired to marry for weeks and cohabited on different occasions, the girl being a willing partner to the offense. They cannot marry because Mary is not of age, and her father not only strenuously objects, but is pushing the prosecution against Cole, who is liable, as the state law makes the age of consent at 16 years. Cole and the girl skipped for Wisconsin, where they thought their trials would end, but the old man and an officer caught them at Webster and brought them back.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Henry Good, a Bisbee septuagenarian, committed suicide.

A Finlander named Hongola was killed in a runaway at Lakota.

Edgar W. Camp has been appointed United States district attorney for North Dakota.

Mrs. Simon Owen, of Cooperstown, died on the train while enroute for Minneapolis for the purpose of being treated for cancer.

Reliable information from Emmons county places the losses by the recent prairie fires at much less than first reported. George Johnson and his son, living near the Holland settlement, are the only ones who are known to have lost their lives.

A proposition was made to the Fargo council for a franchise for another electric street railway, two and one-half miles of it to be built and in operation Jan. 1, 1892. The matter went over. The Thompson-Houston company is behind the proposition. It has already secured the franchise in Moorhead.

A city election to vote bonds took place at Fargo with a light vote. Only twelve votes were cast against the proposition. The bonds are for $40,000, and bear 6 per cent interest. They are to take the place of the 5 per cent bonds voted last year to complete the purchase of the water works, which were not sold owing to the financial depression East.

E. T. Herrick, auditor of Emmons county, was found dead in his office chair at Williamsport. He had gone to his office and started a fire, and when found was sitting by the stove with his over coat and mittens on. He had been an official of Emmons county for years, and was well known all over this section. His remains will be sent to his old home in Michigan for interment.

Two candidates are in the field for commissioner for the district including Devil's Lake. Joseph Graham and George Juergens were both nominated by circulating certificates for signatures under the Australian system. The assessed valuation of this city is one-fourth of the whole county, but it has had no representation on the board of commissioners since 1880. Candidate Juergens is the city nominee.

Mrs. Mary Olson, wife of a thrifty Scandinavian farmer living a few miles west of Ellendale, drove to town with a horse and buggy, took the train for the south and is now supposed to be in the company of Manly Benedict, a farm hand who worked in the neighborhood and who is also missing. She left her two small children at a neighbor's, and her husband is oft in another county threshing and knows nothing of his broken up household.

A Devils Lake Special says: The absorbing amusement in this vicinity now is geese shooting. They are present in hundreds of thousands and enthusiastic hunters say millions. About fifty sportsmen, many from St. Paul and Minneapolis, passed recently near Sweetwater, north of here shooting geese. One outfit brought down 70. In all, about six hundred are shot. These birds feast on wheat in the day and repair to the lakes at night. Their crops are invariably filled with the grain and their destruction is not considered cruel.

The incorporators of the North Wisconsin Academy met at Ashland. Fifteen trustees were elected and the several committees appointed.

The seven saw mills at Ashland during the past season cut 150,000,000 feet of lumber. The total shipments amounted to 146,000,000 feet.

Mrs. Albertson, of Fort Atkinson, who attempted suicide by shooting, was inspired to the act by despondence caused by being parted from her mother.

The livery stable of M. Sellers, of Fort Howard, was destroyed by fire. There were seven horses burned to death. Loss $4,000.

Frank Chapman, a colored prisoner, working with a gang on the railroad at Superior, attempted to escape by drawing a revolver, but was prevented by the guard.

The 2-year-old daughter of William Baker, of Green Bay, while playing, found a bottle of chloroform. Before the mother could prevent it the child swallowed the contents, which killed her.

A. H. Stevens, of Durand, was fatally kicked by a horse at Augusta. He was a driver of Endicott, the trotting stallion of Kesar & Son, of this place, and was attending the races at Augusta.

Two freight trains on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road collided at the William Buchheit & Co. malt house, a short distance from Watertown, making a complete wreck of the two engines and smashing three cars.

A desperate fight occurred at Union Grove between two parties of that place and Burlington. Wm. Serdeseller, of Union Grove, received a stab wound in the abdomen which may prove fatal, and James Dusston, also of Union Grove, was stabbed in the back and will die.

Nils Andrew, of Eau Claire, who a few days ago received word that his brother Walter had been murdered in Seattle, Wash., has a telegram from the police of that city which states that no such man had been murdered there. Although Andrew has not heard from his brother in two years he thinks he is alive, but where he does not know.

IOWA.

W. L. Chilcott was bound over to the United States court for selling liquor at Devils Lake without a license, has furnished cash bail of $250.

Frank Carson, a Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern car inspector, was caught between a couple of cars in the yards at Cedar Rapids and crushed to death.

The silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Budde was celebrated at their home in Devils Lake the other night. The couple were married at McGregor, Iowa, and were among the first settlers here.

Mrs. Lily Grogan was adjudged insane at Grand Forks and taken to the asylum at Jamestown. She has been in that institution before and was discharged as cured. When she returned home she attempted to kill her child and suicide. Her trouble is melancholy.

There are thousands of dead fish along the shores of the Mississippi river. The river fell lower than for twenty years, leaving large numbers of fish in pools which gradually dried up and the fish have since died on their bed of scorching sand. This state of affairs exists for miles along the river.

Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Peddlety, of Benton, Wis., were driving over a high bridge at Dubuque when their horse took fright at an engine, turned about, and threw the occupants of the buggy out. Mrs. Peddlety had her skull fractured and will die. Mrs. Miller was badly hurt, but will recover.

The first day of the Iowa-Illinois fair was not a great success on account of the down pour for most of the day of a heavy rain. The races were postponed. The exposition of fine arts, floral and agricultural products, and live stock are the finest ever seen in the city, and good weather will bring big crowds for the remainder of the fair.

According to arrangements made, the Iowa Dairymen Association will be held at Waverly Nov. 10, 11, 12. Dr. J. E. Parsons, of the department of agriculture, Washington; President W. A. Henry, of the Wisconsin Agricultural College; Prof. G. E. Patrick, chemist of the Iowa Agricultural College, and Prof. James Wilson, of the United States Agricultural Experiment Station, will be present and are given places on the program.

The Eighth annual session of the Cedar Valley Medical Association closed at independence. The trial of Drs. Green and Bronson, of Dubuque, for breach of medical ethics occupied the greater portion of the session. The subject was finally referred to a committee who have not yet rendered a decision. Officers for the ensuing year are T. W. Smith, Charles City, president; W. Chase, Waterloo, secretary. North Dakota.

Mrs. Emma Stutsman, widow, lives all alone at her home in Bonaparte. Lately she has had considerable money in the house and was advised by friends to deposit it for fear of burglars. She did deposit a part of it, but still retained a good sum in hiding. She, however, engaged a mechanic of this city named Corwan to put some bolts and locks on the doors as an extra precaution. A night or so afterwards she was awakened by a noise at the door. Peering out the window she saw a man working at the fastening. Slipping out back she aroused the neighbors who surrounded the house and captured the burglar, who proved to be the mechanic who put the locks on the door. He is now under arrest.

WINDS AND FLOODS.

Combined Elements Playing Havoc Along the Coasts of England, Ireland and Scotland.

Many Craft Driven Ashore and Towns Along the Coasts Flooded by the Seas.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The hurricane which has prevailed on the west coast of Ireland for several days past, and which is still raging, is pronounced to be the worst storm known in that part of the country in twenty years. The river Shannon has overflowed its banks and has submerged large quantities of land in its vicinity, drowning a considerable number of cattle and sheep, and destroying several houses and many barns and other such buildings.

A French brig was wrecked to-day off St. Catherine's point. Five men of the brig's crew were drowned. A coasting schooner was also stranded at about the same spot.

The gale has also been raging with unusual fierceness about Queenstown and its vicinity. About thirty craft, large and small, mostly fishing smacks and small coasters, have been driven ashore in that vicinity. At Youghal the sea has been so heavy and the water has been driven so far up by the wind that many parts of the town are flooded by the seas which have swept into the streets.

Many sheep and cattle have been drowned along the course of the Blackwater river. Dispatches from Holyhead state that 200 vessels, many of them much damaged, have sought refuge at that port from the storm. The gravest apprehensions are felt by the inhabitants of Sandgate, a small town on the English channel, situated two miles from Folkstone in Kent. The storms have caused a most abnormal high tide, and this combined with the hurricane which is blowing there

IS DESTROYING THE SEA WALLS.

Many houses situated near the shore have already been washed over by the angry waters, and the high road leading to Hythe and Folkstone is submerged and destroyed in many places. The river Thames at Windsor, Elyton and other places is overflowing its banks into many houses. Similar reports are reaching this city from many other parts of England, Ireland and Scotland.

At Maryport, Cumberland, on the Irish sea, a thriving ship-building place, though the harbor dries at low water at some places about the town, the water now is four feet deep, and is causing an enormous amount of damage, particularly at the stores and warehouses unlucky enough to be inundated.

The river Shannon has burst its banks in the County Limerick, innundating large tracts of land. The reclamation works near Ennis, in County Clare, which were recently built and cost the government £600,000, have been nearly ruined. Many villages in the Trent valley are submerged. The rivers Usk, Ebb, Runney and Otway have overflowed their banks. Many thousand acres of land are covered with water and the roads are impassable.

A large number of buildings, weakened by the floods, have collapsed. The loss of live stock is very great. The Parret river has overflowed. Between Bridgewater and Langeport the country is for many miles like a sea. Hundreds of cattle have been drowned and many houses are submerged.

The German brig Hoffman has been towned to Portsmouth in a disabled condition. She lost a seaman in the gale. The villages of Ballacurrea and Balfray, in Ireland, are flooded. The inhabitants had to be assisted to escape by boats, many being taken from the windows of their houses clad only in their night dresses.

THE STORM REACHES SPAIN.

MADRID, Oct. 20.—The province of Granada was visited by a terrific storm to-day. The wind blew a hurricane. The town of Granada and the whole surrounding country are inundated, and immense damage has been caused by the flood. The lower part of the town of Motril is submerged.

Chinese Coming Via Winnipeg.

WINNIPEG, Man., Special Telegram, Oct. 20.—It is little wonder that the United States authorities in the West are concentrating their attention to the smuggling of Chinese. The almond-eyed celestials, fearing the cool December and January weather of the West, are flocking across the line. Nine of these pigtails left Winnipeg for the United States via Gretna Saturday. It is reported that one of the Chinese laundrymen in this city is in league with the celestials coming from the coast, and for a consideration directs them to those who are in a position to conduct them into Uncle Sam's territory. This celestial visited the flowery kingdom some months ago, and it is said to be on his guarantee of entry into the United States that so many are coming to Canada on the Canadian Pacific railway steamers.

Stirred Up the Charity Organizations.

NORTHFIELD, Minn., Special, Oct. 20.—The telegram from this place published in the PIONEER PRESS to-day has caused considerable excitement, and people are now trying to find out who the family mentioned is and where they live. The PIONEER PRESS correspondent, in company with two or three other gentlemen, became possessed of the facts of the case about twenty-four hours ahead of the representatives of the other papers and the public in general, and on that account some were inclined to doubt its authenticity. Some of the charity organizations feel deeply aggrieved that any one living within two hundred yards of the central portion of the city should be in a starving condition and are somewhat cut up about the matter. But the fact exists.

Preferred Wedlock to Death.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Oct. 20.—Miss Eva Waller and James Hayes, a hackman, were married last night by a justice of the peace. Miss Waller's name has for many years been coupled with those of different elderly millionaires of this city, and about two weeks ago she tried to commit suicide by taking laudanum. Her marriage to Hayes is sensational. A prominent attorney met Hayes yesterday and bet him $100 he would never marry her. Hayes took the bet and married her at once.

Absorbed a Democratic Organ.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Oct. 20.—Maj. C. Boyd Barrett has sold the plant, fixtures and good will of the Aberdeen Republican (Dem.) to the Star Publishing company, consisting of Senator Kyle, George Crome, W. E. Kidd and others, who are engaged in spreading the independent doctrine. The Daily Republican suspended some time ago, and it is announced that the weekly will also be stopped in a short time. All patronage possible is being turned to the Star. Barrett says he will continue to reside in the state.

SAM SMALL IN TROUBLE.

The Evangelist Arrested Charged With Obtaining Money Under False Pretenses.

BOSTON, Oct. 20.—Last Monday an incident occurred which has been kept so secret that the news did not escape until to-day. On that day a deputy sheriff arrested Rev. Sam Small on a warrant charging him with obtaining, by false pretenses, from Rev. H. U. Monroe, an Episcopalian clergyman, $1,000. It was a civil action, so the prisoner escaped the publicity of a court scene. He was baled out by Secretary Marden, of the prohibitory state committee, and has been stumping the state ever since. The case was brought in the civil court solely to avoid the scandal that a criminal case might bring to the cause of prohibition.

It is said that the transaction which resulted in the arrest of Mr. Small took place in August, 1890, when Small was president of Ogden university. It is alleged that Mr. Small induced Rev. Mr. Monroe to pay $1,000 for a lot of land which he represented to be worth that sum. The land belonged to the university, and, as the story goes, was worth only $500. That was the sum demanded by the university and it is understood that Small divided the purse with the university and was $500 richer by the transaction. When Mr. Monroe learned that he had been duped he demanded the return of his money. That was not forthcoming and hence the suit.

In conversation with a reporter Mr. Small was not inclined to enter into the details of the transaction on which his arrest was based, but affirmed that he was not guilty of any wrong doing and that there was nothing on his heart that would not bear investigation in any court.

FREE MAIL DELIVERY.

Farmers Want to Read Daily Papers the Same as City Folks.

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—An organized effort is underway among farmers to secure from congress free mail delivery in country towns. The Farmers' Alliance, Patrons of Husbandry and others are canvassing the matters. Letters are being written to congressmen in favor of the project and petitions to congress for free delivery are being circulated in many parts of the country. Farmers assert that a daily mail delivery at their door will add perceptibly to the money value of their farms and will be worth still more because it will keep them in touch with markets and the outside world and rid life of its isolation and monotony. The farmers are writing to the agricultural press that this convenience would enable them quite generally to take a daily paper as well as to subscribe for the local papers more liberally.

In the American Agriculturist for November Postmaster General Wanamaker states definitely for the first time that the experiment made by the postoffice department for free delivery in farming districts shows that the increase of revenue more than pays all the increased expenses. He believes that universal free delivery would therefore be self-sustaining.

Bank Organized at Grand Rapids.

GRAND RAPIDS, Minn., Special Telegram, Oct. 20.—A long pending enterprise or the establishing of such a heavy banking house here as would be able to handle the upper Mississippi lumber operations was completed to-day by the joint efforts of the representative of Prince, Sheldon & Co. of Cloquet and Stillwater and C. M. Hastings of Minneapolis, our own citizens co-operating by a handsome cash stock subscription. The bank organized with C. M. Hastings president and F. P. Sheldon, late of the Dakotas, as cashier, and is named the Lumbermen's Bank of Grand Rapids. The bank site was selected and a contract let for the building, to be completed in the earliest possible time, not exceeding six weeks. The bank will have a handsome outfit, brick and steel vault, time-lock safe and all the modern improvements. It is designed to give the lumbermen as full and as substantial an institution of the kind as exists outside of the large cities of the state.

Harping on the World's Fair.

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—Notwithstanding the raid the great Harlem demonstration in the Belmont Riding Academy in honor of Candidate Roswell P. Flower was a notable one. Jordan L. Mott was elected chairman and introduced Mr. Flower. As that gentleman appeared on the platform hats were thrown in the air and for three minutes cheering went on. When order was restored Mr. Flower addressed the meeting. His speech was devoted entirely to the world's fair, the loss of which to New York was charged up to Mr. Fassett and other Republicans.

Artificial Rain Company.

TOPEKA, Kan., Oct. 20.—A. B. Montgomery of Goodland, Stephins county, Kan., where Melbourne recently made his rain-making experiments, to-day filed with the secretary of state the charter of the Artificial Rain-Producing company. The object is stated to be "to furnish water to the public by producing and increasing the fall of rain" by the Melbourne plan. Melbourne will do the rain-producing, and the company has contracted to pay him 10 cents per acre for all the land watered by him during next summer's season.

Fraud Charged.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 20.—The Adams Express company, through President Henry Sanford, to-day filed a bill in the United States circuit court against ex-President John Hoey to recover about $750,000 he is alleged to have misappropriated. The only new allegation is that he fraudulently used the Adams Express company's check to pay off a $100,000 mortgage executed to the Guarantee Trust Company of Philadelphia by Mrs. Hoey. The complainant asks for a full accounting by the defendant and a lien on Hollywood (Long Branch), where the complainant believes most of the money went.

Their Scheme Failed.

TACOMA, Wash., Oct. 20.—A. J. Littlejohn of this city was arrested to-day on a charge of stealing the records from the land office of the department of the interior. It is stated that the indictments also been found by grand jury of the supreme court, district of Columbia, against J. T. Elder and William Jameson on the same charge. They have not yet been arrested. The object of stealing the papers was to make a piece of land valued at $100,000 free to entry. The men implicated are quite prominent in this section.

Three Men Shot by Mexicans.

RIO GRANDE CITY, Tex. Oct. 26.—Sunday, on the Mexican side, three men were shot by the government forces under command of Gen. Lorenzo Garcia. Two of them were cowboys, who have been working near Victoria, and who incautiously crossed the river without a permit from the Mexican consul on this side. The other, Juan Bazan, an army meat contractor, was suspected of revolutionary sentiment. Gen. Garcia ordered their peremptory execution.

Preferred Death to Arrest.

EL PASO, Tex., Oct. 20.—W. W. Pace of Austin, Tex., committed suicide here today in a barber shop by shooting himself through the head with a revolver. He had forged several checks on Paul Frick, United States marshal for the Eastern district of Texas, and would have been arrested had he lived half an hour longer. He is connected with one of the best families of the state and was an officer of the United States court last year.

BREVITIES.

Wheat is 80 cents.

Martin Bjerk left today for Crookston on business,

C. G, Rapp is having the front of his store painted.

Chas. Brink went down to Crookston today on business.

Contractor David Swank was in town a short time last Monday.

Mr, Meehan, of Red Lake Falls, was in town on business today.

If you want to insure your buildings against fire, call at this office.

H. O. Huseth left to day for a short business trip to Grand Forks,

O. H. Lucken, of Crookston, was in town on business last Monday.

Fred Eikhof and S. M. Dainard were down to Crookston last week on business.

The North Star Lung and Throat Balsam is sure cure for coughs and colds.

An excellent specimen of the tramp order was doing the village several days last week,

S. M. Dainard has his new barn almost completed. It will be one of the best in town.

Messrs, Holmes, Rapp and Dainard were down to Red Lake Falls on business yesterday.

Frank Kratka, the Thief River Falls boomer, was in town last Monday on his way to Crookston.

Holmes Bros. have just received a fine line of heating stoves. Call and examine their stock,

John Dainard came up from Crookston last Friday and has taken a position in the lumber yard.

An agent for a collection agency has been doing a big business among our business men the past week.

Word has been received from Ada that A. J. McLaughlin is recovering rapidly and will soon be back again.

The roads are still in very bad shape and it will take several weeks of dry weather before much of a load can be hauled.

The lumber yard is being moved fast possible. The job is a big one and it will probably be another week before it is completed.

W. S. Millikan, in charge of a surveying crew, was here this week. They are surveying a preliminary line from here to Thief River Falls for the Great Northern.

Many farmers are still unable to do their plowing owing to the wet condition of the land, It is feared that a large amount of plowing will be left undone this fall.

We are now enjoying a very long spell of dry weather as it has been nearly a week since the last rain. This is the first time such a thing has happened this fall.

George Fricker reports the arrival of a young Miss at his place last Monday. George wears a happy smile and is busy distributing cigars, Mother and child are doing well.

A seven year old daughter of Andrew Norander's has been dangerously sick with typhoid fever, Dr. Dunlop, of Crookston, was called last Friday, and the child is now doing finely.

The M. E. social at the church last Friday evening was well attended and all seemed to enjoy the entertainment and the supper which followed. About twenty dollars was taken in.

Fred Eickhoff has had the windows of his saloon painted in a very artistic manner by Frank Rossini. The work has attracted considerable attention and should be a good advertisement.

Three more prisoners escaped from the county jail again last Monday evening. Sheriff Grundysen was absent at the time and the jail was in charge of the jailor Ole Sennes. Some of these days, if we don't look out, those escaped prisoners will come back and steal the county jail, jailor and all, and we will be in a pretty mess. The prisoners seem to have a "dead snap" at present and as soon as they get a few square meals they are ungrateful enough to leave,

Very little threshing is being done at present the country being so wet that it is almost impossible to move the machines. It is drying up fast however, and they will be at work next week if the weather continues fine.

We learn that the muskeg road has been considerably damaged by the recent rains and needs attention. The village has considerable money there and it would be wise to have the damage fixed before it grows worse.

Frank Rossini a painter from Brainerd has been in town the past week and has been doing considerable work. He is a first class workman and has done some very artistic work, He will have a couple of weeks work to do here yet, Crookston Times: Ex U. S. Marshall H. R. Denney and Platt B. Walker, hold a contract for surveying part of the Red Lake Reservation, and owing to the wet weather we having lately they wish to cancel their contract, or get some engineer to take it off their hands. W. R. Knowlton, formerly chief engineer of the Duluth & Winnipeg Ry,, also has a contract there that he wishes to cancel. Our city Engineer, Ralph, will probably take both contracts and relieve them of all responsibility in the matter.

The SPECTATOR announced last week that an oyster supper would be served at the M. E. social on Friday evening and when the time came Rev, Chapman announced that the editor must have been dreaming when such an announcement was made, as it was not the intention to provide oysters. We must have been misinformed but as the church was filled full and the steps and sidewalk crowded, it conclusively proves that the people here likes oysters and that the SPECTATOR is an excellent advertising medium. Rates made known upon applidation.

The New York Sun is a democratic newspaper, but not a free trade organ, and it lunges the following interrogatories at those who believe free trade to be a panacea for all ills to which nations may be heir:

1. Why has the depression in agriculture been so severe? And why does it promise to be lasting in Great Britain a free trade country.

2. Is it the Morrill tariff or the McKinley tariff that is the cause of the short crops in Europe this year?

3. Why do trusts and monopolies exist and flourish under the regime of free trade as in Great Britain?

4. Why have the greatest fortunes been made outside of the great protected industries?

We learn that the citizens of Red Lake Falls are considerably excited over the fact that branch of the Great Northern from here will not run through their town. They telegraphed President Hill last week asking if he would receive a delegation of citizens, and he replied that it would do them no good to come down as the road would not be built through the town. Meanwhile all work has been stopped and they will try to get the road as far as the river this fall. The country is in very bad shape and unless we have several weeks of good weather the work cannot be finished this year. A prominent official informs us that the property owners of Red Lake Falls wanted $27,000 for the right of way through the town. It is certain that the greediness of the property owners has been a great detriment to the town. It is estimated that it would cost in the neighborhood of $150,000 to run the road through, the town, and it is now more than probable that they will seek an easier place to cross.

Warren Register: In a conversation with Senator Wood, a short time ago, he gave us some very interesting information concerning grasshoppers in the Indian Reservation, obtained while he was examining the surveys there this last summer. He said there was thousands of acres of marsh land, over which he passed, that had been stripped bare of grass by the grasshoppers, which swarmed in myriads in all the marshes, which were then free from water. These hoppers had evidently hatched from eggs deposited in, or adjacent to, the marshes, and, doubtless, deposited their eggs this fall, in like manner. The recent heavy rains have filled these marshes with water, which will destroy the eggs and save the adjacent country from a hopper scourge next season.

There was lately an error in Grand Forks newspapers, stating that Mayor Brown of East Grand Forks had closed up the gambling places of that city. This was a mistake, Mayor Brown was on a trip east when the gambling holes were closed up and had nothing to do with that act. Co. Attorney Holston was the one who ordered the gambling places closed and to keep closed. We understand that should any of those places open up in business, the proprietors will be taken care of to the fullest extent of the hospitalities of the authorities, and would be invited to dine at Sheriff Grundysen's Hotel. It would undoubtedly be better not to try to gamble in East Grand Forks, as a newer place, further off, would be considerably safer.—Crookston Tribune.

Minneapolis Journal: Hon. Dar S. Hall, Indian commissioner, returned last evening from Mille Lacs Lake, where he has been attempting to remove the Mille Lacs Indians to the White Earth reservation. Out of about 900 Indians, only 200 have left the reservation for their new home, where ample annuities and free homes await them, Commissioner Hall has found it much easier to persuade the younger Indians and show them the advantage of the change. But the older ones point to promises made by Commissioner Rice that they should be allowed to take their claimes in the old reservation, These promises the government has been obliged to overrule, but Commissioner Hall finds it extremely difficult to argue the case with them. They ask him for homes and saw mills at Mille Lacs, and the commissioner is compelled to answer them by pointing out the advantages they will have in the White Earth reservation.

Recently we gave accounts of three very remarkable runs. The Philadelphia & Reading run was made with one of the class "D" 33 engines with four 68½ inch driving wheels, the total train loads being about 169 tons. The fastest time made was 90½ miles per hour for about one mile on a level immediately following a decending grade of 37 feet per mile, The fastest run on the New York central with a Schenectady engine was more difficult, owing to the long time and distance from start to final stop. In that run 436½ miles was made in actual running time of 425 minutes and 14 seconds, giving an average speed excluding stops of 61.56 miles per hour.

The maximum speed between stations on the Central run is unknown. It is said that the fastest mile was made in 47 seconds, or at the rate of 76.6 miles per hour.—Scientific American

Duluth News: If everything has gone well with the Chas. W. Wetmore, and there is no reason to believe that any uncanny accident has happened, the ocean-crossing pioneer "whaleback" is now shoving her steel nose through the waters of the Atlantic south of the equator, near the Brazilian capital. She is proceeding southward, and is expected to arrive off Monteveido, Uruguay where she will make her first report next Saturday. At that point she will receive an 18-word cable, which was sent via London, and cost $42, telling her to touch at Valparaiso, Chili and report progress,

When the Wetmore started on her trip Captain Hastings was told to "push straight through" touching only at Montevideo, as the Chilian troubles, including naval engagements etc., made Valparaiso a rather lively port to enter But now that the congressionalists have come out on top and white-winged peace hovers over Chili, the ship will be allowed to touch in there and send news of her journey. After that is done the next report will be made from the Puget sound arrival. The most determined opposers of the whaleback type of vessles will have no chance to say, "wait till the boates strike rough weather," for the Wetmore has been passing through the most severe storms known on the Atlantic for years, and encountered in her course the very hard trial incident to the recent West Indian hurricanes, Some report of the Wetmore's progress may be confidently looked for inside of a week from Montevideo.

Crookston Times: Less than three weeks ago there was not a man in Polk county who appeared further from death's door than Even J. Grefthen who passed away at eleven o'clock yesterday morning. Strong and filled with the life and vigor of young manhood it seemed as if his days of usefulness had but just commenced. Today he lies a corpse and his body is being prepared for the tomb.

Three weeks ago he was taken with typhoid fever. He fought against the disease for a week, but finally had to give up and take to his bed. The disease had fastened itself upon him in its most malignant form, and although everything that medical skill or careful nursing could accomplish was done for him, yet for over a week past there has been very little hope entertained of his recovery and on Thursday afternoon the doctors entirely gave up hope.

Deceased was born in Norway June 21, 1865 and is therefore 26 years of age He immigrated to America with his parents when four years of age and settled in Winneshiek Co. Ia, He attended the Decorah institute until 1886, when he came to Polk county and began farming near Nebe, where he also taught school for four years. In 1890 he started in the mercantile business and was shortly afterward elected superintendent of schools of this county which position he held up to the time of his death. He was engaged to be married to Miss Louisa Sprague of Fillmore who has remained by his bedside during his illness and was with him when he died. His parents, who are living in Worth Co. Ia., have been notified and his father has telegraphed that he will be here this morning when arrangements will be made for the funeral. The remains will be taken either to his home in Iowa, or to Nebe or interment.

New York Oct. 16,—The editor of the Bucyrus (Ohio) Journal having written Mr. Blaine that the Democratic papers were parading him as an opponent of the McKinley bill, Mr. Blaine replys as follows from Augusta Me., under date of Oct. 14th, 1891.

You inform me that the Democratic papers in your town and many Democratic papers throughout Ohio keep the paragraph standing in type. "But there is not a section or line in the entire bill (McKinley tariff) that will open a market for another bushel of wheat or another barrel of pork,—James G. Blaine to Senator Frye July 11, 1890,

This sentance is garbled and taken from its proper connection. It creates a wrong impression. What I did say is the following:

"I do not doubt that in many respects the tariff bill pending in the senate is a just measure and that most of its provisions are in accordance with the wise policy of protection, but there is not a section or a line in the entire bill that will open a market for another bushel of wheat or another pound of pork."

The letter in which this paragraph occurs was written to Senator Frye July 11, 1890 and the McKinley bill did not become a law until October—nearly three months thereafter. In my letter to Senator Frye I objected to the bill because it did not contain a reciprocity clause which would provide a market for wheat and pork, for other products of the farm and for various fabrics, Before the bill was finally passed the reciprocity clause was inserted and a large addition made to the free list. It will therefore be see from what I said in my letter that the objection that I made to the McKinley bill was entirely removed before the bill became a law.

WHAT RECIPROCITY IS DOING.

Let me further say that the reciprocity clause has given ample market for many barrels of pork. Brazil, some months since, entered into a treaty by which many American articles are admitted free, Flour is admitted free and pork is admitted at a nominal duty. Cuba and Porto Rico have reduced the duty on flour from $5,80 a barrel to $1 (which gives us the market)—beside putting nearly 100 articles of American production on the free list,

San Domingo has made a reciprocity treaty, with flour and pork upon the free list besides a large number of other articles. Other treaties for reciprocity are in progress.

Germany, without negotiating a formal treaty, has removed the prohibition on pork, and our government in consideration thereof has left her sugar ont the free list. This opens to us an entirely new market and $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 of American pork will be consumed per annum where not a pound has been taken for ten years. The reciprocity provision has been proving very successful, especially in farm products and more particularly in the case of the two articles in the paragraph quoted—flour and pork.

I am not therefore an opponent of the McKinley bill as the Democratic papers of Ohio are constantly alleging. On the contrary I have cordially supported it ever since it was perfected by the insertion of the reciprocity clause.

ARGONAUTS IN VERA CRUZ.

Gold Hunters of '49 Visit a Mexican City and Become Discouraged.

It was Sunday morning when we dropped anchor near St. Juan de Ulloa, with its quaint ancient tower, and the city of Vera Cruz just before us.

The uniformed customs officials speedily boarded us from a small boat, and amid the clanging of some scores of old Spanish bells from the cathedral which filled the air, the officers were entertained by an encounter between two of our pugnacious gold hunters, who struck vigorously from the shoulder. We obtained a speedy permission to land, as the officials did not appear to enjoy our companionship. Sunday was passed in looking at the sights in the old Spanish city, battered and bombarded as it had been two years before by the artillery of General Scott.

Walls and buildings constructed of coral rocks were shattered as he had left them, fragments of bombs and solid shot lay about the streets where his cannon had fired them, and along the beach were numerous dilapidated wrecks, of surf boats where he had abandoned them. Numerous army wagons, caissons and artillery carriages were scattered about, and thousands of Yankee made pack saddles were offered us for our journey. These and much other paraphernalia, the production of army contractors, had only served the purpose intended—that of enriching the contractors.

The only pack saddle found useful was the Mexican one, consisting of two great pillows of leather connected and hung astride the mule, and weighing without the "cargo" some eighty pounds, on the top of which or suspended from it would be a load of some 200 pounds.

As our war with Mexico had just ended, and the ignorant masses yet held us in the same enmity with which they had regarded their conquerors, matters did not look favorable for a peaceful passage over the whole extent of Mexico, especially as we expected to follow the route taken by Scott's army and to pass over battlefields where, as we learned, bleached skeletons lay still unburied. The government, in fact the whole country was yet in a state of demoralization, and guerrillas and robbers infested almost every mile of the way.

Besides this, merchants of intelligence in Vera Cruz warned us that we were almost sure to be robbed and murdered, that if we should escape this fate we could not find provisions on our journey for men or beasts, and that we would most surely break down our animals and be obliged to resort to horse or mule meat to sustain life. Impressed by these tales which found fulfillment to some extent even as to mule meat, with rattlesnakes added, about fifty of the most pronounced and boastful among our company took a return passage on the vessel for New York.—Colonel A. C. Ferris in Century.

Strange Facts About Accidents.

The collection of large groups of facts about accidents which has been made necessary by the development of accident insurance has made a contribution to one department of social science that is by no means uninteresting. For instance, it is a curious fact that a man is much more likely to lose his left hand than his right hand, or his left eye than his right eye; statistics show, too, that when a man insures himself against accidents he thereby greatly diminishes the risk of accident—and this is probably explained in this way: When a man's attention is called to a danger he fixes his mind on it, and thereby consciously or unconsciously makes unusual effort to avert it. It therefore happens that a man is more likely to be a victim of an accident of a kind that he never thought of than of the kind against which he insures himself.

A man, for instance, who handles sharp tools will insure himself against an accident from the use of them, and the first thing he knows he will be drawing pay from an insurance company for an injury done by getting a cinder in his eye.—Forum.

Antiquity of the Water Pump.

The water pump of today is but an improvement on a Grecian invention which first came into use during the reign of Ptolemies Philadelphos and Euergetes, 283 to 221 B. C. The name, which is very similar in all languages, is derived from the Greek word pempo, to send or throw. The most ancient description we have of a water pump is by Hero, of Alexandre. There is no authentic account of the general use of the pump in Germany previous to the beginning of the Sixteenth century. At about that time the endless chain and bucket works for raising water from mines began to be replaced by pumps.

In the Seventeenth century rotating pumps, like the Pappenham engine, with two pistons, and the Prince Rupert, with one, were first used. Pumps with plunger pistons were invented by Morland, an Englishman, in 1674; the double acting pump, by De la Hire, the French academician.—New York Telegram.

Norwegian Horses.

A traveler in Norway says that the horses in that country have a very sensible way of taking their food, which might be beneficially followed here. They have a bucket of water put down beside their allowance of hay. It is interesting to see with what relish they take a sip of the one and a mouthful of the other alternately, sometimes only moistening their mouths as a rational being would while eating his dinner of such dry food. A broken winded horse is scarcely ever seen in Norway, and the question is if the mode of feeding has not something to do with the preservation of the animal's respiratory organs.—London Tit-Bits.

Unsolicited Advice.

Miss Passa (of uncertain age)—To be! I don't know whether to go into the surf or not. Some folks say the salt water makes wrinkles.

Old Fisherman—No, mum, it's just the other way, mum. Salt water takes wrinkles out, mum. Just you try it an' see.—New York Weekly.

To Tell a Man's Status.

It was a young married woman who spoke. She was dining with her husband on the piazza of a hotel.

"If you have any doubt," said she, "about the relationship of a man and woman when you see them at a place like this there is one very sure way of settling whether or not they are married. When the waiter makes out the check for the dinner, watch the man who is going to pay it. If he nervously clutches at the check, crushes it in his hand and hands the waiter a ten dollar bill without looking to see how much he owes, he is not even engaged to the girl who is with him, and stands in mortal dread of her opinion of him.

"If he takes the check and scans it with some care and then quietly hands to the waiter a sum approximating the total, he is very likely engaged to the girl, and is willing for her to think him businesslike and precise.

"If, however, he allows the waiter to place the check on the table, and leaves it there for his companion to see and study, then they are married. It is only the married man dining with his wife who will sit back and think of other things while his check awaits settlement in full view of the lady opposite. Before marriage he would not allow her mind to realize anything so unromantic as the price of the delicate viands she consumed, and even during the engagement he would not permit her to think of such material questions.

"A year after marriage, however, they discuss together the prices on the bill of fare, and when the check is made out the wife is more anxious than the husband to know how much it comes to. Therefore, the married man allows his dinner checks to remain on the table for his wife's inspection."—New York Letter.

Catching Terrapin.

In the shoal waters along the coast south of Cape Henlopen terrapin are caught in various ways. Dredges dragged along in the wake of a sailing vessel pick them up. Nets stretched across some narrow arm of river or bay entangle the feet of any stray terrapin in their meshes, but these require the constant attendance of the fisherman to save the catch from drowning. In the winter, in the deeper water, the terrapin rise from their muddy quarters on mild, sunny days and crawl along the bottom. They are then taken by tongs, their whereabouts being often betrayed by bubbles.

Turtles will rise at any noise, and usually the fisherman only claps his hands, though each hunter has his own way of attracting the terrapin. One hunter whom I saw uttered a queer guttural noise that seemed to rise from his boots.

Whatever the noise, all turtles within hearing—whether terrapin or "snapper"—will put their heads above water. Both are welcome and are quickly sold to the marketmen. The snapper slowly appears and disappears, leaving scarcely a ripple, and the hunter cautiously approaching usually takes him by the tail. The terrapin, on the contrary, is quick, and will descend in an oblique direction, so that a hand net is needed unless he happens to come up near by. If he is near enough the man jumps for him. The time for hunting is the still hour at either sunrise or sunset.—St. Nicholas.

Queer Collection in the Dead Letter Office

No brief list could summarize the innumerable strange things that have fallen into the hands of the dead letter office in Washington. There are opium pipes and packages of refined opium, bottled specimens of different kinds of mineral formations thrown up by the Charleston earthquake, boxes of cartridges, percussion caps, quantities of firecrackers and torpedoes, false teeth, corn husking gloves, every imaginable sort of kitchen utensils, carpenters' tools, horns, tambourines, banjos, harmonicas, gold headed canes, and even "spirit photographs."

Many of the objects accumulated come under the "unmailable" head, being of glass or "pointed instruments" which might damage the mails. Bottles or surgical tools are not carried by Uncle Sam unless inclosed in wood or tin. One hundred dollars' worth of nuggets of virgin gold in a box came in a while ago and are awaiting a claimant. Likewise a damaged plug hat, which had no address, and a grotesque doll about the size of a baby. There are some gloves from the steamship Oregon which were 114 days under water; though they seem to be fairly respectable now and might be worn at a stretch. Some wedding cake is exhibited in the museum that is fifty years old.—Rene Bache in New York Sun.

Young Men as Authors.

Keats was dead when just a little over his twenty-fifth year. Shelley wrote "Queen Mab" at twenty, and the "Prometheus Unbound" and the "Ode to the West Wind" at twenty-six. Byron startled the town with "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers" at twenty-one, and at twenty-four "woke up and found himself famous" by the publication of "Childe Harold." Burns was but twenty-seven when he was the lion of the season in Edinburgh. Campbell published his "Pleasures of Hope" at twenty-two. Chatterton was not eighteen when he finished his life's work. The great Shakespeare himself was famous when little more than a youth, and the same is true of the Shakespeare of France, Victor Hugo; and Goethe, by the bye, was known to all Europe at twenty-four.

Scott, on the other hand, was more leisurely. He made no serious effort as an author till he was over thirty, and he was over forty when "Waverley" was given to the world; and Thackeray also was verging on two score before "Vanity Fair" established his reputation.—Critic.

Only to Be Seen in Paris.

A beggar rather respectably dressed solicits alms from the customers seated at each of the tables outside a cafe on the boulevards. On reaching the last table, which is unoccupied, he counts his receipts and, satisfied with the sum total, sits down and in a tone of importance calls out. "Waiter, a bock!"—Paris Letter.

The Courtesy of Assassins.

It will be remembered that some time ago Mr. Constantine Belcheff, the minister of finances, was unskillfully shot and killed while walking in the streets of Sofia in company with M. Stambuloff, the prime minister. It was thought at the time that M. Belcheff was the victim of mistaken identity, and this belief has been confirmed by the following apology which has been carved on his tombstone: "Forgive us; we aimed at Stambuloff and struck you. The second time we will not fail."—General M. M. Trumbull in Open Court.

A Hint to Young Writers.

We all know how to talk. There is a certain number of words put on the tongue of every human being, just as the song is given to the canary bird or to the robin. But beyond the song these birds cannot go. And beyond the natural speech, or the words that nature gives to every one, the illiterate human being cannot go. His vocabulary is limited until he becomes a student. Then he begins to widen and there is no near boundary line to its possibilities. The writer who imagines that he can give additional emphasis to a composition by the use of large words is greatly mistaken. The economy of the reader's attention is absorbed in understanding and applying these big words, and there is little of the mental energy left with which to digest the idea that these long words contain. The picture that is brought before his mental vision is therefore dim and uncertain.

If the writer would give more prominence to the idea and less to the verbal frame; in other words, if he would use simple language which by contrast would bring out the idea, he would not only economize his reader's mental energy, but would benefit himself by making himself more easily understood. The mind is not able to do more than one thing at a time and do it well. It cannot at once delve into the mysteries of a many syllable word and comprehend the thought in a proper manner.—Chicago Post.

The Cobra and the Empty Can.

The terrible cobra de capello, which is feared and venerated in India as a snake god, is occasionally caught napping when he has encroached on the territory of others.

A resident in India says that he was one day much astonished by hearing a succession of reports, like the firing of a revolver, which issued from the "godown," or storeroom. As he opened the door a strange sight met his gaze. A cobra had managed to get into the room and had been attracted by an empty biscuit tin—in American parlance a tin cracker box—about 12 by 6, in which some crumbs were still remaining.

The cover had not been well opened, and the edges were jagged. The cobra had pressed his head inside to lick up the crumbs, but he could not get it out again. The more he tried, the more difficult did it become.

In his rage his hood expanded and was lacerated by the sharp edges of the tin, and upon this he began to lash about with his tail. Pop, pop, went bottles of champagne and beer; these were the reports which had been heard within, and they had given the signal which brought his executioners to the spot.—Youth's Companion.

In France a man on entering the bonds of matrimony renders himself legally responsible, not only for the support of his wife, but for that of her parents, in case they should become destitute, and the same obligation is incurred by the wife in regard to the father and mother of her husband.

Coal equaling that of the finest Lehigh valley grade has been discovered in Brazil, the veins being from four to twenty-five feet in thickness. The mines are situated at and near Sonora.

What Your Great Grandmother Did.

She betcheled the flax and carded the wool, and wove the linen, and spun the tow, and made the clothes for her husband and ten children. She made butter and cheese, she dipped tallow candles, to light the house at night, and she cooked all the food for her household by an open fire place and a brick oven. Yes; and when she was forty years of age, she was already an old lady whose best days were over. Her shoulders were bent and her joints enlarged by hard work, and she wore spectacles and a cap.

Her great granddaughter, with all the modern conveniences for comfort, refinement and luxury, may be as charming and attractive at forty-five as at twenty. Especially is this true if she preserves her health by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which wards off all female ailments and irregularities, cures them if they already exist, keeps the life-current healthful and vigorous, and enables the woman of middle age to retain the freshness of girlhood upon brow and cheek, the light of youth in her eyes, and its elasticity in her step.

Go to your drug store, pay a dollar, get a bottle and try it—try a second, a third if necessary. Before the third one's been taken you'll know that there's a remedy to help you. Then you'll keep on and a cure'll come.

But if you shouldn't feel the help, should be disappointed in the results — you'll find a guarantee printed on the bottle-wrapper that'll get your money back for you.

PORTLAND, OREGON,

The Great Western Railway Terminus!
The Great Pacific Seaport City!

Real Estate is the Basis of all Wealth.

AN INVESTMENT THAT WILL NET.

20% to 30%

99 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money. 87 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center, has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now pre-eminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland.

These Advantages Guarantee Constantly Increasing Values in Real Estate.

THE TAWOOD REAL ESTATE COMPANY
PORTLAND, OREGON,

Has the best plan for investors yet devised. You never read anything more explicit and simple. It is absolutely safe, and cannot fail to be profitable to all who invest.

WHY JIM DIDN'T SHOOT.

It recently fell to my lot to pass a Sunday in a small Kansas town, and as it was a wet day I was forced to remain in the greater part of it cooped up in the little hotel. The house had no other guest, and so for the want of better company I went to the office and entered into conversation with the landlord, a tall, sunbronzed, leathery-featured man past middle age, who I soon learned, had spent many years in the West, and who had seen some rough as well as interesting experiences, and who was chuck full of reminiscences.

After we had talked for a couple of hours on various subjects, my host suddenly remarked:

—"I reckon, stranger, you've heard tell of 'Big Jim, as we allus called him."

"No, I think not;" I was compelled to admit, though I realized from the tone in which the question was asked that it was a humilating admission to make.

"Never!" the landlord repeated. "Wal, that's strange. Thought shorely ever'body knowed 'bout Jim. He was the foremost man on the border, an' he made a record that'll stand a good many years. He was a great man, Jim was; a wonderful feller, shore. Tough! oh my, stranger, I reckon he was. He wasn't afeard of nothin', an' I guess the happiest times he ever knowed was when he was mixed up in a shootin' scrape. Thar's no tellin' how many men Jim killed first an' last, for he was so reckless he'd just pop 'em over at the crook of a finger, an' didn't no more keer for it than nothin'. Twixt you an' me, stranger, I think Jim carried the shootin' business a leetle to fer. I like fer a man to stand up fer his rights, and if a feller needs drappin', why then drap 'im; but there ain't no call fer gettin' too blamed promisc'us 'bout it an' puttin' a hole through a chap jest fer the fun of it.

"I reckon, stranger, every man what Jim made up his mind to kill caught it, 'cept one, an' that one, I guess was the last one he ever laid off to plant."

"Jim caught it that time himself, eh?" I suggested.

"No, he didn't," the landlord replied in a tone of slight disgust. "Narry time, sir. Jim wasn't the man to be planted premachoorly, an' the feller that could drap 'im never lived."

"How did it happen that he didn't kill the man you speak of, then?" I asked.

"Wal, sir, it was a quaire piece of business, that was, an' one o' the most techin' things I ever see. I never knowed a feller so broke up in all my life as Jim was, an', sir, it was nobody but a little gal that done it—a little bit o' shaver, 'bout six or seven years old, I reckon, an' the poorest peekedist little thing I ever set eyes on.

"Want to hear 'bout it, eh? Wal, the way of it was this:

"You see 'bout the time Oklahoma was opened for settlement, Big Jim, an' me, an' four other fellers was herdin' on a range in Western Texas. We'd been up in the territory herdin' a right smart, but the soldiers drove us out with the rest of the cattle fellers, you know, and so we laid down on the border sorter waitin' for developments.

"While we was in the territory we picked out a valley what had 'bout three thousan' acres o' the best land an' richest grass I ever see anywhere, an' we 'lowed as soon as the country was open for settlement we'd come back an' take possession of it an' make a ranch thar in spite o' all creation.

"Wal, by an' by the President issued his proclamation, an' then when the day fer enterin' the Territory come 'round we moved in with our cattle an' took possession of the valley.

"'Now,' said I that night as we squatted 'bout our camp-fire, 'if none o' those blamed settlers don't come foolin' 'round yere to take up claims in this valley we're fixed, for this'll make one o' the nicest little ranches in the country.'

"'Wal,' said Big Jim, with an oath, 'if any settler wants to take a claim yere, an' thinks he can, jis' let him try it. I 'low he'll find out mouty blamed soon that he's undertook a most miserable unhealthy job. This valley's ours an' we're goin' to hold it spite o' the dickens; an' I can tell you right now, fellers, that I'll shoot the first chap what offers to stop here. I'll make sich a example of him that ther won't another settler come in forty mile of us.'

Wal, we was purty well tired out so we turned in quick as supper was over' an' we slept like logs till mornin.' When we woke the sun was up, an' the fust thing we see when we glanced 'cross the valley was a old covered wagon not more'n a quarter of a mile away. The wagon had come in, I recon, jis' after we went to sleep, an' the folks had put up a tent like as if they were fixin' to stay. Big Jim he took a squint at the outfit, then he tore loose an' swore fit to set a sword afire. Then he got his pistols, an' when somebody axed what he was goin' to do, he said:

"'I'm goin' over thar an, wipe that derned settler out. I'm goin' to shoot him so full o' lead that he'll weigh a ton. I'll break up this squatter business right on the start.'

"I knowed Big Jim meant what he said, an' I felt kind o' sorry for the settler, but I didn't say nothin.' Me an' the other boys jest set down an' watched Jim as he strided 'cross the prairie, an' waited to see what was goin' to happen.

"When Jim got up sorter close to the wagon we see him draw his gun an' git ready to shoot, then we see him edge up a little closer kinder keerful like, then all to once we seen him stop an' wait like he was listening at somethin'.

"Wal, I reckon most a half hour must a passed that way, an' we got to wondering what made Jim stan' there actin' like that, when all at once he whirled 'round an' come back to us lookin' the soberest an' solemnest I ever seen a feller look in all my life. By gosh, stranger, you may not believe it, but I'd most swear they was tears in old Jim's eyes, an' I know when he spoke to us his voice was all a-tremble like his feelin's was too much for him.

"It was a good bit before Jim said a word, an' all the time he jes set thar on a inverted bucket nussin' his head in his hands, an' actin' as if he was dreadful cut up. We stood 'round an' looked at him, a-wonderin' what it meant, but after awhile I ventured to speak to him, sayin': 'What's ailin' you, Jim?'

"Then he raised his head sorter slow like, an' in a tone so sad an' indifferent from what his allus was, that I didn't recognize it, he said:

"'Boys, I'm jis' completely upsot by what I heard over thar, an' feel so blame sneakin' mean that I've a great notion to shoot myself. I never knowed before how onery I am.'

"Course we was all 's'prised at that sort 'o talk from Jim, 'cause he was so blamed tough we didn't s'pose nothing 'ud tech his heart, and we was anxious to know what he'd heard over to the wagon, an' so we axed him.

"'Wal,' he said, "I went over thar to shoot that settler, an' I was slippin' up to the wagon to git the draw on him, when all at once I heard a voice—the meekest, pitifulest little voice I ever heard in my life, an' I knowed in a minute it was the voice of a leetle gal.'

"Jim's voice choked up so he couldn't say nothin' more, so he waited a moment, an' then he went on:

"'Fellers,' he said, 'that voice jest went through me like a knife, an' I never felt so cussed quaire since I was born. It was so weak, an' so pitiful, an' so helpless like. I heard it say:

"'Is the land pretty, pa? Is it green with grass like the old home back East?'

"'Yes, it is very beautiful, darling,' a man replied like he was cryin'. 'It's very pretty, an' you will find the green prairie almost as nice as the big meadow back at the old home. When you get well you can romp over the plain and gather flowers and be very happy.'

"'I ain't never goin' to be well any more, pa,' the little voice said, 'and I won't never gather no flowers nor romp over the prairie; but I'm glad it's pretty, 'cause when I'm in Heaven where the angels are, an' where everything is so beautiful an' bright, I want to know that you an' ma have a nice home like the old one we lost. I won't be with you very long now, pa, 'cause I can hear the angels singin', an' I know they're comin' to take me away. Don't cry, dear pa an' ma, 'cause I ain't sorry to go—only I don't like to leave you. I'm so glad you're goin' to have a beautiful home where the grass an the flowers grow; an' sometimes, maybe, I'll come back to see you.'

"Wal, big Jim, he told over all what the leetle gal said, an' I never see anybody what talked so gentle an' kind as he did.

"'Fellows,' he said in conclusion, 'I never felt so awful as I did while I was standin' there listenin' to them words o' that child. 'Peared like every one of 'em was a knife, an' that she was stabbin' 'em into my cussed, wicked heart; an' though they hurt terrible I wanted 'em to stab deeper, 'cause I knowed I deserved it. Thar I was sneakin' up thar like a low-down onery thief, intendin' to shoot that feller fer tryin to git a home, while he was in ther nussin' his dyin' child an' her a talkin' 'bout the grass an' the flowers, an' the old home back East, an' the angels an' heaven. Boys, I'd a been glad if a streak o' lighnin' had struck me right then an' ther.'

"Wal, sir, we never heard nothin' more 'bout keepin' settlers off'en the valley, an' we never tried to hold none of it 'cept what the law 'titled us to hold. Big Jim an' all the rest of us helped the settlers ever'way, we could and when the angels came fer his leetle gal an' took her spirit away, we made a grave on the prairie an' buried her whar the grass growed and whar Big Jim planted a tree an' some flowers. I never see old Jim cry before, stranger, but he shed tears over that grave like the leetle gal was his own, and from that day he was a different man, an' as kind an' gentle as a woman."—Thomas P. Montfort in Detroit Free Press.

SCHOOLBOY NICKNAMES.

Curious Cognomens Given Boys at School.

Schoolboys are almost invariably known to their fellows by some strange sobriquets, rarely indeed, by their proper names. The variation of these is extremely curious, and sometimes considerable quickness in seizing upon a peculiarity is shown in fitting a new boy with a nickname which will last the whole of his school career, and very possibly will descend, as is often the case, to the brothers who may succeed him. In one school five brothers who attended the school consecutively, were known by the name of "Bones." The family name being Jones, the transition was easy and natural.

A very curious nickname was that of the boy who was known as "Duodecim Snails," and it was acquired in a funny way. The class was engaged at a Latin lesson, and to a question of the master this boy replied "duodecim" instead of "duodecimus" to the amusement of the class generally. Later in the lesson, the same boy in translating Virgil hesitated at a word. A boy next to him mischievously whispered "snails," and, without a moment's thought, the translator repeated the word. There was a roar of laughter, in which the master joined, and ever after that boy was "Duodecim Snails."

If a stranger overheard a boy talking to another about "the Rats" he might be puzzled, yet this cognomen was borne by three brothers who attended the school together. The Christian name of the elder was Ratcliffe, which was capable of convenient abbreviation, and when the younger brothers came to the school the three were known as "the Rats."

Sometimes the same boy is known by an enormous number of names. The writer remembers a case in which several fellows once calculated that another boy in the school bore between forty and fifty nicknames. Some of these were doubtless improvised for the occasion, but most of them were quite genuine. Needless to say, this boy was one of the best-tempered in the school.

A tall, thin boy was always known as "the Broomstick," and another who had spent part of his life in India was called indiscriminately "the Thug" or "Buddha."—Tid-Bits.

Very Ill, Indeed.

"La me!" sighed Mrs. Partington, "here I have been suffering the bigamies of death for three mortal weeks. First I was seized with a bleeding phrenology in the left hampshire of the brain, which was exceeded by a stoppage of the left ventilator of the heart. This gave me an inflammation in the bereax, and now I'm sick with the chloroform morbus."

FED HER BABY BURNT WHISKY.

The Deed of a Depraved Michigan Woman Likely to Result in Murder.

Mrs. Annie Pryor of Albion, Mich., confesses to having fed her baby daughter, less than 2 years old, with burnt whiskey. The child was found in a drunken stupor, and the mother calmly admitted having forced the little one to drink the liquor.

The Pryor woman is a confirmed inebriate, and the authorities have for sometime contemplated taking the child from her custody. The tender age of the child and the mother's apparent fondness for it deterred them from their designs for a time.

However, they determined to proceed against the woman. Constable Graham proceeded to her house to arrest her as a tippler. He found a most horrible state of affairs. Across the disordered bed lay the depraved and sodden mother insensible with liquor. The baby lay in the middle of the floor. Graham shook her gently at first and then more violently, but she did not awaken. Hastily bringing some water he bathed the baby's face, thinking the shock of the cold water might rouse her. In so doing he encountered the liquor-laden breath of the infant. The child was drunk.

A physican was summoned, and worked over the child several hours before it opened its eyes. The child is now burning up with fever, and there is small chance for its recovery.

The mother was arraigned before Justice Hughes. She affected the utmost indifference when reproached with her conduct toward the child.

"I like the burnt whiskey," she said, "and what's good for me is good fo: baby."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

An Enterprising Sportsman.

A San Franciscan who had been hunting in the vicinity of Lake Tahoe without bagging any game came upon a mountaineer who was feeding a caged wildcat he had caught the day before.

"How much will you take for that beast?" he asked. The captor said $30, and the money was paid over. "Now," said the Nimrod, "tie one end of a strong cord to that tree and another to the cat's neck, and then open the door of the cage." This was finally accomplished, and the fierce animal stood straining at its tether. The sportsman, who was watching the exercises from the interior of the cabin, leveled his rifle across the window sill, took careful aim and blazed away. The wildcat gave a joyful yell and disappeared into the forest. The bullet had cut the rope!—Chicago Times.

A Bright Young Lady

Who edits a special department in one of the best country weeklies of Minnesota, was lately a delegate to a gathering of representative ladies, held at a point on "The Burlington." In speaking of the connection, and the journey to and fro, she writes to her paper.

"A very pleasant ride to Winona was enjoyed, which was greatly due to the superior accommodations and excellent management of "The Burlington." The conductors and trainmen were very courteous. A better route could not have been chosen; the road was smooth and the chair cars gave one almost the ease of a home. The road wound in and out in gentle curves, now along the banks of the flowing river, then dashing between tall bluffs, or running along by rippling brooks, which constantly afforded the travelers varied and delightful scenery. Before leaving the cars the ladies fastened to the bell rope a neat card tied with the white ribbon and bearing the words: 'Acknowledgements of the State W. C. T. U. Convention, Winona, Sept. 1—5.' All certainly had appreciated the kindness of 'The Burlington.'"

This route is famous from Lake Michigan to the Pacific Coast for its attention to the comfort of ladies traveling without escort. For rates, maps, and any information, call on any agent of this or connecting lines, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

"August Flower"

Biliousness, Constipation, Stomach Pains.

"I have been afflicted with biliousness and constipation for fifteen years; first one and then another preparation was suggested to me and tried but to no purpose. At last a friend recommended August Flower. I took it according to directions and its effects were wonderful, relieving me of those disagreeable stomach pains which I had been troubled with so long. Words cannot describe the admiration in which I hold your August Flower—it has given me a new lease of life, which before was a burden. Such a medicine is a benefaction to humanity, and its good qualities and wonderful merits should be made known to everyone suffering with dyspepsia or biliousness

A WORLD-WONDERFUL OFFER.

The Weekly Pioneer Press, for one Year, and the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica for $7.50.

By a fortunate arrangement with the publishers of the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, the Pioneer Press is enabled to make an offer which twelve months ago would have been regarded as impossible, not to say ridiculous.

Any one, parent or child, teacher or pupil, employer or employe, sending to the Pioneer Press Company, St. Paul, Minn., $7.50 will receive in return, and absolutely free of all delivery charges, the Weekly Pioneer Press for one year and a complete set of the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica.

This magnificent work is comprised in twenty octavo volumes of seven thousand pages, fourteen thousand columns and eight million words, and has ninety-six maps, printed in colors. It is most emphatically "up to date" in all relating to art, literature and science, and has four thousand biographies of dead or living celebrities. It is the most complete dictionary of America extant and contains all the information of the Encyclopedia Britannica and hundreds of additional facts. It is preeminently modern and peculiarly correct.

No such offer was ever made by a newspaper before. No such offer could have been made one month ago. The twenty volumes are bound in heavy jute manilla; the paper of the printed pages is excellent, and the type, maps and illustrations are the same as used in the sheep, Russian or calf-skin bound editions.

Present subscribers to the Weekly Pioneer Press by sending $7.50 will receive the Encyclopedia as described above and will have their paper continued one year from the expiration of their present subscription.

No charge for delivery. You can send your distant friend the Weekly and the twenty volumes for $7.50

In nothing has the wonderful improvement of modern machinery over the old appliances been more marked than in tools for drilling deep into the earth for pure water, and in no line of business is there as good a chance for an energetic man with a small capital to become independent. Any man can make money rapidly who is intelligent, energetic and has a small capital. The business is easily learned and the demand is absolutely unlimited. The profits are large when improved machinery is used. Great improvements have been made in this line within the past year or two, and Rogers & Ordway, St. Paul, Minn., carry a complete line of machinery suitable for any depth or formation. Any man who wants to learn more regarding this matter will do well to send to Rogers & Ordway for an illustrated catalogue, which will give him a more detailed description of the different styles of machines carried, as well as a list of Wind Mills, Pumps, Fittings, etc., which go with this business.

GOHEEN IS HANGED.

Adelbert Goheen, Her Slayer, Is Hanged at Fergus Falls Soon After Midnight.

He Marched to the Gallows as Erect as a Soldier Without a Flinch or Tremor.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Special Telegram, Oct. 23, 1 a. m.—Adelbert Goheen was hanged at 12:15 for the murder of Rosa Bray.

At 11:30 Goheen was taken to the second floor of the jail. He walked nimbly up the stairs and cast a furtive glance at the trap as he passed by it into a side room.

At 12 o'clock the priest knelt down and prayed with him for about two minutes. Then the sheriff slipped in and handcuffed his hands behind his back. The priest led the way to the trap. Goheen followed with Sheriff Billings in the rear. He marched out as erect as a soldier. There was not a flinch or a tremor as he passed into the hall, he looked up at the rope and took his position on the trap. He was then strapped as usual.

Sheriff Billings then said, "Adelbert, have you anything to say?" He said, "Gentlemen, you see one way of dying." As the black cap was being put on him and the priest said the Lord's prayer, "Let her go, Jack," said Goheen, and the sheriff pulled the trap. Then there was a heavy fall and a slight rebound and the rope straightened. It seems that the noose slipped around a little and his neck was broken. He died of strangulation. The body was allowed to hang about twenty-five minutes. Goheen died as he said he would. No more nervy man ever stood on a death trap.

The greater part of the evening was spent in playing on the accordeon and listening to the priest's reading. At 11 o'clock he was given an oyster stew which he ate with a relish. At 11 o'clock every reporter was excluded from the jail and only the officials and spectators allowed by law were present.

WHY HE DIED.

History of the Crime and the Trial Which Resulted in Conviction.

Monday morning, March 28, the body of Rosa Bray was found on the Great Northern railroad crossing, near Broadway, in Fergus Falls. She had evidently been dead some time and the body was frozen stiff. It was at first supposed she had frozen to death, but at the inquest two bullet wounds were discovered, one back of the ear and the other in her breast. Either would have caused instant death. It was learned that Adelbert Goheen, who had been intimate with the woman, had disappeared on Sunday, the 22d. Search for him began, but it was not successful. The following Sunday morning he returned home voluntarily and was arrested.

At the trial parties testified that Miss Bray was to meet Goheen that night; that he was seen going toward her rooms. Two people were seen walking on the Great Northern track who resembled Goheen and Miss Bray. Two shots were heard. Afterward a man was seen running who resembled Goheen. Deputy Sheriff Johnson described Goheen's actions when arrested. On his person were found a number of 38-caliber cartridges, which he was trying to hide, being the same size as those found in the woman's body. Bowmaster, a fellow convict of Goheen's at Stillwater, visited Goheen in jail, and testified that he had asked Goheen if he killed the girl and that Goheen did not make any answer, but winked at him. Goheen's brother, Anderson, and his mother testified that he was not out of the house that evening; that he slept with Anderson that night and both retired at 8 p. m. Goheen's father refused to testify to this. It took the jury just twenty hours to agree and it brought in a verdict of guilty.

One day he made a statement to County Attorney Daly, in the presence of Sheriff Billings and Mr. Mason, in which he asserted that his brother, Anderson, was the murderer of Rosa Bray. He gave details of the occurrence, claiming that he saw it all from a distance. He accounted for his presence by saying that he was suspicious of him and his victim, and had followed them. He gave such a clear statement of the matter that the officers thought it advisable to look Anderson up. He was arrested at Moorhead and brought here for trial. At the preliminary examination Goheen refused to go on the stand to testify against Anderson and the prisoner was discharged. Goheen has made several threats that he would never be hung.

KILLED A HALF-BREED.

Tragedy on an Indian Reservation Caused by an Old Feud.

Spokane, Wash., Special Telegram, Oct. 23.—News reached here tonight of a tragedy at Little Katharine's ranch on Colville Indian reservation, near the mouth of Boundary creek, Tuesday, when Duncan Travel, a half-breed, was shot and instantly killed by James Brown, one of the best known miners and prospecters in that section. After the shooting Brown started to Marcus to give himself up, but was met by an Indian policeman, to whom he surrendered, and was taken to Marcus yesterday.

The killing was the outgrowth of a feud of several years' standing, and Little Katharine, who is a half-breed Indian woman possessed of considerable property, is said to be at the bottom of it.

Brown says Travel had threatened to shoot him, and when they met accidentally at Little Katharine's ranch he felt that his own life was in danger and shot Travel dead with his Winchester.

Made a Good Haul.

Crookston, Minn., Special Telegram, Oct. 23.—The postoffice here was entered by burglars early this morning and a big haul made. Entrance was effected through a window in the rear, which was pried open. A hole was then drilled through the safe and it was blown open and hastily robbed of its contents. Three thousand five hundred dollars in stamps were taken, besides $100 in currency and a large package of registered letters. The amount of the money contained in the registered letter is not accurately known, but it is estimated in the neighborhood of $2,000—over $1,200 is positively known to have been taken.

The noise of the explosion attracted the attention of one policeman and he gave chase and fired several shots after them, which were returned by the burglars with such vigor that he was obliged to give up the chase.

The stamps were recovered to-day. They were found hidden in some boxes back of the postoffice. The police authorities have been scouring the country in every direction and this evening arrested three men who it is believed were connected with the robbery.

Illicit Love Ends in Death.

Telluride, Colo., Oct. 23.—A murder and suicide occurred here last night. The principals were Mrs. A. E. Watson and J. A. Mercer, express messenger on the Denver & Rio Grande Southern railroad. Mercer, although married, has been living with Mrs. Watson here. Last night they quarreled and three shots were heard by the neighbors. On entering the room, Mrs. Watson was found dead, with a bullet hole in her head, and Mercer with one through his shoulder and another in his head. Mercer made the statement that the woman had shot him, when she turned the weapon upon herself and killed herself. He then took the revolver and inflicted another wound upon himself.

DEATH ON THE RAIL.

An Entire Passenger Train in France Thrown Over the Embankment Forty Feet High.

Paris, Oct. 27.—A passenger train on the railway between Lyons and Grenoble was derailed near Moirans to-day and ran over an embankment. A number of the carriages were telescoped and many persons were killed and thirty seriously injured.

The train, which was running at a high rate of speed at the time of the accident, was drawn by two locomotives. The accident occurred on a steep incline and curve, and is supposed to have been due to a defect in the brake of the second locomotive. The embankment over which the train rolled is forty feet high. A dozen carriages lie in a shapeless heap at the foot of the bank.

According to late particulars from the scene of the accident, fifteen persons were killed and fifty were injured. Three of the injured are not expected to survive the night, and fifteen others are in a critical condition, one person having both legs broken. The bodies of two of the victims are crushed and mangled beyond recognition.

A relief train has arrived at the scene of the accident, and the work of rescue is being carried on with the aid of torchlights. The scene is a sickening one. One of the rescued is a little girl who was found crying and caressing her dead mother.

DYNAMITERS AT WORK.

An Attempt to Wreck the Office of a McCarthy Publication.

Dublin, Oct. 27.—Great excitement was caused in this city this evening by an apparent attempt to blow up the office of the National Press, the organ of the McCarthyites.

The members of the staff of the papers were just on the point of beginning the night's work when a bomb fell in the area in front of the windows on Abbey street, where the editors' rooms are situated. The bomb exploded with a tremendous report, but fortunately there was no one in these particular rooms at the time and consequently no one was hurt. If the missile had been intended to injure anybody in the editorial room there is no doubt the effort would have been pre-eminently successful, for the window glass was broken, the casings shattered and the furniture in the room badly damaged. The offices in the basement were also badly damaged, and, indeed, windows in all the adjacent houses were broken.

The wildest rumors were spread, and an enormous crowd quickly collected. For a time there was much excitement. Notwithstanding every effort was made to search out the miscreant the authorities thus far are without any clew whatever. It was noted at the time of the explosion by those who were present that the fumes arising from the exploded bomb had a very offensive odor.

Almost universally the credit for the outrage is given to the Parnellites. The report of the explosion was heard distinctly two miles away. The attention of the watchman on duty at the time, and who is said to have always been on duty since the Parnellite threats of vengeance were uttered, was diverted by a sham fight between two men in the vicinity of the National Press building.

CAUSED BY FLOODS.

A Celebrated Leaning Tower in Spain in Danger of Falling.

Madrid, Oct. 27.—A terrible storm that has prevailed for several days shows no signs of abating. The principal rivers throughout the entire country are rising steadily and rapidly. The celebrated leaning tower at Saragossa (the tower of Felipe, which leans about nine feet out of the perpendicular, and so well known to foreign sight-seers) has been undermined by the gathering waters and threatens to totally collapse.

At Gerona the streets are flooded so as to be impassable except for small boats, and the railways in and about Valencia have been washed away and partly destroyed. Along the northern shores of the Mediterranean several wrecks have been reported.

STILL RAINING IN ENGLAND.

London, Oct. 27.—The floods in England, a result of the recent two weeks of successive heavy gales, continue to do a great amount of damage. The river Thames, for instance, in some places extends for a mile or so beyond its banks. The town of Eton and many of the streets of Windsor are impassable, and punts (flat-bottomed boats, are being used to convey people from house to house.

The downpour of rain has been incessant throughout England since Sunday afternoon. The heavy gale on the east coast continues. There were many exciting scenes at the wharf near Yarmouth. Many vessels were driven ashore there, and there were several gallant rescues by means of life boats and the rocket apparatus. The Ketch Viceroy has been wrecked near St. Ives, on the coast of Cornwall. Her crew are missing. The boat with the corpse of a seaman on board was found on her beam ends.

Promptly Rearrested.

London, Oct. 26.—Edward Pinter, alias Sheeny Al, an American who was sent to prison here last July charged with a bungling attempt to swindle a Bond street jeweler out of $40,000, was discharged from confinement to-day, his term having expired. He was, however, promptly rearrested. He had been imprisoned for fraudulently pretending to be able to manufacture gold, and for the experiments he had been entrusted with large amounts of specie. He is now wanted for frauds relating to a "philosopher's stone," the victims in this case living in Switzerland. Pinter seems to have driven his nefarious traffic all over Europe.

Troublous Days for Politicians.

Cork, Oct. 27.—John O'Connor, member of parliament for South Tipperary, complains that he has been followed when calling at the residences or places of business of voters while campaigning for the Parnellite candidate for Cork city, John E. Redmond, by Canon O'Mahoney and other priests, who openly denounced him as being one of "Kittie O'Shea's men," and who told the people to hunt him from their houses. John E. Redmond, annoyed at certain statements made by Mr. Healy, says that if the latter continues to abuse him, he will publicly slap his face in the streets of this city, even if he gets six months' imprisonment for so doing.

Bold Burglary in Omaha.

Omaha, Oct. 27.—Four masked men entered the office of the Ames avenue barn of the Omaha Street Railway company early this morning, and at the point of revolvers compelled Supt. Beals and two assistants to throw up their hands while the burglars blew open the safe. The safe door was blown twenty feet, and the car cleaners and others employed in the barn proper rushed up to the office to see what was the matter. They were met at the door by two of the burglars with drawn revolvers, who instructed them to return to work, which they did. The safe contained $1,200, all of which was taken. The telephone line to the city had been cut, and the police were not notified until an hour after the burglars had escaped.

BREVITIES.

Wheat is 80 cents.

Elmer Stranahan left today for Crookston on business.

K. O. Gigstad has taken a position in E. M. Hoff's store.

W. E. Kelsey, of Crookston, was in town today on business.

The new warehouse is completed and ready for business.

E. M. Hoff went down to Crookston today on business.

Emil Holmes was down to Crookston last Monday on business.

The weather has been all that could be desired for the past week.

If you want to insure your buildings against fire, call at this office.

O. H. Heters made a business trip to Stephen last Friday returning on Monday.

Messrs. Ericsson and Funk, of Crookston, were in town yesterday on business.

Business is quiet and will so continue until after the wheat commences to move.

The North Star Lung and Throat Balsam is sure cure for coughs and colds.

Judge Hanson was in Crookston a couple of days the first of the week on business.

A. Wright, of Thief River Falls, was in town last Monday on his way to Grand Forks.

C. G. Rapp went down to Crookston on business last Friday returning by stage on Saturday.

Cy. Haywood, the genial representative of the McCormick Binder Co., was in town last week.

Holmes Bros. have just received a fine line of heating stoves. Call and examine their stock.

P. M. Dauser wishes to announce that he will be at Thief River Falls Nov. 3d, and until noon the 4th.

Miller Fricker has been buying considerable wheat lately and the mill is running steadily. They are making an excellent grade of flour.

Messrs. Huset and Fulton rode their bicycles up to Thief River Falls last Sunday. They report that the roads were not favorable to wheeling.

Photographer Dauser, of Crookston, arrived today with his photographing outfit and will spend several days here. He is a good workman and will undoubtedly do considerable business.

Wheat is being marketed here very slowly this fall not over a hundred bushels coming in daily. It looks now as if very little would be marketed until after it freezes up, as the roads are still in a very bad condition.

A. A. Erickson was in from his farm the first of the week and informed us that he was the proud father of a bouncing baby boy, born last Saturday. Here's luck, August. May he prove as big and useful as his dad.

We call your attention to the new advertisement of E. M. Hoff in this issue. Mr. Hoff evidently means business and it will pay yod to look his stock over and get prices before going elsewhere.

S. M. Damard has about completed the moving of the lumber yard. They have taken considerable pains in laying it out in the new location and will have a very neat yard. The old Steenerson building is being remodeled into an office.

Considerable threshing is being done throughout the country, all of the machines in this vicinity being at work. Many are having considerable trouble about moving their machines and a large number of farmers cannot thresh until after it freezes up.

We certainly have considerable of a kick coming from the Great Northern for the train they are sending up here at present. It is far from pleasant for ladies and others to have to ride in a combined first class car, smoking car, baggage, express and mail car. We should think that the company could at least afford a dilapidated caboose for a smoking car.

A. J. McLaughlin returned last Monday where he had been for the past two weeks under a doctors care. He is still rather stiff from the effects of the shot but is able to get around and do business. He was very fortunate in recovering so rapidly.

Some are of the opinion that the rains last month which so delayed the farmers with their work was the best thing that ever happened to this country inasmuch as it has killed the grasshopper eggs and this will be the last of the pests.

Constable Martin Williams received a telegram last Saturday from County Attorney Holston to arrest Frank Rossini who has been at work here for the past week painting. Mr. Williams took his prisoner to Crookston on Sunday. Rossini was arrested on charge of compounding a felony.

News has been scarce the past week, but we confidently expected up to the hour of going to press, that we would be able to announce that some more prisoners had escaped from the county jail. We have, however, been fooled this week. Probably the jail is empty.

The Minnesota World's Fair Commission have issued an address, asking that each county in the state contribute in proportion to its assessed valuation, its share of $100,000. The amount assessed against Polk county is $1,100. We do not know of any action being taken in this matter in this county as yet.

It is estimated that our grain exports this year will reach a total value of $539,250,000, Last year we exported only $48,150,000 worth. It is impossible to estimate the benefits this country will derive through the immense amount of money which will this year come from Europe and remain in circulation here. It is enough to insure good times for years to come.

The Albert Lea Standard has been looking up a colony of 50 settlers who left Albert Lea and vicinity a year or two ago and settled in the Puget Sound region. The Standard finds that only three or four have bettered themselves and most of the rest would be glad to be back to old Minnesota the land of plenty. Minnesota is a good place to stick to.

Crookston Daily Tribune: One James J. Shield was before Justice Spendely on Saturday afternoon, on charge of compromising felony. The trial was adjourned until today. In the matter referred to it is charged that the defendant participated in settling the case of the State of Minnesota vs Mrs. Dufour on the charge of keeping a house of ill fame. In the latter case one Rossini was the complaining witness against Mrs. Dufour and it is alleged that the latter paid Rossini $20. to settle the case through the instrumentality of Shield.

A boom edition from Montana says among other things: "We have no floods, no drouth, no cyclone, no prohibition, no short haired women or long haired men, no women suffrage, no anti-tights bill (the tenderfoot can get on as many tights as he wishes) and the femal form divine is not boycotted, no Mafia, no Mollie Maguires, no White Caps, no Sockless Jerries, no miasma, no Foraker and no fire alarm mouth, no train robberies, no yellow fever—and Prince Russell out of the state most of the time."—Ex.

It has leaked out that Mr. Andrew Carnegie has imported a fourteen gallon keg of choice Scotch whiskey and sent it to the executive mansion. If the whiskey dosen't leak out likewise there ought to be no complaint from any quarter. Mr. Harrison's rheumatiz must be pretty bad this fall when he needs liniment in such large quantities, for it is well known no Presbyterian elder could have any use for the stuff that would make 1,120 flowing bowls by actual count, if it fell into the hands of an ungodly man. Beu'll be meaner'n pusley, though, if he dosen't let Blaine have a nip now and then when the mornings are foggy.

The Donnelly lible suit against the Pioneer Press was tried last week at Minneapolis. It will be remembered that the Pioneer Press published last winter during the session of the legislature a letter written by Col. Wm. King some twelve years ago which said some very hard things about Mr. Donnelly, who immediately commenced a suit for libel asking one hundred thousand dollars damages. The trial last five days and the jury returned a verdict for Mr. Donnelly for one dollar, which is virtually a verdict in favor of the Pioneer Press Company. Col. King and other witnesses swore to stories which, if true, ought to end the political career of Ignatius Donnelly. Mr. Donnelly was on the stand in his own behalf and flatly denied everything. The jury, however, seems to have put most faith in Col. King.

Some very important elections will take place next Tuesday Nov 3d. In New York, Iowa and Ohio entire state tickets are to be elected and a great deal of excitement exists. In New York the Democrats have split and the Republicans claim to have a good show of winning. They are making a hard fight and the election will be close. In Iowa the Republicans are badly hampered with the prohibition law but party leaders claim they will win. In Ohio the battle has waged fiercely for the last three months and both sides seem confident of victory. The result will be anxiously awaited for all over the country as it will have considerable influence on next years presidential politics. It looks to us as if the Republicans would safely carry Ohio and Iowa, while the Democrats seem to have a trifle the best of it in New York.

Minnesota has adopted the dangerous, and anamolas principle which disgraces our own law, that criminals condemned to die shall be put to death secretly. Executions there must take place between midnight and dawn and out of sight of reporters. What is done in the dark and by stealth is seldom done well and William Rose who was hanged the other morning, was hanged twice. The rope broke the first time, and then before he rose to his feet another rope was twisted round his neck, and the man was strangled slowly. Such, at least, is what is said, but what actually happened is not surely known. The imaginative will shudder and the thoughtful will wonder what further horrors will be perpetrated with impunity out of sight of the fearless servants of the people and of truth between midnight and the dawn.—New York Sun.

A meeting of the County Commissioners was held at the court house on Wednesday evening for the purpose of appointing a superintendent of schools, to succeed the late Supt. Grefthen. Only four members of the board were present viz: Commissioners Kirsch, Stortroen, Demers and Johnson. Applications were presented from Y. D. Carruth Rev. S. Curry, W. F. Hitchcock, Frank Deming, A. D. Wishard and A. Jenks. The first two named applicants took the lead in the contest and the vote was divided—two each between them—with an occasional vote for one or the other applicants. Ten ballots were taken when it becoming evident that a choice could not be made, a motion to adjourn sine die was carried, and the matter will not come up again until the December meeting. In the meantime Prof. Carruth will have charge of the affairs of the office and will be acting superintendent until an election is made—Crookston Times.

W. M. Dreary, of the firm of Taylor & Dreary, Red Lake Falls, made a trip through the Red Lake district visited by a tornado and reports in the Red Lake Falls News that the loss is much greater than has been stated. "The cyclone" he said "started on the Red Lake reservation about ten miles from Rainy river and pursued a southeastern course, ending near Swan Lake. It fairly mowed down the timber on a strip from three to fourteen miles in width and sixty miles in length. Trees three feet in thickness were snapped off near the ground. The state lost considerable timber, but the government much more on land unsurveyed. Private parties, too, lost a little. It was the worst blow down I ever saw. There were many homesteaders squatting on this unsurveyed government land who packed up their belongings and left, considering that the timber had been as good as destroyed." In speaking of the reports that are frequently heard in regard to timber stealing in the Rainy River country, Mr. D. said they were much exaggerated. The government may have lost a little timber in this way but it was confined almost entirely to that standing conveniantly near Rainy River.

Washington Oct. 26. The return of Secretary Blaine to this city and his resumption of his official duties, sets at rest the rumor-maker and all of his rumors. That Mr. Blaine is now past his sixtieth year, that he has suffered many family bereavements; has endured many and great political dissapointments; that he is aging and growing weaker year by year, in accordance with the irrevocable laws of nature—all these things are true. But that he is unable or unwilling to become a presidential candidate, if such shall be the will of the republican party, cannot be positively asserted. His recent letter concerning the McKinley bill, and his advocasy of it, was ample evidence of the unimpaired strength of his mind

Friends of the distinguished statesman in this city affirm without equivocation and with great positiveness that Mr. Blaine will be a candidate in a passive sense. One of them quotes Col. Ingersol's famous saying concerning Blaine's patriotism: "The Fourth of July courses through his veins." There is as much enthusiasm concerning the secretary as there ever was in his strongest days of health energy and pronounced ambition.

It is stated however by one of the acknowledged spokesmen of the administration that the president has written assurance that Mr. Blaine will, under no circumstances accept a nomination next year.—Dispatch.

The Young of the Sea Devil.

You may find in the sea devil a curious illustration of nature's system for adjusting reproduction. The cod lays several hundred thousand eggs at a spawning, because nearly all of them must necessarily be lost while floating on the waves and those which hatch are mostly devoured. But the sea devil, which produces but a single young one at a time, retains the latter in its belly until the infant creature is from four to six feet in length, so that when born it is able to take care of itself and is in no danger of being destroyed.—Interview in Washington Star.

Aldermen as a Board of Directors.

It would clear away much misconception if the popular body in cities, instead of being spoken of and thought of as a local legislature, could be looked upon and considered as a board of directors. One of the most important grants wherein the powers of such a body in cities seem to pass beyond the functions of a board of directors is the right to adopt ordinances which are enforced by the police; but even as to this power it is to be borne in mind that city ordinances have no original authority. They are constantly declared invalid by the courts because they contravene statutes of the legislature or deal with matters not covered by the grant of power to the city corporation. The inferences to be drawn from this discussion are two. First, that the whole question as to what ought to be the business of the city and as to the best method of conducting this business is fairly open to discussion; second, that the question is one involving good judgment only. It does not involve the liberties of the people or touch any of the inherent rights of citizenship.—Seth Low in Century.

The Elephant's Memory.

The elephant has an excellent memory. It recollects friends well and it rarely forgets an injury. It is recorded of one that it smashed a cocoanut upon its driver's head and smashed the man's head at the same time, because the lazy, thoughtless fellow had broken a cocoanut on its skull the day before. A quartermaster engaged in superintending the removal of baggage in the camp by means of an elephant, became angry at the creature's refusing to carry more than a certain weight and foolishly flung a tent peg at its head. Some days afterward the elephant overtook the quartermaster as he was going through the camp, seized him with its trunk and neatly placed him among the branches of a tamarind tree, leaving him to reach the ground again in the best way he could.—New York Advertiser.

A GREAT GHOST STORY.

SOME EXCITEMENT CREATED IN ENGLAND BY SPIRITS.

A Newspaper Correspondent Witnesses a Funeral Train Received by the Spirits of the Dead in a Suburban Cemetery. He Was Wide Awake.

I was proceeding leisurely on foot to Broadgreen, when on passing the church at Knotty Ash my attention was suddenly arrested by the strange and uncanny appearance of its graveyard. The time was shortly after midnight. The whole burying ground seemed alive and glistening with a thousand small bluish lights, which appeared to creep in and out of the different graves, as if the departed spirits were taking a midnight ramble. I stood petrified, not knowing what to make of it, at the same time experiencing a feeling of horror which suddenly took complete possession of me.

Just at this moment the moon, which had hitherto been more or less obscured by a moving panorama of passing clouds, came, as it would seem, to my assistance, giving me for a very short time the benefit of her companionship. And now, appeared the most startling phenomenon of all—a phenomenon which caused my hair to stand on end with fright, a cold numbness of horror paralyzing me in every limb, for, advancing up the road directly opposite to me, came a funeral train, the coffin borne along with a measured tread, covered with an immense black pall which fluttered up in the midnight wind.

At first I thought I must surely be dreaming, and thereupon pinched myself in the arm to ascertain if this were really the case. But, no; I certainly was not, for I distinctly felt the nip, and was thereupon satisfied as to my wakefulness. "What could it all mean?" I asked myself, as the cortege gradually approached me and I began to distinguish the general outlines of the bearers. These appeared to be elderly men and to have lived in a bygone age.

All were dressed in the costume of the latter part of the Eighteenth century. They wore tie wigs, and some had swords, as well as walking sticks mounted with deathheads. I observed only one really young man among the crowd of followers, walking just behind the coffin.

A GHOSTLY CORTEGE.

His youth in comparison with the others, perhaps, made me take especial notice of him. He was dressed in what appeared to be black velvet, the whiteness of his ruffles standing out in marked contrast to the somber nature of his general attire. He carried a sword, had diamond buckles on his shoes, and wore his powdered hair in a cue. The face of this young man was deathly pale, as were also the faces of all the others accompanying him. Instead of the procession advancing to the gate at which I stood, it turned suddenly and entered the burial ground by the one situated at a few yards' distance.

As the coffin was borne through this gate all the blue spirit lights seemed to rise from the graves as if to meet the cortege for the purpose of escorting the body to its last resting place. These awful lights added considerably to the ghastliness of the scene as they floated over the coffin and heads of the mourners. Slowly the procession glided up the pathway, passing the main entrance of the church, and, continuing its way in a straight line, finally disappeared at the back of the edifice.

Where this most extraordinary funeral went to or what became of it I cannot tell; but this much I distinctly aver, that coffin, mourners and lights—even the pale, flickering moonlight—all disappeared as mysteriously as they came, leaving me standing in the darkness transfixed with astonishment and fright. Upon gathering together my somewhat scattered senses I took to my heels and never stopped running till I found myself in my own house. In fact, I scarcely remember how I got home.

AFTERTHOUGHTS.

After recovering a little from the shock I immediately aroused a female relative who had retired for the night and related to her the above particulars. She assured me that I must have been suffering from mental hallucination, but seeing the great perturbation of my mind, and at the same time knowing my natural skepticism with regard to all so called supernatural phenomena, she came to the conclusion that, after all, I might possibly have seen what has been described above.

The next day I made inquiries in the neighborhood of Knotty Ash, and ascertained from a very old woman that she remembered a story in her youth having reference to the mysterious and sudden death of an old occupant of Thingwall Hall, who was hastily and quietly buried, she thought, at midnight, in old Knotty Ash churchyard. If so, was this a ghastly repetition of the event gotten up for my especial benefit, or was it a portent intended to foreshadow the coming of the dread visitor to myself?

Now, as I have before stated, I am no believer in ghosts, but certainly this remarkable experience of mine has entirely upset all my previously conceived notions of the subject, leaving me in a quandary of doubt. On the evening upon which I saw the mysterious funeral at Knotty Ash I was exceedingly wide awake, had met several cyclists on the Prescott road with whom I conversed. Strange that a few hundred yards farther down the road I should encounter so ghastly an experience—an experience I shall never forget to my dying day.—Liverpool Post.

A New Use for Diamonds.

A use for diamonds, as an assistant to marksmen, has been discovered. The diamonds are fixed in the front and back sights of rifles, and it is said they enable the marksman to take a quick and correct aim even in a bad light. The brilliants are so fitted that immediately the piece is brought to the shoulder the rays in the gems assist the alignment, and the eye takes aim without the least hesitation.—Horological Journal.

SPEAK NO ILL.

Nay, speak no ill; a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind;
And oh! to breathe each tale we've heard
Is far beneath a noble mind.

Full oft a better seed is sown
By choosing thus a kinder plan,
For if but little good be known
Still let us speak the best we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide—
Would fain another's fault efface;
How can it pleasure human pride
To prove humanity but base?

No, let us reach a higher mood,
A nobler estimate of man;
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all as best we can.

Then speak no ill, but lenient be
To other's failings as your own;
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.

For life is but a passing day;
No lips may tell how short its span;
Then, oh! the little time we stay,
Let's speak of all the best we can.
—Once a Week.

Ants and Their Uses.

During twelve months spent in the Australian colonies in the years 1870-1 I had more opportunities than were pleasant of studying the habits of ants. These insects, as is well known, are not only a nuisance, but an absolute pest in hot countries. They march in myriads and destroy everything in their road. In justice to the ants, I am bound, however, to admit that I have found them useful in more ways than one. For instance, I bought an opossum skin rug from a native. I soon became painfully aware of the fact that it literally swarmed with fleas and other vermin. In vain did I exhaust my stock of pepper. Even turpentine seemed to have no effect beyond increasing the reckless activity of these irritating settlers.

At last in despair I threw my rug down on an ant hill. In less than half an hour every flea and objectionable parasite was eaten, but the rug was full of ants. I therefore hung it on a mimosa bush, and as soon as the ants found they were suspended they hastened to leave the rug and descended by the bush as best they could.

Again, I had killed a snake in Tasmania and wished to clean and bleach the skeleton, which I intended to have mounted as a necklace. I left the body near an ants' nest. In a few hours there was not a vestige of flesh on the bones. The sun soon did the rest.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Girls in Vermont's Celebration.

The most beautiful feature of Vermont's centennial celebration at Bennington was the triumphal arch, a massive structure, at least thirty-five feet high. In its lofty turret was a throne of gold and national colors, occupied by Miss Lillie Adams, of Bennington, robed as the Goddess of Liberty. Just below, on the top of the arch, were 125 girls, selected from the public schools, clad in pure white and with flowing hair, who sang patriotic songs accompanied by a cornet, as the parade passed beneath the archway. Below these the arm arches were filled with maidens, bearing in their hands banners emblazoned in gold and colors with the various coats of arms of the states. At the banquet many notable ladies were present, and the tables were served in part by 300 young women in white.—Boston Woman's Journal.

Neighbors and Social Relations.

While it is pleasant to have neighbors with whom we are on familiar social relations, the fact that we are neighbors merely is no reason why such relations should exist. Certainly no one has any reason to be offended if a neighbor chooses to live in retirement, or does not return obsequious calls. Too many of the calls on new neighbors, which are considered a social duty in many districts of the country, are simply prying errands to see if the parlor carpet is genuine Brussels or rag, or whether the new neighbor keeps her hair in curl papers at calling hours, or is a good manager or a hopeless slattern, or something else, which is no possible concern of the caller.—New York Tribune.

Coins Show That the Umbrella Is Old.

On coins in the rock carvings of the ancients the umbrella often shows its familiar form. This goes to prove that Jonas Hanway did not invent the umbrella, but he saw the value of the eastern sunshade, and soon it became the fashion to carry this useful article. There must be great difference between the umbrella of the eighteenth century and the modern steel ribbed, silk covered, slender article which is regarded as a misfortune to get wet.—Irish Times.

He Knew.

A young woman was trading in a stationer's shop and the elderly proprietor suddenly asked:

"And when does the wedding take place?"

"The wedding? Why, you don't think"—the fair customer blushed and hesitated.

"Ah, miss, when young ladies buy a hundred sheets of paper and only twenty-five envelopes, I know there is something in the wind."—Exchange.

It is a great deal easier to see alleviations and to apply philosophical consolations in the case of a friend's trouble than in our own. The one and only form of consolation which is universally true and applicable is that "it might be worse." There is no conceivable case so bad that this may not truly be said of it.

Aluminium has been suggested as a material for coins, but there are objections to it. It has always a greasy feel, due to the presence of a slight but unavoidable film of oxide of aluminium over its surface.

A remedy for creaking hinges is mutton tallow rubbed on the joint. A great many locks that refuse to do their work are simply rusted and will be all right if carefully oiled.

Large English walnut shells are frequently mounted with hinges and used as ornamental cases for rings, jewels and miniature articles for presents.

The Courtesy of Assassins.

It will be remembered that some time ago Mr. Constantine Belcheff, the minister of finances, was unskillfully shot and killed while walking in the streets of Sofia in company with M. Stambuloff, the prime minister. It was thought at the time that M. Belcheff was the victim of mistaken identity, and this belief has been confirmed by the following apology which has been carved on his tombstone: "Forgive us; we aimed at Stambuloff and struck you. The second time we will not fail."—General M. M. Trumbull in Open Court.

RUSSIAN CIRCUMLOCUTION.

How Projects for Improvements in the Public Service Are Killed.

The reason why changes that are manifestly desirable, that are in the direction of economy, and that apparently would injure no one, are not made in Russia is one of the most puzzling and exasperating things that are forced upon a traveler's attention. In every branch of the administration one is constantly stumbling upon abuses or defects that have long been recognized, that have been commented upon for years, that are apparently prejudicial to the interests of everybody, and that, nevertheless, continue to exist.

If you ask an explanation of an official in Siberia he refers you to St. Petersburg. If you inquire of the chief of the prison department in St. Petersburg he tells you that he has drawn up a "project" to cope with the evil, but that this "project" has not yet been approved by the minister of the interior. If you go to the minister of the interior you learn that the "project" requires a preliminary appropriation of money—even although its ultimate effect may be to save money—and that it cannot be carried into execution without the assent and co-operation of the minister of finance. If you follow the "project" to the minister of finance you are told that it has been sent back through the minister of the interior to the chief of the prison department for "modification."

If you still persist in your determination to find out why this thing is not done, you may chase the modified "project" through the prison department, the minister of the interior and the minister of finance, to the council of the empire. There you discover that, inasmuch as certain cross-and-ribbon-decorated senators and generals, who barely know Siberia by name, have expressed a doubt as to the existence of the evil with which the "project" is intended to deal, a special "commission" (with salaries amounting to 20,000 rubles a year and mileage) has been appointed to investigate the subject and make a report.

If you pursue the commission to Siberia and back, and search diligently in the proceedings of the council of the empire for its report, you ascertain that the document has been sent to the minister of the interior to serve as a basis for a new "project," and then, as ten or fifteen years have elapsed and all the original projectors are dead, everything begins over again. At no stage of this circumrotatory process can you lay your hand on a particular official and say: "Here! You are responsible for this. What do you mean by it?"

At no stage, probably, can you find an official who is opposed to the reform or who has any personal interest in defeating it; and yet the general effect of the circumrotatory process is more certainly fatal to your reformatory project than any amount of intelligent and active opposition. The various bureaus of the provincial governor general's office, the chief prison department, the ministry of the interior, the ministry of finance, the ministry of justice, the council of ministers, and the council of the empire constitute a huge administrative maelstrom of ignorance and indifference, in which a "project" revolves slowly, month after month and year after year, until it is finally sucked down out of sight, or, perhaps, thrown by a fortuitous eddy of personal or official interest into the great gulf stream current of real life.—George Kennan in Century.

DO THE GOOD THAT YOU CAN DO TODAY.

Don't laugh at a man bowed in sorrow,
You know not his cross or his care—
The sun may shine for him tomorrow,
Though today it looks gloomy and drear.
Remember the words of the prophet,
A kind word is not thrown away,
The humblest may yet be your level,
Do the good that you can do today.

Whatever your lot or condition,
Act always a true, faithful part,
Although a man's coat may be ragged,
Beneath perhaps beats a pure heart.
Do not speak a word that's uncivil,
Think well, whatever you say,
Do not judge a man by appearance,
Do the good that you can do today.

Extend a kind hand to the helpless,
Do not pass them by with a frown,
Trust in faith to God's loving kindness,
Don't kick them because they are down.
Surrounded today in your grandeur,
Fortune against you may play,
'Tis a long lane that has no turning,
So the good you can do—do today.

BLINDMAN'S BUFF.

"I HOPE you will like Jack," said Gertrude to her dear friend, Jessie Parks.

"Jack? Who is Jack?"

"Why, Jack," replied Gertrude, bending down over her waste-paper basket as if looking for something she had thrown in by mistake. "Jack is—Jack," and she laughed a little. "Harriet, haven't I happened to mention Mr. Jack Bonner?"

"You know you haven't," pouted Jessie. "I thought you had told me everything."

The two girls were sitting in the twilight, talking together as only girls can. They had met only that very summer at the hotel. They seemed drawn to each other from the very first, and in the summer months they had walked together, rowed together and talked and talked together—told each other all their secrets and sworn eternal friendship.

Gertrude was tall, fair and a beauty of the delicate type. Jessie was petite and dark, and wonderfully pretty, too.

That very afternoon Gertrude had received a note from Jack Bonner, telling her he was coming to see her. She knew what he meant; he had just returned from a year at a German university and she had finished school. They had been lovers for years and now he was coming to make a formal announcement to her father—they would really be engaged.

For some reason she had never told Jessie about him as she had about all the other young men. She hardly knew just what to say to Jessie. They were not formally betrothed, but, of course, Jack loved her and she loved him, even if she had nearly driven him to desperation by her coquettish ways. And now she wanted her new friend to admire Jack, too.

After a long pause Jessie said:

"Is he handsome? and who is he, anyway?"

"Oh, you wait until you see him."

"Do you want me to fall in love with him?"

Gertrude started with a jealous pang. How could Jessie so misunderstand! Of course she did not want Jessie to fall in love with Jack—at least she did not want Jack to fall in love with Jessie, but she couldn't explain it very well. Jessie would see after Jack came—and he would be there tomorrow.

The next afternoon the girls were sitting together under a big elm behind the hotel when they saw a tall, handsome, sunburned man striding along toward them.

"Oh, Jack!" cried Gertrude, springing toward him. Then she presented him to Jessie.

He entertained them all the afternoon with stories of his university life, his travels abroad and his journey home.

Gertrude sat listening, and she remembered afterward that Jessie asked him a good many questions, and that he seemed attracted by her instantly.

Gertrude had never seen her look handsomer. She sat listening to Jack, looking at him through her half-shut eyes, over which her long, dark lashes curled.

That night when Jack and Gertrude were together, Jack asked:

"Why haven't you never told me anything about Jessie? She is beautiful!"

"Because I wanted you both to be surprised—to like each other," she rather incoherently explained.

After that Jack and Jessie were together a great deal, and Gertrude was powerless. At first it seemed to her a breach of friendship that Jessie should try to steal away her lover. Yet there was no reason why Jessie should know that Gertrude loved him, for that was a secret she had never told.

As the days went on Jessie seemed astonished at Gertrude's petulance. She used to refuse to go with them on their walks, and began to smile with such sweetness upon a young man at the hotel who had been sighing his soul away for her that his head was quite turned.

Only a week had gone by when Gertrude had seen enough to be convinced that Jack had fallen in love with Jessie. She had never realized how much she loved him before. And she thought with remorse how she used to pain him with her coquetries.

One night she was sitting all alone in the summer house when she saw by the bright moonlight Jessie and Jack going toward the lake. How many times they had been together, she thought. Why had this punishment come to her? Did she deserve it?

There was nothing to do but for her to go home. She would pack her trunks that very night.

Blinded by tears she started to run to the house, when she stumbled and fell.

Some one picked her up, and in spite of a sudden, sharp pain in her ankle she heard the well-known voice saying: "Gertrude, darling, are you hurt."

She struggled to free herself from Jack's embrace, dimly wondering how he could be on the pond and there, too, at the same time.

"Let me go! Let me go!" she cried.

"Why, Gertrude what does this mean? Gertrude darling—"

"Don't make love to me," she exclaimed, bitterly, "go to Jessie." Then she lost consciousness.

When she recovered Jack was bending over her, bathing her temples and chafing her hands.

"Forgive me dearest; we only began it as a joke, to punish you for not telling Jessie that you and I were lovers. Jessie is my own cousin and has known all about our love affair. She wrote me you were here, and we thought, as a little joke, that for a day or two we would play at flirting and then tell you.

"But you acted so strangely, and took it so in earnest, and flirted so desperately with that cad of a—"

But Gertrude's hand was over his mouth.

"You do forgive me and love me?" he questioned so eagerly that she could only hide her head on his shoulder.

"But I thought I saw you go to the lake with Jessie," she said.

"Oh, no! That was her fiance, who has just come to-night.

"She has been keeping that as a surprise for you. My darling," he added, "I have been so wretched, for every day the joke grew more and more serious, until I wondered how I was ever to see you to explain."

"And you really love me?" she faintly questioned.

He covered her face with kisses, then added softly: "You know I owe you a little punishment in return for all the wretched days and weeks you have given me."

"But I did not mean anything," she protested.

"Neither did I," he replied.—Boston Globe.

PROSECUTION OF ANIMALS.

In the Dark Ages Animals Were Held Subject to the Laws.

It seems most absurd to us who live in this year of grace, but still it is an unquestionable fact that, in what I must call the Dark Ages, it was the custom to hold animals as subject to the ordinary laws of the land, and to have regular trials, in which the unfortunate animals were defendants. The records of France show us that from 1120 to 1740 there were tried nearly one hundred animals for different offences, and in 1740 the last trial was held, and the prisoner—a cow—was found guilty and executed. I believe advocates were always assigned to the accused, and the trials were conducted with the greatest formality.

In one district of France a suit was instituted by the inhabitants against a certain insect which was devastating their fields, and lasted forty-two years!

In another district certain rats were proceeded against; they were described in the writ as "dirty animals in the form of rats of a greyish color, living in holes." Needless to say, no rats entered an appearance on the day of trial, and judgement was given against them in default.

In 1457 a sow and her six young ones were tried for having murdered and eaten a child. The sow was found guilty and sentenced to death, but the little pigs were acquitted on the ground of youth, and the absence of direct proof that they had eaten any part of the child.

In Switzerland a cock was tried for having laid an egg; after a long trial and many ingenious speeches for prosecution and for defence the unfortunate cock was sentenced to death, not because he was a cock, but on the ground that he was a devil in the form of a cock—and so he and his egg were burnt at the stake.

In Italy caterpillars were often tried, and fish also. Animals in those olden times were also admitted as witnesses on behalf of an accused person. If a murderer swore before an animal that he was innocent (provided it was clear that the animal was present at the time of the murder) he was held guiltless if the animal did not contradict him, because it was thought then that God would rather work a miracle and make the dumb animal speak than a murderer to escape justice.

How the Difficulty Was Met.

A good story is told of Judge Kent, the well-known American jurist. A man was indicted for burglary, and the evidence on the trial showed that his burglary consisted in cutting a hole through a tent in which several persons were sleeping, and then projecting his hand and arm through the hole and abstracting various articles of value.

It was claimed by his counsel that, inasmuch as he never actually entered into the tent with his whole body, he had not committed the offence charged, and must therefore be discharged.

Judge Kent, in reply to this plea, told the jury that, if they were not satisfied that the whole man was involved in the crime, they might bring in a verdict of guilty against so much of him as was thus involved.

The jury, after a brief consultation, found the right arm, the right shoulder, and the head of the prisoner guilty of the offence of burglary.

The judge sentenced the right arm, the right shoulder, and head to imprisonment with hard labor in the State prison for two years, remarking that, as to the rest of the man's body, he might do with it what he pleased.

Advertisement Literature.

Not long ago a man stood absorbed in thought at the counter of a newspaper office. He was writing something on a scrap of paper, and as a friend passed him he caught at him as a drowning man catches at a straw.

"Give me a word," he exclaimed.

"Certainly," replied his friend. "What kind of a word?"

"Oh, anything you can think of. It doesn't matter what.

"How would collaborate do?"

"Couldn't be better. Thanks, ever so much," and he inserted the word and handed in the advertisment.

The next morning the friend read:—

"Furniture sold on collaborated terms to parties desirous of going to collaborated housekeeping."

A Norwegian paper gravely announces in its advertising columns:—

"To rent—An elegantly furnished room to gentleman already heated."

Among the artistic advertising notices are the following:—

"Two young women want washing."

"Teeth extracted with pains."

A cheerful advertisement is this:—

"Try our coffins; you will never use any other,"

THE FARM AND HOME.

BEGIN NOW TO USE BUSINESS METHODS ON THE FARM.

The Only Way to Be Sure It Pays—Over Fatted Meat Is Unprofitable—Sheep Pointers and Household Hints.

Business Methods on the Farm.

With all the exhortations to farmers to make greater use of business methods on the farm, we see very few of them explaining how such methods should be applied, or wherein they would be specially valuable. Generalizing is not the best way to make truths plain. To come down to the root of the matter at once, let me ask the readers how he is to know whether his hogs, his poultry or his cows pay him a profit, if he feeds each class of these animals from the same grain bins? The cows may be making a profit on their feed, and thus concealing a deficit that comes from unprofitable hogs and hens. Or, the cows and hens may be concealing the fact that the hogs are running in debt to the farm. It is the same with other kinds of stock, when all are fed from a common quantity of feed stuffs. Occasionally it is even worse than the case mentioned, the cows, hens, and hogs might each and all return less than the cost of their keep, and still the truth be undiscovered, provided some other branch of farm operations brought in sufficient revenue to make up the deficiency. How can it be told, whether a certain crop of corn, oats, wheat or potatoes, has been a profitable one to raise, if no account is kept of the cost of preparing the ground, dressing, caring for, and harvesting the crop.

I would have separate grain bins for each kind of stock; then upon the first day of January of each year, or upon the first day of one of the spring months, if one chooses, a large blank book should be procured, and every time a sack of bran or oats is put into the poultry house, its cost should be charged to the account of the poultry. If ground meal, bone or any other article of food is purchased for the hens, let the cost be charged to them, and whenever eggs or market poultry are sold, let the proper credit be given, together with a credit for the eggs and poultry used on the table. If the hens have eaten a certain number of bushels of vegetables, their value should be charged to the poultry account. At the end of the year it will be pretty plain how the fowls have paid.

The dairy will have charged to it the feed that has been placed in the stable bins, together with the value of the hay, ensilage and roots eaten; and credit will be given to the same, for the butter sold and eaten, the milk sold or used, and the estimated value of the skim milk fed out. The dairy should also be credited for the value of calves, when weaned, and for the manure that is made.

It is not necessary to go further into details, to show that this is the only way by which we can tell whether the work is profitable or not. This is the only way, if it is not profitable, by which one can tell what branch is handicapping all the rest. It needs no great knowledge of bookkeeping, to classify these important facts. Any-one with good common sense can make such debit and credit entries, under the heading of each branch of his farm operations, as he can himself readily understand, when he comes to reckon up the cost and the value of articles sold and on hand. The great point is to begin keeping such accounts, and the sooner one begins, the better.—Practical Farmer.

Over Fatted Meat is Unprofitable.

Almost any sort of animal used for human food can, with greater profit both to the feeder and butcher, be made excessively fat than the sheep, though a superabundance of fat is not desirable, or sought after, by the average consumer of meat, whether it be beef, pork, veal or mutton; hence such goods are handled at a loss.

There is a medium line to be observed in preparing stock for the market that will insure better satisfaction to all parties concerned than the extremes of either over or under fatting, and while it is true the lean parts of very fat meat are always sweeter, more juicy and tender than when leanness predominates over the carcass, yet the proportion of this fine quality of meat is so small, compared with the aggregate weight of a very fat carcass, that butchers are shy except at low prices, knowing the large amount of unsaleable bulk it contains. Particularly is this true of mutton, and an excessively fat carcass of that class of meat answers more the purpose of showing the possibilities of the animal or breed to lay on fat, than any ends of profit reached, or satisfactory returns, to either the feeder, the butcher or consumer. A leading Birmingham butcher, who supplies meats to the weekly market, writes to an English paper, touching this matter, and says:

"Advise your readers to avoid sending heavy fat mutton to market, there is no sale, and it is a waste of time, food and labor to grow, and is of small value when slaughtered. It cannot compete with the lean Australian mutton now offered." What more advice than our correspondent has himself tendered is needed? His suggestion is well worth the consideration of breeders. There should not be much difficulty in adopting it. Upwards of a dozen different breeds of sheep should afford material enough for the production of lean mutton. Showyard attractions are not conducive of this result. Nor is the craze for early maturity. These objects are laudable in their way, but it behooves breeders to keep a close eye upon the demands of the age, in as far, at least as they concern their particular industry.—Coleman's Rural World.

The Value of Corn Stalks.

At a recent meeting of farmers at Pikeville, in Maryland, Prof. H. Alvord, the director of the Maryland experiment station, read a most instructive paper on corn stalks. In the course of his remarks he took occasion to condemn the wasteful method of harvesting the corn crop so prevalent throughout the country, and which we have so frequently denounced. The stripping of the blades and cutting of the tops and then leaving the butts to rot in the field, practically amounts to wasting a large portion of the crop, besides being otherwise economically unsound, as the cost of this labor is out of all proportion to the value of the product saved. By analysis, the professor showed that two pounds of stalk butts contained as much nutriment as one pound of corn and cob meal, and that two and one-half pounds of stalks were equivalent as food to one pound of good corn meal. He further estimated that there is generally half a ton of butts left in the field after stripping the fodder and cutting the tops, which is equivalent to an obsolute waste of 400 pounds of corn meal or six and one-half bushels of corn per acre.—Journal of Agriculture.

Is Soil Exhaustible?

The American agriculturist practically says no. This is how it arrives at this conclusion: "One foot in depth of a fairly good agricultural soil contains 4,000 pounds of phosphoric acid, 8,000 pounds of potash, 16,000 pounds of nitrogen and lime, magnesia, soda, chlorine, sulphur and silica to afford food for all the crops which these three elements can feed per acre. After farmers, by careful and skillful cultivation, have exhausted all this great store of plant feed in the uppermost foot of this soil, which will require several centuries, will the soil be exhausted? Not at all. As the land is gradually changed into vegetable growth and the surface is removed as farm crops, as it gradually deepens, the subsoil which contains the very same elements becomes fitted for plant food. And thus the imperishable nature of matter applies to the soil, which can never be exhausted during all the ages which are to come. All that mankind has to do is to use its arts, under the instruction of science, to develop this latent fertility of the soil, and to go on feeding the human race until the end, if an end ever shall come, when the earth will no longer exist as a fit habitation for mankind."

Sheep Pointers.

Professor Penberthy, of England, claims there are six forms of foot-rot in sheep, and each, in a measure, requires special treatment.

Many have the mistaken notion that after shearing wool increases in weight. The opposite occurs. The more grease it contains the more it shrinks.

Strike for twins. Ewes which have good, sound udders, are docile and good mothers, and have produced twins, are the ewes to retain for breeders.

Merinos do not bear so many lambs as the coarser breeds, but they live and serve longer to compensate. Pampering the coarser breeds has probably impaired their constitutions.

Merino sheep do not contract scab one time in five as often as the coarse wools; in fact scab is a very rare thing in otherwise healthy Merino flocks. Their grease is antagonistic to the scab parasites.

Usually "show sheep" are not worth much for anything else, especially those of the old countries. Like some of the fair sex, they are pampered, petted, powdered, painted, spoiled. These "ps" will ruin anything.

Rules for Butter-Making.

The Royal Agricultural Society of England has published some excellent rules for butter-making, from which we make an extract, as they are also applicable in this country:

1. Rinse all dairy utensils in cold water.
2. Scald with hot water and rinse again with cold.
3. Always use a thermometer.
4. Churn the cream at a temperature of 58 degrees to 60 degrees in summer and 60 degrees to 63 degrees in winter.
5. Give the churn good ventilation, and churn at forty to forty-five revolutions to the minute.
6. Stop churning when the butter has formed in pellets the size of small shot.
7. Draw off the buttermilk, and pour pure water into the churn until it runs off clear and uncolored.
8. Make a strong brine and pour into the churn through a fine sieve.
9. Remove the butter and work it with a ladle or upon a butter-worker. Never use the hands. To these may be added the precaution to allow the butter to stand eight or ten hours, then work carefully to expel the excess of water and insure solidity, when it is ready for printing or the tub. If these directions are followed, streaks in the butter will never appear.

Hints for the Housewife.

Salt will curdle new milk.

To soften old putty, use a hot iron.

Varnish is "rough on bugs"—bed bugs especially.

You can clean mica, that has become smoked, with vinegar.

Mix baking soda with brick-dust for scouring your knives.

Raw beafsteak applied will remove the discoloration from bruises.

Cistern water may be purified by hanging a bag of charcoal in the water.

Laying tough meat in vinegar for a few minutes before cooking is said to make it more tender.

Sweet oil will remove finger-marks from varnished furniture, and kerosene from oiled furniture.

Equal parts of ammonia and turpentine will remove paint from clothing, if it is often enough applied.

A few drops of ether dropped into a bottle of oil will prevent it from becoming rancid for a long time.

A pitcher of cold water placed in a room to absorb poisonous gases arising from the persons of those occupying it, is one of the absolute essentials.

To cut off glass bottles for cups, mark with a file where the line is wanted, and then run around the bottle with the point of a red-hot poker.

In preparing plaster of Paris for filling cracks in plaster, use vinegar instead of water in mixing it. The result will be a mass like putty, and it will not harden so soon.

Gilt frames may be freshened by dusting, and then washing them with one ounce of soda beaten up with the whites of three eggs. Scraped places may be touched up with gold paint.

FRUITS OF INGENUITY.

A trial recently made in the German army showed that dispatches can be sent more speedily by horsemen than by bicyclists.

A musical novelty, called the "electro-magnetic palsiphone," has been brought out in France by Messrs. Guerre and Martin. The sound is produced by a sonorous body, which is vibrated very rapidly by the interpreter of a Ruhmkorff coil. The sound is continuous, resembling that of an organ pipe, and is said to be very pleasing.

An early riser's outfit is one of the recent electrical novelties. It has decided advantage over the old alarm clock, which would run down and allow the early riser to take another nap. The electrical outfit does not need any winding. It keeps up its nerve-grating jangle for two hours, unless turned off. The early riser is bound to get out of bed and cut off the current.

Artificial bitter almonds are now produced at a trifling cost, and with such deceptive skill that they can scarcely be detected when used as an adulterant of the genuine.

USED THEM IN HIS BLOW-GUN.

Doctor—"Well, my fine little fellow, you have got quite well again. I was sure the pills I left for you would cure you. How did you take them, in water or in cake?"

Boy—"Oh, I used them in my blow-gun."

The little fellow put the nasty, great, griping, old-fashioned pills to a good use. At most, all his internal economy needed was a dose of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They are tiny, sugar-coated granules, easy to take, and are gently aperient, or actively cathartic, according to size of dose. As a laxative, only one tiny Pellet is required.

The "Pellets" cure Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

The "Pellets" are purely vegetable, and operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are the cheapest pill, sold by druggists, because they are guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or their price (25 cents a vial) is refunded. Can you ask more?

Not to Be Endured.

If the federal government desires to stamp out the lottery evil, there will be little opposition on the part of the people and the press, but if it gives irresponsible underlings the power to stamp out the press when it exercises its right to discuss the law, the result will be not only opposition, but indignation and trouble all along the line.

Just now the papers are having a good deal to say about the arrest of a Wisconsin editor because he published a clipping from an exchange questioning the validity of the anti-lottery law. If the arrest was made for nothing more than this, then it is putting it mildly to say that our government has become Russianized, so far as its treatment of the press is concerned.

This policy will not work. If lotteries cannot be destroyed without also destroying the freedom of the press, the people will be in favor of letting the lotteries alone. We cannot afford to yield our right to speak and publish fair criticisms of public measures. If we yield the right in one instance, we may expect to be forced to keep silence whenever it suits the government to demand it.

Fortunately it is no easy matter to bulldoze the newspapers of America. The menace of fine and imprisonment will intimidate very few. No matter what federal officials may hold, the newspaper men of the country will not change their conviction that an honest criticism or discussion of the provisions contained in the anti-lottery law cannot with any show of justice be held to be a violation of that law. If they are mistaken in this belief, then the law will have to be repealed or modified. In this republic the government cannot array itself against the press and have the support of the people.—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

Lingered Too Long.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Special.—Two mail pouches containing a number of registered packages and several hundred letters were stolen from a mail car of the Little Rock & Memphis railroad. The theft was cleverly perpetrated and was not discovered for several hours. A search discovered George Woods, a well-known crook, in the suburbs, leisurely opening letters, taking their valuable contents and burning the letters. He was placed under arrest. It is believed he had an accomplice.

Men can give excellent advice about what they cannot do themselves.

It gives us pleasure to refer to the advertisement of Dr. W. H. Tutt which appears in our columns. For over twenty-five years Tutt's Pills have been before the public, and each succeeding year their valuable properities become better appreciated. They now stand second to none for the relief of that much abused and overtaxed organ, the liver, and for the removal of that cause of so many ills, constipation. They are used in every civilized country, and carry with them voluminous testimonials of their safety and efficacy. Tutt's Liver Pills should have a place in every household.

Nothing to speak of—your neighbors' affairs.

Impish Freaks.

Are those of a disordered liver. But when that organ is thoroughly disciplined with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the bile is adequately secreted, diverted from the blood into its proper channel, digestion grows active, the skin and eyeballs lose their bilious tinge, pain in the vicinity of the liver ceases, sick headache and nausea depart. The Bitters is an incomparable preventive of malaria, rheumatism and kidney complaint.

Love is blind, but matrimony is a great oculist.

Commendable.

All claims not consistent with the high character of Syrup of Figs are purposely avoided by the Cal. Fig Syrup Company. It acts gently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the system effectually. But it is not a cure-all and makes no pretensions that every bottle will not substantiate.

A fool's advice is better than a knave's. It is at least sincere.

Two Things

In Regard to Catarrh

1st, It is a Constitutional Disease; and 2d, It Requires a Constitutional Remedy.

These two facts are now so well known to the medical fraternity that local applications, like snuffs and inhalations, are regarded as at best likely to give only temporary relief. To effect a permanent cure of catarrh requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by purifying the blood, repairing the diseased tissues, and imparting healthy tone to the affected organs, does give thorough and lasting cure.

"I want to say for the benefit of suffering humanity, that Hoods Sarsaparilla is

A Permanent Cure for Catarrh.

99 per cent. of those investing in Real Estate make money, 97 per cent. of those investing in Business lose money.

A commercial center is the safest place to invest in real estate, especially when such place is a great railway center; has good river transportation and large foreign and domestic shipping. Portland is that place.

Portland, Oregon, is now pre-eminently the commercial center of the Pacific Northwest. No other city in the United States is so well situated in respect to natural resources as is Portland, and it leads all other cities west of the Mississippi River in its phenomenal growth in population. Located at the confluence of two great rivers, and being the terminus of more transcontinental railways than any other city in the United States. In fact, every advantage which insures the solid growth and prosperity of a city is abundantly enjoyed by Portland.

These Advantages Guarantee Constantly Increasing Values in Real Estate.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY GEORGE D. REYNOLDS says no action has been taken to bring Joseph L. Herwig and M. F. Arnolt, of the Louisiana Lottery company, to St. Louis as stated in a dispatch from New Orleans.

H. S. HUTCHINSON and Miss Minnie Consson were married in a baloon at Birminghim, Ala. The balloon was last seen going toward the remote mountain regions of North Alabama and directly away from railroad and telegraph lines, and much anxiety is felt in Birmingham.

STOPPED BY SNOW.

Threshing Operations in North Dakota Completely Stopped by the Beautiful.

Farm Hands Leaving the State by the Hundreds Because of the Cold Weather.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., Special Telegram, Nov. 3.—It commenced snowing about noon to-day and snowed all afternoon. It is drifting badly. Many of the men brought up here from Minnesota and Wisconsin to help threshing are leaving because of cold weather and, as a large portion of the grain is still unthreshed, it is doubtful if farmers can finish threshing before spring. East-bound trains for two or three days have been crowded with farm laborers leaving the state.

THREE INCHES OF WET SNOW.

MICHIGAN CITY, N. D., Special Telegram, Nov. 3.—Three inches of wet snow fell here to-day, which will again stop threshing for several days. Twenty-five per cent of this county's crop is still in the shock.

WILL DAMAGE WHEAT.

MINTO, N. D., Special Telegram, Nov. 3. —A disagreeable snow storm has prevailed all the afternoon. It will be damaging to wheat.

STARTED IN FRIDAY.

DEVILS LAKE, N. D., Nov. 3.—A blizzard started in Friday and has continued at intervals ever since. It snowed and drifted to-day with no prospects of clearing. A large percentage of wheat in shock is yet unthreshed.

OBJECT TO TAXES.

Non-Resident Taxpayers Get Injunctions at Huron Officers.

HURON, S. D., Special Telegram, Nov. 3.—Injunctions were served to-day by non-resident taxpayers upon George F. Lane, county treasurer, J. C. Klemme, city treasurer, and Dr. C. B. Alford, mayor of Huron, enjoining them against the payment of certain warrants and bonds amounting to something over $250,000, claimed to have been illegally issued. An injunction was also served upon the county treasurer, restraining him from selling certain property for taxes claimed to have been illegally assessed, amounting to probably $100,000.

Those more directly interested in the proceedings are Sioux Falls parties. The bonds are nearly all held by Chicago and New York parties. The matter has created much stir here, and similar proceedings are said to have been commenced in other cities. It is regarded as a carefully contrived scheme to injure the credit of the cities issuing certain bonds and warrants.

Laborers Returned to Winnipeg.

ST. VINCENT, Minn., Nov. 3.—Employment agencies at Winnipeg are in the habit of sending men from that city to work on farms in Minnesota and the Dakotas, contrary to the provisions of the American alien law. Saturday Deputy Collector Williams, of this subport, sent back three men who had been sent here with a letter to Mr. McLaren, foreman of the Reid farm, by a Winnipeg agent named Allen. They had spent their last cent in railway fare, and the collector had to pay for their bed and board last night and to-day. Mr. Bryson, superintendent of the Reid farm, and Mr. McLaren, foreman, deny they authorized Allen to send hands to the farm.

Belongs to Creditors.

CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—In April last Spooner R. Howell, a big lumber merchant of this city, with branches in Iowa, turned over his property to the First National bank of this city to which he was indebted to the amount of $200,000. Later the North Wisconsin Lumber company brought suit for $50,964, claiming that transactions with the First National bank were collusive and to the detriment of outside creditors. By a decision to-day the $200,000 will go to the legitimate creditors.

Filed on Omaha Lands.

ASHLAND, Wis., Special Telegram, Nov. 3. —About 300 applications were received from filers at the land office to-day, beside an equal number by mail. The police provision for maintaining order was very perfect, and there were no unusual incidents or disorder of any kind. It is generally thought here that precedence will be given filings by mail over the claimants who have no claim other than intention to settle and a receiver's receipt.

A Minister Ordained.

FERGUS FALLS, Minn., Special, Nov. 3.—Rev. J. J. Branti was ordained last night as a Unitarian minister of the Gospel. The ceremonies occurred in the Congregational church, as the Unitarian society here has no building yet. Rev. Kristofer Janson of Minneapolis and Rev. Mr. Forbush of Chicago, superintendent of Western missions, conducted the exercises.

Furnace Builders Embarrassed.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 3.—J. P. Witherow & Co., the extensive furnace builders of Newcastle, Pa., are financially embarrassed, and to-morrow will apply to court for the appointment of a receiver. The assets are placed at $1,111,000 and the liabilities at $374,000. Inability to get ready money is the cause of the failure.

Have a New Shepherd.

HASTINGS, Minn., Special, Nov. 3.—Rev. Lewis Llewellyn, late of Portsmouth, Eng., has accepted a call from the First Baptist church of this city and entered upon his duties yesterday. A recognition service will be held on Tuesday, the 10th inst., when the Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D., of Minneapolis will officiate.

A Habeas Corpus for Lee Lum.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., Nov. 3.—John Cochrane of this city has procured a writ of habeas corpus for his client, a Chinaman, Lee Lum. The writ is returnable to United States Judge Thomas at Fargo to-morrow, when Cochrane will move to have the case dismissed.

A Rush for H. & D. Lands.

MONTEVIDEO, Nov. 3.—The opening of the indemnity lands of the Hastings & Dakota grants has caused a mad rush from this county to the Marshall land office. Over 150 started on the morning train and others have gone by team.

Feeling More Chipper.

CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—The Eastern lines are taking courage as the close of lake navigation approaches. Already some of the lake and rail lines have given notice to the Eastern agents that no more freight will be received for west-bound shipment after Nov. 7. A meeting of the trunk line presidents will be held in New York Thursday to consider the rate situation, with a view to fixing up a schedule for the winter, and it is understood that special attention will be given to the charges that certain roads are secretly manipulating rates on east-bound business.

LOOKS SUSPICIOUS.

Serious Features Being Developed in the Burning of John McFarlan.

WILSON, Wis., Special Telegram, Nov. 3. —The case of John McFarlan, who, on Oct. 26, was found dead and badly burned by a brush fire, is developing some very serious features. There was some dissatisfaction on account of the lack of thoroughness at the inquest, whereupon the town authorities called a physician who made an examination and reported that there had been a blow on the back of the head. It was thought to have been caused by the falling of a tree stub, which had been burned off.

After the funeral some of his friends were still dissatisfied. For several years the McFarlans have lived on the farm of a bachelor named Daniel Dugan, who has made his home with the McFarlans. To-day the attorney and sheriff of this county came here and arrested Dugan and Mrs. McFarlan on suspicion, and have taken them to Hudson for safety. They will return here to-morrow for examination. The body will be exhumed and another examination made by physicians.

A Murdered Innocent.

BARNESVILLE, Minn., Special Telegram, Nov. 3.—This morning, while the threshing crew of J. McGrath were placing the separator in position on the Messenger farm, one and one-half miles east of town, a boy baby, apparently about three weeks old, was discovered between the sheaves in one of the stacks, frozen stiff. It was bruised on one side of the head and probably had its young life knocked out by a blunt instrument and placed there to make it appear that death resulted from cold. The little corpse was carried to the undertaking rooms of M. P. Philippi and Coroner Darrow notified.

Train Wreckers Foiled.

GREEN BAY, Wis., Nov. 3.—At a point about a mile south of Oconto an attempt was made to wreck the south-bound passenger train over the Chicago & Northwestern road yesterday. A man on his way home from Oconto saw three men engaged in removing the spikes and fish plates from one of the rails. Hurrying back he signaled the approaching passenger train, and the engineer succeeded in stopping the engine just as the front trucks left the track where the rails had been spread. At that point the road runs along a high embankment, and but for the discovery a terrible wreck and loss of life would have resulted.

More Convicts Released.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 3.—Early this morning 200 mounted men came in from the mountains and liberated the 150 convicts working in the mines at Oliver Springs. So quietly was it done, that the people of the town knew nothing about what had happened until they discovered that the stockade of the lessees was a mass of smoking ruins. This makes more than 500 penitentiary convicts turned loose in that locality since Friday evening. It is now said that the miners are releasing the convicts taken by the officers of the law as soon as captured.

Speculating on Chisholm's Sentence.

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 3.—The chief topic here is the conviction of Chisholm on two counts, and much speculation is indulged in as to what the sentence will be. The judge could send him up for life, but it is thought he will not give him more than fifteen years, if that much. A penalty of whipping is likely to be imposed also. Chief Justice Taylor, who placed the Gaffney girl under arrest for perjury, relented to-day and released her from custody.

Sentenced an Unnatural Father.

CANTON, S. D., Special Telegram, Nov. 3. —William J. Lyon was to-day sentenced by Judge Aikens to twenty years' imprisonment in the penitentiary for criminally assaulting his thirteen-year-old daughter. The evidence upon the trial disclosed the fact that Lyon had been criminally intimate with three of his daughters for a period of several years.

The strike of the Northern engineers, which had its center on the Wearside, in Durham, Eng., has been settled by compromise. This strike compelled the idleness of 80,000 men.

LAWS OF HYGIENE.

How Life Can Be Prolonged With a Good Constitution as a Starter.

When a count is taken it may be expected that the winning side of the match for health and longevity will be those who live carefully and in an orderly fashion. Cornaro, Humboldt, Chevreue, Von Moltke, Dr. Graham and our old friend Dr. Taylor, who recently died over 100 years of age, are all practical examples of living according to the principles of hygiene, temperately and systematically. Of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes the same may be said, as it appears, with some emphasis. Recently he has spoken of his manner of life, and attributes his good health and the remarkable vigor of his mind at 81 to the extreme care he has long taken of himself. Never robust, he was, nevertheless, wiry in his earlier life, and since he reached 80 his hygienic vigilance is increasing. The rooms that he daily occupies are equiped with barometers, thermometers, aerometers and other instruments, the observation of which may prevent his incurring the slightest risk of taking cold. He knows that pneumonia is the most formidable foe of old age, and he is determined to keep it at a distance if possible. He never gets up during winter until he knows the temperature, or takes his bath without having the water accurately tested. He lives by rule, and the rule is inflexible. His time is scrupulously divided—so much alloted to reading, so much to writing, so much to exercise, so much to recreation. His meals are studies of prudence and digestion.

One might think that it would be a serious infliction to keep up existence by such precise, unvarying methods. But the little doctor enjoys them, having settled firmly into these habits years ago. Philosophical as he is about death, he has an eager curiosity to see how long he can live by following the laws he has rigorously prescribed for himself. He thinks sometimes that he may attain 100, which he would dearly like, if he could retain, as he has retained thus far, the full possession of all his faculties. No serious man of broad veiw can regard the interest Dr. Holmes takes in health as at all excessive, especially as it not only concerns the keeping of a man with us of whom literary America is proud, but is a scientific demonstration of the value of systematic hygiene applied to the preservation of body and mind at any advanced age.—Journal of Health.

WANTED THEM WEIGHED.

A Woman Who Doubted the Honesty of a Grape Peddler.

She was a business woman. Anybody could see that. She had a square jaw, a firm set mouth, and as she stepped up to a State street fruit stand one afternoon the young man in charge felt that he was in for it. She had been attracted by a sign which read, "Grapes, 5 cents per pound."

"How much are these grapes worth?" she questioned in a green persimmon tone of voice.

"Five cents a pound, ma'am."

"You may give me three pounds," she, said, after a pause.

The young man opened a paper bag and with the assurance of a long experience in the business, filled it and passed it toward her.

"I want three pounds of grapes!" she observed icily.

"Well, here you are, ma'am," persisted the vender.

"You will weigh those grapes, if you please!" And the mercury in the thermometer across the street fell 4 degrees.

"Certainly, ma'am," and the man adjusted a small pair of scales to the three pound notch When the bag was placed in them the lever went up with a snap. He took out one bunch and laid it back in his box. Still down weight. Another and the scales righted to a hair.

"There you are, ma'am—" but she snatched the bag and bolted, mad enough to murder somebody.—Chicago Mail.

LOOK ON THIS.

The ancient maxim that every question has two sides is, in the words of St. Paul, worthy of all acceptation.

Take the Royal Baking Powder Company for example: It's statements to the public are made in a bald, one-sided way. The Company is either guilty of duplicity in its methods or it takes the public to be ignorant.

It forgets, or it doesn't care, that there is an opposite to the claims it sets up.

It has been caught in its acts, and unmasked so often that one would suppose it would try some new tactics. On the contrary, it continues the dark-lantern policy.

The Ohio Dairy and Food Commissioner corrected the Royal for misusing his annual report. This was done in the newspapers.

The same Company was taken to task by the New York State Board of Health for its endeavor to make it appear that the Board had endorsed the Royal Baking Powder.

The same Company quoted authorities, in its behalf, and called them Government Chemists. There is no such office known to any bureau in Washington, or its departments throughout the country, as Government Chemist.

Here is another blunder of which the Royal is guilty, and according to Talleyrand, a blunder is as bad as a crime.

In one of its claims on the public the Royal uses the following words:

(COPY OF A ROYAL AD.)

CANNOT BE EXCELLED.

A purer or stronger baking powder than the Royal it is impossible to make. It is absolutely pure and healthful, and composed of the best ingredients, and of the highest strength and character.

To this statement the Royal adds, as authority, these names:

DR. DAVIDSON,
DR. FISKE,
DR. McQUESTEN,
DR. LE TOURNEUX,
San Francisco Board of Health.

That is one side of the case. It is the Royal Baking Powder Company's side.

The other side of the case appears opposite. It is a complete negative. It shows again the deception practiced by the Royal Baking Powder Company.

Are such methods employed by concerns that are honest?

AND THEN ON THIS.

Denials, individually by the members of the San Francisco Board of Health, of the statements attributed to them by the Royal Baking Powder Company:

INTERVIEWS WITH MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH:

Joseph R. Davidson, member of the Board of Health, in response to inquiries regarding the alleged endorsement by the Board, of the Royal Baking Powder, said: "The whole thing was an imposition, and our names were obtained under false pretenses. I was applied to by a personal friend, who asked me to sign my name to a statement that the Royal was a good baking powder. He told me it would only be published in one paper, an obscure weekly paper, and was to help out a deserving man who wanted to get an advertisement. Under these circumstances I signed my name, I am free to admit to you, as I have to all of my friends, that it was a mistake, and I shall be very, very careful how I sign my name to anything again."

Dr. H. M. Fiske, member of the Board, was also seen. He said: "The alleged certificate from the Board of Health was obtained by false representations, and as it appears in the newspapers is, to all infents and purposes, a forgery. It was an outrageous proceeding, all the way through, and places us in a wrong light before the public."

Dr. Chas. McQuesten, a member of the Board of Health of San Francisco, said: "The alleged certificate, published by the Royal Baking Powder Company, was obtained by fraud. We never signed any such paper as was published in the newspapers. Here is a copy of letter addressed to the local agent of the Royal Baking Powder Company, informing him that if the advertisement was not withdrawn, we should commence an action against him. I received an answer from him stating that the Home office had authorized him to withdraw it, and that it would not appear again. The thing is outrageous, we never analyzed the Royal, don't know what it contains, and never intended to set it above any other powder. Their whole action has been reprehensible in the highest degree."

Dr. Le Tourneux, a member of the Board of Health of San Francisco, said: "The advertisement published in the newspapers by which we were made to endorse the purity and excellence of the Royal, Baking Powder, was a fraud. We never signed any such paper. Dr. McQuesten and myself called on the local agent of the Royal Company, and he promised to withdraw the advertisement, but on the contrary it appeared in all the papers the next day. We then informed him that we should take legal means to protect ourselves. I am in earnest in this matter, and propose to see that the thing is set right.

The despicable action of the Royal people has placed the Board in a wrong light, and I for one am determined that justice shall be done. I have heard on good authority, that this action of the Royal Baking Powder Company is an old trick of theirs and that most of their alleged certificates are obtained in this way."

Mr. W. A. Boyce, a reporter for the San Francisco Chronicle, certifies to each one of the foregoing letters, that the statements therein contained were made by the writers to him.

James A. King, notary public, certifies with his official seal and signature, that each of the foregoing statements were made to him under oath at his office, in San Francisco, December 2, 1889.

The above is respectfully submitted to that unerring jury—a thinking public.

All work has been stopped on the railroad grade between here and Red Lake Falls. Contractor Jackson and crew came in last Monday and will ship his outfit south today, He claims that it will be impossible to do any more work this fall. The work, we understand will be commenced again next spring as soon as the ground can be worked and the road finished as rapidly as possible.

Mrs. Peter Newman appeared before Justice Hanson yesterday and swore out a warrant against her husband on charge of threatening her with a revolver, Mr. Newman was arrested by Constable Brink and the trial took place this morning. After hearing the evidence Justice Hanson dismissed the case. Mrs. Newman we learn left for Crookston where she will consult a lawyer with a view to getting a divorce.

The Twin City business men are talking of organizing a board of immigration to induce settlers to come and make use of Minnesota's vacant land. If this board of immigration when organized will make it a point to see the Twin City newspapers and ask them to casually state once in a while that there is a fertile land called Minnesota just east of the much boomed Dakotas, it would undoubtedly be of considerable benefit.

Mikkel Bakken was in town last Monday and reports that his threshing machine has been hard at work but that they are having considerable trouble moving. He is of the opinion that with favorable weather it would take the machines now in the country fully six weeks to finish the work to be done. If the weather was not favorable it will take several weeks longer. He says that he will keep his machine running as long as there is work to be done and looks for considerable winter work.

State elections were held yesterday as follows; New York, state officers and legislature. Returns are meager but indications are that the Democrats have carried the state by a small plurality with the Republicans in the lead with the legislature,

In Ohio the Republicans have undoubtedly elected their entire state ticket by a safe plurality and have secured a majority of the legislature.

Both parties are still claiming Iowa and Massachusetts.

The signal officer at St. Paul says that this is the latest fall but one in the history of the weather office at that place. If all signs do not fail he thinks we are going to have an extremely severe winter as the records shows by what severe winters have been preceded In looking over the official records of the last nineteen years he finds that a severe winter is always had once in four or five years and it is usually preceded by three open or mild winters then a late fall. The winter of 91-92 he predicts will be a long one with plenty of snow and severe cold and he makes his prediction not from guess work but by reason of analogy which he thinks ought to stand.

New York Press: Whoever saw Secretary Blaine during his brief stay in New York had conclusive evidence that the stories about his incurable maladies his loss of physical vigor and his decay of mental power have been sheer fabrications. They have for the most part appeared in Democratic journals, in which the wish was manifestly father to the thought. The democracy regards Mr. Blaine with intense hatred, Mr. Blaine's step is as springy, his eye as clear and his mind as vigerous as that of any man of his years in the United States or the world. His physical condition is no longer a matter of public concern or private anxiety. If he is not a well man there are no well men in the United States,

"We are supposed to be a peaceful nation," writes Col. Theodore A. Dodge the well known authority on military subjects, in the October Forum, "but we have had our fair share of strife foreign and domestic. Since the revolution there have been wars with England and with Mexico, with Tripoli and with Algiers; broils with Paraguay and with Corea, and a gigantic civil war; rumors of wars with France, England, Spain and Italy. There have been the John Brown raid, the Barnburner and Fenian raids to Canada many incursions across the Mexican border and the filibustering expeditions to Cuba and Nicaragua. We have had the Whiskey and Shays rebellions, the election, draft, railroad reconstruction and sundry serious city riots; we have had well on to 200 deadly Indian fights and many awful massacres. We have lost more men in active war since 1776 than any nation in Europe. This is a startling record for a peaceful people,"

Jailor Sannes was interviewed by a Journal reporter last week in relation to the recent jail delivery, and he said that he had often asked the Sheriff to relieve him and appoint some competent, experianced jailor since the first escapade, as he felt that the requirements of the position demanded an old experianced jailor to deal with the class of men confined in the jail, He says the Sheriff's reply was that it was impossible to find a man at this season of the year when everybody was busy and that he had stayed along and did the best he could, While he is a good, honest, well-meaning young man, his statements showed his incompetency for the position, a position that requires the most experianced man, the more especially when we consider the condition of the building that is called a jail.—Polk County Journal.

Chicago Oct, 29.—A special dispatch from Montreal, Que., says: A strong feeling in favor of independece is growing in Quebec, and it can at least be said that two thirds of the people are favorable to it. There was a time when such sentiments as are being openly expressed at present would have been met with the cry of "traitor." That time is past. Not only the French press advocate it but a respectable portion of the English press also have lately come out in support of it. The people are getting dissatisfied with the existing state of affairs which is by no means encouraging. Again, in Ontario annexation meetings are being held in different parts weekly and Col. White conservative member of parliment is about starting an annexationist organ. Le Nationale, a Quebec government organ comes out with a strong article in favor of Independence. It says the efforts of Sir Charles Tupper to sell the French Canadians to the English people with the only object of gorging the Canadian Pacific road and the adjournment of the reciprocity conference are sure indications that Canada is no more a country, but a field of operation for all the monopolists and organizers of English plundering. The article gets a slap at the governor general and goes on to say that the only reason for forcing us to exchange our products with Australia is to justify the Canadian Pacific in opening new lines of steamers and obtaining contracts at exorbitant prices for the carriage of mails and British troops.—Dispatch.

Grand Forks Herald: Tom S. Edson: "Oh, yes. Larimore is booming. We're going to have a new paper out there. We have decided to call it Jugtown Times. And it will be a ripper. As soon as it was understood the drug store license was knocked out, an East Grand Forks liquor dealer shot a man out there and took orders for thirty jugs in less'n two hours. Why its a sight to see'em. They crowd down to the depot every morning just like they do at the post office to get their mail. If the train is a half hour late they just rip around and cuss the railroad company for being so slow, and when she does pull in every feller runs to the express car after his jug, They call it the Jug town express. Bill Fellows and I drink butter-milk but its interestin' to watch the other fellows.

The Tribune observes with amazement that many of its Democratic contemporaries have sprung to arms in defense of the Chilian attack upon our sailors at Valparaiso. To such papers as have permitted their hatred of the administration to outweigh their patriotism the Tribune would recommend a reading of the following findings of the court held on board the United States steamship Baltimore directly after the attack:

Two sailors on the street were insulted by Chilians spitting in their faces, A crowd near by was waiting to attack them should they resent the insult.

The Baltimore's men wisely took refuge in a tram car. The crowd stopped the car and hauled them out, beating them with stones and sticks and knifing them. One man fell with 22 stabs, and while a companion was assisting him to a chemist's a policeman shot him through the neck. He died instantly, A second shot fired passed between the flesh and the shirt of the other man.

An officer with a white cap, presumably a gentleman, drew his sword and slashed both the living and the dead. The attack then became general.

Sailors quietly eating in small restaurants about town were brutally beaten and stabbed.

Mounted police arrived but instead of succoring the sailors began sabering them. One was tied, with nippers about the wrists, to a horse, which was started at full gallop, dragging the man through the streets. Afterwards the horse was walked to another man who was hauled to the station with a lasso about his neck, There was plenty of witnesses on shore to the shooting, but they were afraid to testify. One wrote an annonymous letter to Capt. Schley, and afterward visited the ship, but says he would lose his life if he were known.

The men were obliged to sign a paper declaring that they were satisfied with the police conduct, The paper is in Spanish and the men were ignorant of its contents. The Baltimore's men were completely unarmed, Those arrested were searched at the station. Only six ordinary pocket knives were found. The Chilian investigation was secret. The men's cause was unrepresented, Although Capt. Schley urged that an officer be present his request was denied on the claim that such proceedings are always secret,

From this it would appear that the American sailors were attacked, stabbed and killed without any provocation on their part. The Chilian police evidently took part in the attack, and one of the men killed met his death at the hands of a Chilian representative of the law. This fact without question takes the affair out of the category of local disorders and makes it a matter of international protest.—Minneapolis Tribune,

A Vocal Artist of the Very First Rank:

Miss Ohrstrom is a vocal artist of the very first rank and a singer who commands the attention of the most critical in whatever she is heard. Such artists are heard all too seldom on the concert stage, and when heard are quickly appreciated. Such was most certainly the result last evening. for Miss Ohrstrom's success was instantaneous and most pronounced, and her audiance gave her a most enthusiastic recognition of her grand abilities, She is first a musician and then a singer and in her vocal work she displays with faultless faultless taste and consumate skill the result of these combined qualifications for the concert stage. Her voice has the brilliancy of the true soprano with the richness of the mezzo soprano, and it has been most thoroughly and artistically trained, exhibiting the true method in its use and giving genuine satisfaction in every way. She sang with great taste the old but always enjoyable "Sicilian Vespers," aria by Verdi, and an encore number "Jamie Dear" was given with equal success. The Spanish bolero, "La Veritable Manola", was sung with splendid dash and spirit, and gained the singer another enthusiastic recall, to which she responded by singing a bright Norwegian folk-song to her own accompanyment.—Boston Herald, Nov. 25, 1889.

This charming Scandinavian lady supported by a strong concert company will play and sing at the Grand Opera House at Crookston on Thursday evening November 5th, Miss Ohrstrom sings mostly in Scandinavian, but she also renders a few selections in English. This concert will be a treat to both Scandinavian and American people.

The Planet Jupiter.

A radiant star will adorn the sky for several months to come. It is Jupiter, the largest and grandest planet of the solar system.

He is now in opposition with the sun, rising at sunset, reaching the meridian at midnight and setting at sunrise, being visible through the whole night.

Jupiter in opposition, or opposite the sun, as the word implies, is at his greatest distance from the sun and nearest to the earth, which accounts for his superb appearance.

This majestic planet is equal in volume to 1,300 worlds like ours, and casts a shadow that extends 50,000,000 of miles in space. He is called a planet, but is more like a sun, and probably gives out some light and heat. The rapid changes visible on his surface through the telescope indicate the action of mighty forces, and a possible condition approaching incandescence.

Countless ages must pass before the planet's fires grow low, and are succeeded by periods of development, perfection and decay, the three processes that rule the material universe.

Observers, therefore, may watch the progress of world making on this stately member of the sun's family, as the telescope reveals the varying belts, the rifts, the bright spots, and especially the famous red spot, showing that fierce forces are raging within and beneath the cloud atmosphere that envelops the planet.

Those who are familiar with the planet's story will take a deeper interest in watching the course of the bright star that reigns supreme, and that may be recognized at a glance as, looming above the southeastern horizon like a young moon, he makes his way toward the zenith.—Youth's Companion.

Snow That Did Not Reach the Ground.

Possibly the most novel feature of two balloon voyages near Denver, and the one mostly commented upon, was the experience of the Eagle Eyrie and its occupants in the snowstorm. Not a flake of the "beautiful" dropped in Denver or on the crowds of people who gazed on the air ship directly above them. The sun shone brightly and oppressively hot, and yet in five minutes after the great gas bag had left the earth it was in a raging snowstorm, almost directly over the point where the balloon was cut from its moorings.

It was blowing a perfect fury, the great flakes swirling and flying in blinding profusion into the faces of the voyagers, filling the basket and covering the top with a sheet fully three inches thick. No such occurence has ever been recorded in the history of ballooning, and the chances are not favorable to its ever occurring again. But the space of 100 feet and the occupants of the car vanished from the glowing sunshine into the freezing snow.—Denver Republican.

Sight Restored at Ninety-five.

The Welsh newspapers report a remarkable event at the village of Llanon, Cardiganshire, where the Rev. William Herbert, late rector of the parish, entertained 500 of his parishioners at tea in commemoration of the restoration of his eyesight in his ninety-fifth year. The reverend gentleman, who is the oldest clergyman in the principality, had held the living of Llanon for half a century. Six years ago, however, he lost his sight and resigned the rectorship in consequence. During the last few months he has been under the treatment of an eminent Manchester oculist, and the cataracts being removed from his eyes, his sight has been completely restored, and he is now enabled to read the service in church.—London Globe.

A Dog's Descent in a Parachute.

Quite a novelty in the way of a balloon ascension occurred at Reed Lake recently. Mr. Charles Godfrey, proprietor of a lake hotel, owns a big mastiff, weiging 150 pounds, which has always evinced a great interest in balloon ascensions, and a double parachute was arranged, one for the dog and one for the man. Both went up, and when at an altitude of about 2,000 feet, the dog was swung off. His parachute was slow in opening, but came around all right, and he fell in the middle of the lake, from whence he was rescued by a steamboat. He howled, but was not hurt, and dog ascensions will be a feature hereafter. The Humane society threatens prosecutions.—Grand Rapids Cor. Detroit Free Press.

Sun Spots.

The period of maximum is approaching and amateur and professional astronomers in all quarters of the globe are directing their telescopes to the orb of day in hopes that his smallpoxed appearance will be more than usually interesting. There is an excellent chance for amateurs in this class of observation. The comparison of solar disturbances with the variations of the magnetic needle forms an abundant field for useful work. The owner of the smallest telescope may discover something which will send his name down to posterity in the astronomy text books.—New York Recorder

Sharpsighted observers can see on moonless nights nearly three thousand stars. Jupiter is the brightest of them all. The telescope brings out 50,000,000 stars. Not one can compare with Jupiter. Venus is his only rival, and she is now hidden in the sun's rays, so that he reigns alone.

A cat in Chico, Cal., pounced upon a sparrow and was about to make a meal of it, when a dozen other sparrows flew to the relief of its captured associate. They so terrified the cat that the latter hurriedly dropped the captive and ran away

HOW RUBENS PAID A BILL.

He Painted a Fortune for His Ungrateful Landlord, Who Didn't Like It.

In the beginning of the Seventeenth century Peter Paul Rubens, whose name had not the same sound then as now, lived in Paris, at a modest inn near the palace of his patroness, Maria de Medici. Sometimes he had his pockets full of money and lived like a prince, but oftener he was without a pfennig; at any rate he paid his host very irregularly, or not at all. The host did not consider it an honor to board this great painter, and as he had a supreme contempt for art, he often cast insults at Rubens. One day when the innkeeper was in an especially bad humor he threatened to throw Rubens out of the door like a tramp and without further notice.

Rubens had just had an audience with Louvre, but did not possess a heller. What should he do? The tavern keeper would not reason, but wanted to see cash; under any circumstances money must be procured.

The artist took a small picture of his own from the wall and asked in a note written to one of his friends 1,200 lire for it. Half an hour later the messenger returned, saying that the gentleman would pay only 800 lire for it.

Rubens was furious, threw the picture on the ground and stamped upon it, while the host was still more furious, as his hopes, through this "daub," to get money were dispelled. He wanted to put his guest out on the pavement immediately, when Rubens gave his word of honor that he would pay his debt within eight days.

With these words Rubens hurried up stairs and locked the door. He left the room very seldom and never without taking the key with him. A week later he appeared before his host with a little hand trunk with these words:

"I have kept my promise. Upon the table in my room you will find more money than I owe you. Farewell, sir host!"

Then he left the inhospitable house with the mien of a grand seigneur, who had given rich alms.

The tavern keeper hurried up the stairs to the artist's room. The door stood open and the mass of money which was spread upon the table met his gaze. Fourfold Louis, double Louis, dollars and half dollars lay there in gay confusion. Naturally the good man thought he must quickly put his money in a safe place, but what astonishment and fury he showed when, upon touching a gold piece, he found that it was only painted! The miser, the tramp, had fooled him!

But his anger lessened somewhat when he saw on the walls the rich clothing that had been left by the painter. From the sale of this he could cover a great part of the debt. He reached for a cherry colored velvet mantle—what disappointment! That, too, like the other garments and the glittering gold, was only painted!

The unhappy host was pitied by all his friends who heard it.

The story became further known and the painter's fame grew and spread. Distinguished people streamed to the modest tavern to hear of Rubens' gay trick from the host himself and see the painted clothing—the table had been put in the garret as the owner wanted it out of sight—and many a dollar was spent in the tavern for the purpose of seeing these things.

One day a rich Englishman who doted on art was accidentally told of the deceptive table by the tavern keeper. He asked to see the table, admired it and offered to give the host as much cash in French gold and silver coins as was painted on the table. Naturally the host accepted and was rid of this "disagreeable" piece of furniture.—Philadelphia Times.

A New Motor Engine.

A new method of working motor engines with hot gases and steam is now creating no little interest in English circles. According to this plan the mixture of the steam with the hot gases, to form a charge for doing duty in the working cylinder of the engine, is effected in the following way:

First, the chamber having supplied a charge of mixture to the working cylinder and been afterward open to an exhaust, hot gases are passed through to clean and dry it, and while the chamber is still full of hot, dry gases it is closed. Steam at a suitable pressure is now admitted, mixing there with the hot gases, and forming the working mixture for use in the cylinder. This mixture, being at a high pressure, expands in the cylinder, which, after the former has done duty in effecting a stroke of the piston, is opened to the exhaust, and the spent mixture allowed to escape.

For a single acting engine, one mixing chamber is said to suffice, while a double acting engine requires at least two, in each of which the process takes place; but the chamber or chambers to supply actuating fluid to one end of the cylinder, or of each cylinder, must be separate from those that supply the other end, in order to allow ample time for the process of cleaning out, drying, filling with hot gases, admitting steam, etc.—New York Sun.

A Point for Suburbanites.

A few days since there was published the particulars of a case on the Little Miami railroad wherein Mr. Watters declined to pay his fare, having neglected to place his commuter's ticket within his inside pocket for the convenient reference of the conductor. The train was held for quite fifteen minutes for him to get off. He did not get off and the train men did not put him off. It is understood that the conductor has since been discharged; but that is not all of it. The commuters out along the line have been talking about it ever since, and not long after the occurrence two Camp Dennison citizens became so excited in reviewing it that they came to blows and had to be drawn apart by mutual friends.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Sunday Stamps.

The question of Sunday rest for public officials has lately been to the front in Switzerland. This has induced the postoffice of the republic to test public feeling in a somewhat original way. Special "Sunday stamps" are being printed, which will be for sale at every postoffice. Any letters posted on Sunday with these new stamps affixed will not be delivered on Sunday, but held over till Monday. All those franked with the ordinary postage stamp will be delivered on Sunday. The number of "Sunday stamps" used will decide the future action of the postoffice department.—London Tit-Bits.

The Air's Transparency.

Unlike fog, haze commonly occurs during an unusually dry state of the lower stratum of air. In considering its cause, it has been suggested that the small quantity of nontransparent matter required to produce the dimming effect should always be borne in mind. If the eye can observe the change that comes over a drop of water when the fifty millionth of a gram of fuchsine is introduced, possibly a weight of water or dust not much greater would suffice for visibility in a column of air 1,000 feet long. The air is at all times charged with dust particles to a degree difficult to realize.

The purest air tested by Mr. Atkins when making his measurements on the top of Ben Nevis contained about 84,000 dust particles to each cubic inch, which would give 85,232,000 particles to every cubic foot, or 85,232,000,000 to a horizontal column of 1,000 feet. This being the case, it is manifest that a condensation upon a small proportion of these or a momentary adhesion by electric attraction would suffice to produce the optical effect called "haze" or "haziness."—St. Louis Republic.

Music of the Spheres.

The origin of this everyday phrase is sufficiently interesting to even bear retelling to those that already know it. Pythagoras, the Greek philosopher, while experimenting on the vibrations of tight drawn strings, discovered that strings of certain lengths produced certain notes. He then illogically connected the seven planets known at that time with musical notes for the reason merely that the radii of the seven spheres, in which, according to then existing notions, the planets were set, were of unequal length and therefore (?) produced different notes. These notes he dubbed the "music of the spheres." This music was not supposed to be caused by the friction of the spheres in the sockets in which they were set, as is now currently thought, but was produced by the vibrations of their unequal radii.—New York Recorder.

A Ruthless Relic Fiend.

The relic hunter fiend is at work on the monument of Nathaniel Hawthorne to such an extent that a big fence will be placed about it to keep intruders away. The magnificent tombstone has been chipped continually until now there is scarcely any of it left. A stranger went to the grave last week, and with a heavy chisel broke off a large bit of the stone. He brought it to Boston, it is said, and sold the chips at fabulous prices.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Our Cool Cities.

Sweltering Stranger—Phew! Seems as if I'd melt. Thermometer must be about a hundred.

Citizen—Nonsense! You go to the top of that forty story building, climb into the tower and look up at the official weather service thermometer and you'll find it isn't over seventy-six.—New York Weekly.

A Calf with Eight Feet.

Uncle Peter Ledsinger, colored, who lives in the Fifth district, had a calf born on his place Friday with eight feet—two on each leg. The two surplus ones on the hind legs were rather small. The calf lived until Monday, when it died, never being able to stand up.—Dyersburg (Tenn.) State Gazette.

Out of Place.

The commercial room of English hotels is devoted to that species of business man whom we designate as "drummer," and who, in America, fares with the other guests. John Poole, an English humorist of bygone days, once strolled into a hotel at Brighton, and ordered dinner. As he was discussing his savory chop, another man entered, took his stand by the fire, and began whistling. Finally, he spoke.

"Fine day, sir," said he.

"Very fine," answered Poole.

"Business pretty brisk?"

"I believe so."

"Do anything with Jones on the parade?"

Now it so happened that Jones was the grocer from whom Poole occasionally bought a quarter of a pound of tea, so he answered:

"A little."

"Good man, sir."

"Glad to hear it, sir."

"Do anything with Thompson, in King Street?"

"No sir."

"Shaky, sir!"

"Sorry to hear it, sir. Recommended a course of salt baths!"

The stranger looked earnestly at Poole, advanced to the table, and said, arms a-kimbo:

"Sir, I begin to think you are a gentleman!"

"I hope so, sir," answered Poole; "and I hope you are the same."

"Nothing of the kind!" exclaimed the stranger. "And if you are a gentleman, what business have you here?"

He rang the bell, and when the waiter entered, exclaimed, indignantly.

"Here's a gentleman! Turn him out!"

Poole had unwittingly settled himself in the commercial room of the hotel.

Writing in Errect Characters.

As most adults write without much regard to the angle which the words take, it is to them a matter of supreme indifference whether upright or sloping caligraphy is best for their health. But with children it is different. Hence there may be something in the recommendation of Drs. Von Reuss and Lorenz to the Supreme Council of Hygiene for Austria, that in future children should be taught to write in erect characters. For in this form of penmanship the scholar faces his work and is spared the twist of the body and neck which is always observable in those who write slantwise, and the tendency to spinal curvature induced thereby.

November Discoveries.

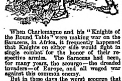
This is a somewhat remarkable month for discoveries beneficial to mankind; and the influence of which continues widening for good.

November 21, 1302, the use and benefit of the ship's compass was discovered, and as without it safe ocean navigation would have been impossible, it may be called the parent of all geographical discoveries that have been made since that time.

November 18, 1497, the Cape of Good Hope was discovered, and then was opened to European commerce a water-way to the treasures of the Orient. Previous to that date, trade between the East and West was done by the slow and often painful progress of the caravan.

November 26, 1778, the Sandwich Islands were discovered, and this has been a boon to Pacific ocean navigators, as a coaling and provisioning station. It ought to belong to the United States, and may some day be annexed by Uncle Sam.

Thanksgiving Day, too, was discovered in New England during this month, some two hundred years ago, and the people of the Northwest have discovered that to make a quick, safe and pleasant journey home on Thanksgiving—or any other day—"The Burlington" is the route to take. Tickets and any other information can be obtained from local agents, or by addressing W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.



When Charlemagne and his "Knights of the Round Table" were making war on the Saracens, in Africa, it frequently happened that Knights on either side would fight in single combat for the honor of their respective armies. The Saracens had been, for many years, the scourge—the dreaded invaders—of Europe, and all waged war against this common enemy.

But in these days the worst scourge that threatens us, is that dread invader, Consumption.

Consumption fastens its hold upon its victims while they are unconscious of its approach. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has cured thousands of cases of this most fatal of maladies. But it must be taken before the disease is too far advanced in order to be effective. If taken in time, and given a fair trial, it will cure, or money paid for it will be refunded.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Asthma, severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an unequaled remedy.

For all diseases that arise from a torpid liver and impure blood, nothing can take the place of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Nothing will, after you have seen what it does. It prevents and cures by removing the cause. It invigorates the liver, purifies the blood, sharpens the appetite improves digestion, and builds up both strength and flesh, when reduced below the standard of health.

THE STRANGE STORY OF A CURIOUS ADVERTISEMENT.

BY J. WEBSTER BAYRES.

CHAPTER I.

Paul Duncan was missing. There was no secret about it. All the county knew, and most of the country too. The police had made inquiries, detectives had been down from London, and the news, under the heading, "Mysterious disappearance of a gentleman," had gone the round of the press. Mr. Duncan's acquaintances discussed the affair, as a matter of course. What had become of him? Suicide was not looked upon as a probably solution of the matter, as his domestic life was supposed to be without a cloud, and he had an income which prohibited any notion of pecuniary embarrassment arising.

"Paul was not the sort of fellow to make a sensation by hiding, or bolting off abroad, to turn up again at Timbuctoo or Tahiti in a month or two," said Captain Curtain to young Rivers, the banker's son, as they sat in their saddles, with a score of others, waiting whilst old Tom Clarke put the Shrigley hounds through Brankswood covers.

"Not he, indeed," said Rivers; "some folks do that sort of thing from what appears to be pure lunacy or devilment, but there's generally a reason for it, whether it ever gets made public or not. Money trouble is out of the question, I know, for he never lived up to his income yet."

"There are other reasons sometimes than money, my boy," broke in old Wilson, of Laythorpe, who had been listening to the conversation. "A woman, for instance; you know the proverb about a woman."

"Oh! nonsense," said Rivers, "if ever a man was in love with his wife, it was Duncan. Why, he worshipped her, and she him, for that matter. No, it is not a woman in this case."

"Well, well," returned Wilson, with a sarcastic smile, "it may be as you say; but if there is not a woman at the bottom of it, or connected with it in some way, it is queer to me. Folks don't get knocked on the head or kidnapped nowadays; but, hello! there he steals away," he cried, pointing with his hunting crop to a fox which had broken cover at the lower end of the woods; and giving his big chestnut his head, he cantered away down the lane, followed by the others, whilst the woods echoed with the merry music of the hounds as they settled to the strong lying scent.

Paul Duncan had been a favorite in the county, a good straight rider, and a good subscriber to the hounds—a sportsman every inch of him; a good entertainer, for he kept open house at Elmsford, and knew how to do it properly. With a charming wife and one pretty little daughter, living the pleasant, easy life of a wealthy country gentlemen, it was not to be wondered that his sudden and unaccountable disappearance caused a commotion amongst his friends and acquaintances. For nearly a month nothing had been heard of him; not a trace of his whereabouts, dead or alive, discovered; and not a ghost of a reason known for his thus absenting himself from his family. He had run up to London for two or three days on business, and the last night of his stay he had written his wife to say that he was leaving by noon train next day, and would be home the same evening. The boots of the hotel where he had stayed took his portmanteau to the station and saw him off by the twelve o'clock express; the railway guard spoke to him at Rugby; and a Manchester gentleman, a Mr. Fielden, saw him walking along the platform at Crewe, apparently alone, and this was the last definite news received regarding him. Up to the time of leaving London he was in the best of health and spirits; he was a very temperate man, of a cheerful, sanguine disposition—a most unlike subject to develop suicidal tendencies. The theory of murder and robbery was also scarcely tenable, as he was tall, powerfully built, very active, and muscular, and not in the habit of carrying much money or many valuables about with him. He had no known enemy in the world, nor had he any associates or friends upon whose character could rest a doubt. A heavy reward and minute description failed to elicit the slightest additional information to that already known, and his disappearance was utterly incomprehensible. Week after week passed away, and multiplied into months, and still no news came of the lost Paul Duncan. A skilled London detective followed up and unravelled one supposed clue after another; friends travelled to different parts of the country to view the bodies of unknown unfortunates cast up by restless tides, or found in lonely lakes or rivers, with a view to identification; the Continental police were communicated with, but all to no purpose, and gradually to Draftshire, as well as the rest of the country, ceased to talk or even think much about the matter. But there was one whose memory did not grow weaker, whose heart did not lose all hope, whose strong wil and great love kept her ever watchful, even energetic, in the vain search for some thread by which to unravel the dreadful secret of Paul Duncan's disappearance, and that was his wife.

Ellen Duncan was not, at first sight, a strikingly handsome woman; she was too little to be handsome, being barely five feet high; nor was she what could be called pretty, for there was too much firmness about her features for such an adjective to correctly apply to her; but that she was good-looking could not be denied. Her complexion was clear and healthy, her small figure perfect in its lines and curves, and her eyes large and liquid. It was in her eyes, perhaps, that her chief attraction lay. In watching them the rest of the features were forgotten and critical analysis disarmed. They were brown in color but whether light or dark brown it would be difficult to say, they changed so with her mood and attitude. As Ellen Corbeille she had a legion of suitors, and as Mrs Paul Duncan she had a host of admirers.

Hers had been truly a love match, and in her husband she had found her heart's desire. Loving him with all the depth of her earnest nature, no wonder that his mysterious disappearance had affected her almost to the upsetting of her reason. For weeks the momentary expectation of his return sustained her. Morning after morning she comforted herself with the thought, "He will surely return today;" but the hope deferred at length broke her down, and it was only after months of careful and incessant nursing that she was able to leave the sick room and resume the care and instruction of her little girl, Mabel, now five years old.

To her great love for the child was attributed her recovery, both physical and mental, from the state of utter prostration into which she had gradually sunk. For Mabel she lived, and in caring for her she seemed to forget, to some extent, at any rate, the great shadow on her young life. She was not now the Mrs. Duncan of the old days. A settled sadness seemed to have taken possession of her, which seldom lifted for a moment, save when alone with Mabel. Some of her acquaintances doubted if she had come so scatheless out of her trouble as was generally supposed, and when discussing her and her position, would whisper with much sorrowful headshaking that "poor Mrs. Duncan's mental condition was not what it was."

Certainly, when she to all outward appearances had given up hope of again seeing or hearing again of her husband, she made great change at Elmsfold. She sold off all the hunting stuff with the exception of Paul Duncan's favorite saddle horse, which was to live at his ease to the end of his days. For herself she retained but her pair of phaeton cobs, Paul's last birthday present to her, and of course, Mabel's Shetland pony. More than half of the large staff of servants, stable hands, gardeners, &c., were got rid of, and a portion of the old hall virtually closed.

It was thought by many that Mrs. Duncan intended leaving the neighborhood altogether, and the course was held to be more advisable, but she would not for a moment entertain such an idea. Drag herself away from the scenes of the happiest years of her life she would not, excepting for short intervals; and within twelve months of the mysterious disappearance of Paul Duncan, his wife or widow, none knew which, had settled down at Elmsfold to a quiet monotonous country life, receiving no company, and but few callers, devoting herself to the care and education of her little daughter, and to an inward brooding over her own great sorrow. The young men of the county said what a pity it was that a jolly little woman like Mrs Duncan should bury herself so completely as she had done. It was all very well for a time, of course, to be quiet and keep out of society and all that sort of thing, but she was as much lost to her friends as was her husband. The subject of such comments, even if aware of them, which it is doubtful if she was, remained in her voluntary seclusion with a strictness which only seemed to increase with time. She was met out driving or walking less and less frequently until by many her existence was almost forgotten, and if recalled, it was only in the shape of an interesting item of information to strangers in the vicinity of Elmsfold, to whom the story was retailed with the various additional details which always attach themselves to, and get incorporated with, such histories in rural districts.

With Mabel it was somewhat different; she was constantly seen riding about the lanes, attended by a groom, and many were the expressions of admiration and pleasure made use of by such as met her. She was healthy and happy, fond of the open air, of horses, and dogs, and birds and flowers, and in fact, of anything connected with outdoor life. Of children her own age she saw but few, and of young companions she had none. Her mother shrinking from leaving her own seclusion, argued that it would be quite soon enough for the child to make friends outside her home circle when she was three or four years older; It was a quiet life the mother and daughter led; to the latter a very happy one, for she was too young at the time of her father's disappearance for the event to make any lasting impression on her mind. To Mrs. Duncan, however, the life was different; quiet it was, peaceful to all appearance also; but the lapse of time, though it had deadened the sharp pain of the earlier months of trial, had not stifled the great longing for news, good or bad, that ever present hope that the lost one might yet return, that some explanation of her husband's absence would be still forthcoming.

CHAPTER II.

AT ELMSFOLD.

Elmsfold Hall was a delightful old mansion, built in the quaint black and white style, so peculiar to Draftshire. Erected in the early part of of the seventeenth century, it was rich in historic associations, and many were the local traditions connected with it and its long line of owners. The private chapel in the south wing, besides being a beautiful specimen of architecture, possessed a ghost of the most orthodox pattern, and many a villager at night shuddered to make use of the short cut through the park which led beneath its walls, though it saved a good mile between North Thorne and Elmsfold.

As the ghost was of the most trustworthy kind, dating back further than the memory of the oldest inhabitant's father before him for the matter of that, its existence could not be doubted, and, therefore, the rustic mind believed as firmly in it as it did in what the parson or agent for the estate said. According to the generally accepted story, the apparition took the form of a lady the wife of Mortimer Capesthorne a cavalier of Charles the First's time. He was the builder of Elmsfold, though his family could be traced to much remoter times. He was a very hot-tempered man, and a bitter partisian of the Royalist cause, hating Parliamentarians with an intense hatred. Returning home after the disastrous rout on Marston Moor, where he had fought under Prince Rupert, he surprised his wife at night in the chapel in secret audience with her only brother, a young lad of twenty, who had joined the popular party, under Essex. So enraged was Mortimer Capesthorne at this discovery, that he slew the young Puritan at the feet of his wife, and then, turning locked her in the chapel, swearing a dreadful oath that it should be her prison for life; which it was, for, when two days after, he sent to let her out, having repented somewhat, she was found dead beside her murdered brother. A gruesome enough story.

No wonder, therefore, that the "White Lady Elmsfold," who was said to appear at the chapel windows at night, beating against the panes with her hands as though trying to escape, should possess a personality for the neighboring villagers; in which even nineteenth-century civilization could not shake their faith. According to local traditions, Mortimer Capesthorne was shot by Cromwell's own hand at the battle of Naseby; anyway he disappeared from history about that time, and his descendants or heirs held Elmsfold undisturbed, so far as possession went, until a more unlucky or improvident Capesthorne than usual plunged so deeply in those carding, dicing, duelling days of the second George, that the old Draftshire estates had to pass into other hands, and, for a time, the family disappeared from the view and ken of the sleepy old grazing county. The ruined gamester emigrated with his family to the West Indies, where he or some of his descendants retrieved their fortunes either by planting or commerce, or both, for, about 1850, an undoubted Capesthorne, of Elmsfold, appeared in London society, possessed of immense wealth, a handsome Creole wife, and one son—a boy of about seven, named after his ancestor of evil repute, Mortimer. The wealthy West Indian had visited Draftshire, called upon Paul Duncan's father, who then held Elmsfold, and tried hard to repurchase his old family estates; but Mr. Duncan, whose grandfather had bought them, was not to be tempted, and Mr. Capesthorne had to satisfy himself with acquiring a neighboring property, known as Oakwood.

Mortimer Capesthorne and Paul Duncan, as boys, had seen much of each other. They had been together at Eton; they had both graduated at Oxford in the same year; they had followed the Draftshire hounds from the time they could sit a pony almost; their fathers had died, leaving them heirs to neighboring estates, within a few months of each other; and yet none could say that they were more than acquaintances. Notwithstanding their close connection in youth and manhood, there had never been any brotherly companionship between them. Their familiarity had not gone beyond the conventional greeting of, "Hello! Duncan, how are you?" or, "Well, Capesthorne, will you be at the meet tomorrow?" As men, they were diametrically opposites. Paul Duncan was fair, light haired, muscular, a little brusque, too thoroughly John Bullish to be refined to the point understood by society to mean refinement. Mortimer Capesthorne was swarthy in complexion; the Capesthornes were all dark, but the admixture of Creole blood had made him darker still; spare, but tall of figure; very aristocratic in style; wonderfully cool and composed in all his actions; reserved and haughty in manner. That he was clever, there could be no doubt; a fluent if not a brilliant talker; a handsome man certainly; but somehow he never made any friends. Acquaintances he had plenty, but intimates none. Until college days were over, until, in fact, they had each entered into their inheritance and taken up their positions as countrymen of means, and influence, there had never been any known ill-feeling between the two; they simply did not "chum-together," that was all that could be said. But when the time for wooing or mating came—as it comes sooner or later to the most of men—there came with it the jealousy as well as the joy which is bred of love.

As luck would have it, Mortimer Capesthorne of Oakwood and Paul Duncan of Elmsfold became rivals for the hand of Ellen Corbeille. There was no open rupture about the affair. So far as Paul went there was no occasion for such a thing. Certainly, when Ellen told him that Capesthorne had proposed before him, and had, upon being refused, flown into a passion terrible to see, and said things about Paul and Elmsfold (which he looked upon as belonging by right to the Capesthornes), the said Paul got his back up, so to speak, and talked about a horse whip, which he would and could have used; but gentle words and a kiss quelled his passion, and when his heat was over, he laughed, as those who win can, and said he pitied that poor devil of a Capesthorne, for it was enough to make any one mad to miss such a treasure as he had won in Ellen Corbeille.

Though Paul Duncan, in his free and easy way, treated the matter thus lightly once his indignation was over, it was far otherwise with his rival. Mortimer Capesthorne had inherited the Capesthorne temper in an intensified degree, and in addition, from whatever source derived, probably from his West Indian ancestors, he was liable to fits of moroseness undreamt of by his equals, but only too well-known and dreaded by his servants and dependents. From boyhood he had always looked upon the Duncans as interlopers, not that he ever spoke about it; what would have been the use? The Elmsfold estates had been acquired legitimately by their present holders; but he came of a proud race and as he grew in years the feeling also grew that the home of his forefathers was his by right of descent, and that in not re-selling the property to his father or himself, the Duncans had done him an irreparable injury.

FORCED TO BE PATRIOTIC.

Amusing Claim of a Sawmill Man in Relation to Chickamauga.

The attempts made by some men to claim credit where none is due are often amusing; but one of the most humorous incidents of the kind that has ever come under my observation took place when the Chickamauga National Park Commissioners were negotiating for the land on which the battle was fought, says Gen J. S. Fullerton in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. A man owned a sawmill on the field, but very little work had been done by it. When we came to his land he wanted a funny price for it, giving as a reason that if he had not stopped his sawmill the field would have been stripped of timber and its most characteristic feature lost. For this he thought himself entitled to the national gratitude expressed in the form of hard cash.

An investigation proved just how much credit that particular woodsman deserved for sparing the trees. When the logs were taken to the mill and sawing commenced it was found that they were so full of bullets and fragments of shell that saw after saw was splintered and operations had to be suspended. It may be judged how much consideration was given to the man's patriotic claims.

"August Flower"

Dyspepsia. There is a gentleman at Malden-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., named Captain A. G. Pareis, who has written us a letter in which it is evident that he has made up his mind concerning some things, and this is what he says:

"I have used your preparation called August Flower in my family for seven or eight years. It is constantly in my house, and we consider it the best remedy for Indigestion, and Constipation we have ever used or known. My wife is troubled with Dyspepsia, and at times suffers very much after eating. The August Flower, however, relieves the difficulty. My wife frequently says to me when I am going to town, 'We are out of August Flower, and I think you had better get another bottle.' I am also troubled with Indigestion, and whenever I am, I take one or two teaspoonfuls before eating, for a day or two, and all trouble is removed."

The National Capital.

The City of Washington is an object of perennial interest to all patriotic Americans. Not alone because it is the great throbbing heart of the mightiest and grandest Republic the earth has ever known, but also on account of its material magnificence. All Americans take pride in its beautiful avenues, majestic architecture, stately homes, and well stored galleries and museums as things of grandeur and beauty in themselves, apart from the historic interest with which they are invested. It is a hope and aspiration of all "YOUNG AMERICA," at least, to some time or other visit the Capital of his country.

The Baltimore and Ohio R. R. offers unequalled facilities in aid of this desire. All its through trains between New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore on the east, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Chicago on the west, pass through Washington. Its fast Express trains are vestibuled from end to end and heated with steam. Pullman's latest and best productions in the way of sumptuous Drawing Room Sleeping cars are attached to all its through trains. The present management of the B. & O. have made vast improvements in the last two years, and the road is to day one of the foremost passenger carrying lines in the country. Through tickets via B. & O. R. R. can be procured at all the principal ticket offices through the United States.

Loved and Lost.

The love between Robert Browning and his wife was ideal, in the true sense of that much-abused word. And her death, after a few short years of married life, left the poet inconsolable. To him she remained always the dearest and most lovely of created beings, and her gift seemed to him far greater than his own. A writer in the Christian Union gives the following pathetic sketch of a chance interview with him:

I was travelling in Italy. There were few tourists in my compartment, and all were absorbed in books or revery, until the close of the long, tiresome day. Then it was that the elderly gentleman who had sat by my side without moving his eyes from the landscape, made a comment that invited conversation.

"You are fond of poetry?" he asked, when something in the shifting splendor of the Italian skies evoked from me a Byron couplet.

"Oh, yes," I responded. "I love poets and poetry."

The old gentleman grew young, and never shall I forget the wonderful thought and imagery that flowed in a continous stream from his lips.

"Who are your favorite poets?" he asked abruptly.

I named them and without further comment, quoted my favorite poem, one of Mrs. Browning's. When I had finished, my companion resumed his post by the window, and did not deign to notice me again.

I was much discomfited. Had I given offence? Before reaching our destination I ventured to say:

"I suspect, sir, that you do not like Mrs. Browning's poetry."

The dark eyes of the stranger turned pitifully upon me, and he said," "Madam, that sonnet is the sweetest, and its singer the most precious gift life has given me. She was my wife."

A Neat Compliment.

A gentleman in Fargo, who recently returned from a trip in the East, speaks of his trip as follows: "We took in the magnificent day boat ride from New York to Albany, and enjoyed the luxury of the New York Central Limited and other famous trains, but I want to say for "The North-Western Line"—C. St. P. M. & O. Ry., that the most elegant, convenient and absolutely comfortable cars we rode in was on their Vestibuled Gas Lighted train from St. Paul to Chicago. I had not been on the "The North-Western Line" for a long time. This time I started without being influenced by the agent, and was so pleased with my good judgment in selecting "The North-Western Line," that I give it and the line a free puff."

The famous Vestibuled Limited carrying magnificent new style Pullman and Wagner Sleepers leaves St. Paul at 7.30 P. M. daily, and makes the trip to Chicago in 13 and ¼ hours. The Fast daylight express leaves St. Paul at 7.50 A. M. daily, and makes the trip in 13 hours and 40 minutes and makes connections with all trains East and South.

Not a Local Disease
Because Catarrh affects your head, it is not therefore a local disease. If it did not exist in your blood, it could not manifest itself in your nose. Both legs were crushed and he lived but a short time. Mr. Funston had just returned from a visit to Ireland. Mr. Funston gained some prominence a few years ago by challenging M. M. Ham, editor of the Herald, to a duel.

It is understood that, as a result of the Democratic victory in Iowa, arrangements are already being made for reopening two breweries at Sioux City that have been closed for several years, and also that the Union Stock Yard company will build one of the largest distilleries in the West. The capital is ready, and the projectors are only waiting for assurances that the prohibitory law will be repealed.

Keeps Tab on the Waiters.

In a big Fulton Street restaurant there is a man with a peculiar speciality. It must have taken him years of pratice to perfect himself in it, and as far as is known he has his unique field all to himself. He stands at a desk directly opposite the stairs which lead to the kitchen, and the waiters in going and returning therefrom have to pass before him. On the desk is a great card with a list of every solid and liquid that the restaurant sells running down the side of it. As the waiters pass from the kitchen they swing their trays toward him and at a glance he makes a mental list of everything upon them and writes their prices down upon a card with electric rapidity. During the busy hours his pen is kept going incessantly, and he never makes a mistake, and when the day closes the proprietors have the record of its sale before them to the final and exact penny. He is a variety of automatic cash register that ought never to fail to find a market.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

In China all the land belongs to the state; and a trifling sum per acre, never altered through long centuries, is paid for it by the occupier as rent. The soil in China is so rich that the holdings are generally very small, and it has been estimated that a square mile is capable of supporting 3,840 persons. In this country, nominally, owners of the land hold it of the crown. Although, however, as admitted by Lord Bramwell in letters to the Times, this is technically true, yet it is most misleading, as owners of a fee simple estate in land in this country have for all practical purposes as absolute ownership in the land they hold. If an owner dies intestate without heirs his land reverts to the crown, though the owner had the power of disposal had he so wished. Under similar circumstances a man's personal property as well as his land, if he dies intestate with no next of kin, goes to the crown.—Lancester (Eng.) News.

Valuable Gold Coins.

The largest gold coin now in circulation is said to be the gold ingot, or "loof," of Anam, a French colony of Eastern Asia. It is a flat, round gold piece, and on it is written in India ink its value, which is about $220.

The next sized coin to this valuable but extremely awkward one is the "obang" of Japan, which is worth about $55; and next come the "bendas" of Ashantee, which represents a value of about $49.

The California $50 gold-piece is worth about the same as the "benda."

The heaviest silver coin in the world also comes from Anam, where the silver ingot is worth about $15; then comes the Chinese "tael," and then the Austrian double thaler.—Yankee Blade.

Had Him Cold.

"I hear you fought a duel with Parker."

"I did."

"Weren't you afraid to stand up before a loaded pistol?"

"Not with Parker holding it. I'm insured in his company."

ALL QUIET IN CHILI.

Rumors That the Baltimore Had Been Blown Up by Chilians Only a Scare.

News Direct From Capt. Schley Stating There Are No Signs of Trouble.

Washington, Nov. 10.—A cablegram received by Secretary Tracy from Capt. Schley dated Valparaiso, Chili, yesterday states that there are no indications of any feeling of hostility toward the Baltimore's company at Valparaiso.

The navy department announced to-day, in issuing this cablegram for publication, that it was not sent by Capt. Schley in response to any inquiry from here. It was probably inspired by the receipt at Valparaiso of cablegrams from friends of the officers of the ship, asking about the truth of rumor that was abroad here two or three days ago that the Baltimore had been blown up by the Chilians. Capt. Schley, undoubtedly thought that if such a rumor was circulating at home he would better deny it officially. His remark about the lack of hostility towards his men is taken to mean that there are no open signs of antagonism just now, whatever may have been the state of public feeling nearly a month ago, when the attack was made on the crew in the city.

Regarding the report of unusual activity and Sunday work in the navy yards, it is said at the navy department that it has no warlike significance. No order has been sent from the department for Sunday work, and it is not known officially that there has been any. It has been a common practice to work a force of men over time at navy yards when there was a particular need for haste, and if work has been pushed on Sundays it has been in pursuance of the general order to hasten the work of repair on the ships in order to have them in readiness for their winter cruises. The order in the case of the Miantonomah was issued weeks ago. The monitor has gone into commission, which puts the government to considerable expense to maintain her, so that it is in the interest of economy to hasten her completion and put her in serviceable condition.

In the case of the Atlanta, orders were sent to complete her repairs in all haste, when disquieting news was received from Brazil last week with the intention of sending her to Rio Janeiro. The orders have not been countermanded, notwithstanding the disappearance of the urgent features of the situation in Brazil, so that any work done on the vessel yesterday was in pursuance of the original order. The construction bureau of the navy reports that, while the work of repair of the ships has been progressing rapidly as a matter of fact, the bureau itself has less work under way at present than for months past.

SUSPICIOUS ACTIVITY.

A Great Hurry to Get War Vessels Ready for Sea.

New York, Nov. 10.—These are busy times at the Brooklyn navy yards. Night and day the rattling of chains and clanging of hammers resound through the usually quiet yard; the big store houses are open all the time, and, although from the commandant down to the storekeeper, one and all say there is nothing up, there is every indication of a hurried departure of the fleet for some kind of foreign service.

On all the ships additional coal room has been made and extra stores taken on board. The Bennington this morning had steam up and was ready to put to sea at a moment's notice. All her men were on board and no one was allowed shore leave. The Atlanta, which is on the dry dock, was taking in coal, and will be ready for sea by Friday. The officers of the ship were getting their dunnage on board. The Chicago is another ship ready for sea, and her men, waiting orders, were taken out in the yard and drilled in shore movements. Work on the monitor Miantonomah was progressing with a rush.

Commandant Erban this morning was the busiest of the busy men in the navy yard. He reached his office at 9 o'clock, and immediately sent a hurried order summoning Capt. Kain, the chief engineer, and several other officers. For an hour and a half they were in consultation, and then the officers hurried off to different departments and began sending orderlies on the rush in all directions. A telegraphic order was received at the ordnance department this morning to hurry up certain guns. "Have the guns ready by Friday," said Commandant Erban, "even if you have to work overtime."

Another dispatch stated that the Newark, now at the navy yard at Charlestown, Mass., had been ordered to the Brooklyn navy yard. The dispatch stated that she must be ready for sea in ten days.

Two Fire Fighters Killed.

Cincinnati, Nov.—A fire broke out this morning in Oscar Onken's picture frame manufactory, No. 134 West Second street. A ladder put up by the firemen fell and killed Lieut. William Bocklage and Pipeman Edward Anderson. Four other firemen were injured, but not fatally. The fire was caused by an explosion of fine varnish in the cellar. William Marsh, who was at work in the cellar, was fearfully burned, and was imprisoned there until the flames were subdued so that he could be brought out. He then appeared to be a raving maniac. His hair was burned off, and the whole scalp had the appearance of being burned to a crisp. His injuries are not fatal. Loss, $30,000; insurance, $16,000.

Little Girl Accidentally Shot.

Owatonna, Minn., Special, Nov. 10.—At Deerfield yesterday Ed Smith shot Abbie Wheeler in the breast with a revolver, the ball passing through the lungs. The location of the ball is not determined. She is in a critical condition. Smith claims that he "didn't know it was loaded." The doctors think she may possibly live.

Drowned at Waterville.

Waterville, Minn., Nov. 10.—Robert Westbury, aged nineteen, was drowned yesterday by the overturning of a boat. His companion, Fred Harlow, narrowly escaped.

The Octopus Squirms.

New Orleans, Nov. 10.—The lottery people are exercised over what they claim is in violation of the Sunday law by the postoffice authorities. For the first time in many years there was a delivery of mails by carriers on Sunday. The lottery people claim that the delivery was for the purpose of disseminating literature to influence the result of next Tuesday's Democratic convention. It is said that Congressman Lagan will call Mr. Wanamaker's attention to the matter, and the lottery side will also retaliate by using the incident to show a combine between the antis and the Warmoth or custom house wing of the Republican party.

ELECTION RETURNS.

Results of the Political Battles in the Several States.

NEW YORK.

New York, Special.—Roswell P. Flower was elected as governor of New York to succeed David B. Hill. His plurality is estimated between 18,000 and 24,000. Fassett did not carry his own city, Flower beating him there by 504 votes. This city gave Flower 58,000 plurality, and Brooklyn gave him 14,000.

In the legislature the Republicans have elected seventeen of their candidates, and the Democrats fourteen, and in the Third district J. T. Edwards, an independent Republican opposed to Senator Vedder and indorsed by the Democrats, is elected; to the assembly seventy-six Democrats, sixty-one Republicans, and two independent Democrats are elected, the latter being county Democrats who had been indorsed by the Republicans in the Twenty-second and Twenty-fourth New York City districts respectively.

The Republican estimate of the legislature's composition is: Senate—Republicans 18, including Edwards, from the Thirty-second district; Democrats 14. Assembly—Republicans 65, Democrats 63.

OHIO.

Columbus, Special.—The latest figures on Tuesday's election, with nine counties estimated and a few others unofficial, made by the Republican state executive committee, place McKinley's plurality at 20,496. The Republicans now claim from 48 to 50 on joint ballot in the legislature. The latest reports elect Hayes (Rep.) to the house in Pike-Adams, while Stark, with two representatives, is doubtful, the indications being that Thomas (Rep.) and Weybrecht (Dem.) are elected. Two representatives from this county would give the Republicans fifty on joint ballot.

Hamilton, O., Special.—The county election board this afternoon finished the official count of the election returns in this, Campbell's own county, and figures given out are a great disappointment to Gov. Campbell's supporters. The official count gives him a majority of 3,296, as against 3,575 two years ago. This shrinkage was contrary to the best information of those supposed to be posted and was even less than Republicans conceded.

IOWA.

Des Moines, Special.—Geo. Boies was re-elected governor of Iowa by a majority of between 9,000 and 10,000.

The Democrats made a clean sweep of the state offices. Dey (Democrat) for railroad commissioner, will probably have nearly 4,000 plurality. The senate will be Democratic by a vote of 26 to 24. The house will be Republican by 54 to 46. These figures are as nearly correct as returns justify. Three independents are conceded elected.

The Republicans are now claiming that Sabin, for superintendent, is probably elected by a small plurality. In the counties heard from he runs ahead nearly 100 each. At that rate he will overcome the Democratic plurality on the head of the ticket of about 8,000, the latest estimate on Boies.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia, Special.—Complete figures from every county in the state show a plurality of 58,899 for Gregg, Rep., for auditor general, and 53,764 plurality for Morrison, Rep., for state treasurer. The above computation is made from official returns in nearly all the counties and unofficial footings in the remainder. While Morrison's plurality is over 5,000 less than that of Gregg, he carried every county that gave a majority to the head of the ticket, with the exception of Erie county, the home of Tilden, his Democratic opponent. Erie gave Gregg 895 plurality and Tilden 101 plurality. In Allegheny county, Morrison's home, his plurality was 172 greater than that of Gregg.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, Special—Complete returns makes the next legislature stand: Senate, Republicans 23, Democrats 17; house, Republicans 150, Democrats 89, Prohibition 1. In this summary all independent Republicans are counted as Republicans and all independent Democrats as Democrats. Unofficial figures from the whole state show the vote to be as follows: Russell, 157,037; Allen, 150,109; Kimball, Prohibition, 8,162; Winn, People's, 1,318. Russell's plurality, 6,868. Russell last year had a plurality of 9,053.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Huron, Special.—The lowest estimate gives Jolley the state by 6,000. A very light vote was polled, not to exceed two-thirds of the total vote. The Independents lose heavily in all parts of the state. The Black Hills region, as far as reported, gives Woods a larger vote than expected and less for the Independents. Returns from Deadwood say that in all but five precincts in Lawrence county Jolley has 1,128 votes, Smith 991, Woods 433. Those to hear from may lessen Jolley's plurality to 100.

MARYLAND.

Baltimore, Special.—The Democratic ticket received increased majorities in fifteen counties. The plurality of the state Democratic ticket is over 15,000. Brown, governor, has 17,455 plurality in the city; Poe, attorney general, 13,795; Latrobe, mayor, has 8,030 majority; Kear, state attorney, 9,106. The Democrats also carry the First Legislative district by 5,223 the Second by 4,610 and the Third by 2,900.

Antiquity of Civilization.

Edinburgh Review: We cannot but be struck with the immense antiquity of civilization in Western Asia, whence, as a center, trade, art and literature spread westward to the Greeks and Italians and eastward to India and China. The monuments show us that at least as early as 250 B. C. distinct civilizations existed in Chaldera, in Syria and in Egypt. It is true that the early date which has been assigned to Menes by scholars who reckon thirty years as the average reign of an Egyptian monarch (whereas the dated reigns often do not exceed five or six) rests on no secure basis, and extravagant estimates, based on equally unsafe deductions, have been offered by some of our cuneiform scholars, who would carry back Akkadian civilization to 4000 B. C. But there extravagancies do not discredit the recorded antiquity of the Chaldees, and which show that even earlier than the period assigned as the time when the primitive Hebrew patriarchs found their way along the Euphrates and through Syria to Egypt there were organized states, walled towns, chariots and horses, riches of gold and silver, bronze and iron, of corn, wine, and oil, not only among the Akkadians and in Egypt, but also in Phoenicia and in Palestine.

A Public Spanker.

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle: A San Francisco policeman has evolved and put in practice an idea that is worthy of emulation by guardians of the public order in every city of the United States. A small boy ran in front of a moving street car with no other purpose than to show how nearly he could come to being crushed to death without actually suffering that catastrophe. The spectators were horrified, the motorman was filled with a frenzy of exasperation and fear. A policeman who was present seized the boy, placed him across his knee and gave him a sound spanking.

Wheat is 77 cents.

The roads are improving but are still bad enough in many places.

John Dainard went down to Crookston last Monday on business.

If you want to insure your buildings against fire, call at this office.

Butter and eggs are scarce articles these days and command good prices.

The weather turned cold this morning and it looks now as if it might freeze up.

A slight flurry of snow fell here this forenoon but not enough to stop threshing.

It rained for a few minutes last evening, Rather late for storms of that kind,

The North Star Lung and Throat Balsam is a sure cure for coughs and colds.

D. E. Hatlestad, the Crookston attorney, was in town last Monday on legal business.

It would be a big thing for the farmers if it would only freeze up without any snow,

Our merchants report increasing sales with considerable cash business and some collections.

O. H. Peters and family have moved into the Watts house on the west side of the track.

Pete Misgen, the Crookston pop man was in town last Monday taking orders for that harmless beverage.

S. M. Dainard has moved his hay scales from second street and placed them in front of his lumber office.

A crew of railroad carpenters are in town this week making needed repairs on the turntable. On this account the engine could not be turned today and had to go to Crookston backward.

J. O. Dypvic was in town last Monday on his way to Grand Forks. He had been looking over his farm a few miles north of here. He is now residing at Grand Forks and has rented his farm.

Ignatius Donnelly will try conclusions with the Pioneer Press again and has brought two suits at St. Paul for $150,000. Ignatius is a hard fighter and it will take more than one defeat to down him.

Henry Norland and family arrived last Saturday from Brainerd where they have been living the past year. Mr. Norland will still hold his position on the N. P, but the family will reside on their farm east of here.

It is reported that one banner in the temperance parade at Ottumwa, Saturday, was carried by an old woman bowed down with the weight of years and on which was inscribed: "I Cannot Vote but My Papa Can." Another, which bore the inscription, "The lips that Touch Wine Shall Never Touch Mine," was borne by a particularly homely old maid with a face that would stop a clock.—Sioux Falls Journal.

Rev. Lindholm, of Moorhead and Rev. Mattson, of St. Peter, were here a couple of days the first of the week assisting Rev. Moody in holding services in the Swedish Lutheran Church, They were the guests of C. G. Rapp while here.

The fact that Jerry Simpson put up at a six-dollar-a-day hotel in Cleveland and indulged in such aristocratic food and drink as diamond back terrapin, champaigne and canvas back duck has caused more comment than it should, Does anybody imagine that Jerry has been working his little racket for his health?—Tribune.

The Supreme Court of Minnesota has rendered the following decision affecting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace. "Under the statutes as now existing, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a criminal charge for selling liquor without a license, or for an attempt to evade the statute prohibiting such sale."

The wheat men here have been raising the limit just a trifle the last week and some lively bidding has been indulged in. The average farmer when he sees three or four buyers around him wears a very satisfied smile and accepts the highest bid in a very contented manner, It is a snap for the farmers who can haul in their wheat but poor roads prevent many from coming in.

Sheriff Grundysen, heeding the advice given him a few days ago relative to the escape of prisoners from the jail at Crookston, has fired the derelict jailor and now holds the fort himself. He avails himself of every legitimate device to keep those confided to his charge in safe keeping, and the Bulletin is assured that if there is a leakage of prisoners from the jail, that the fault will not be chargeable to the sheriff.—Fisher Bulletin.

The senate capital commission met last Wednesday, at the Merchants hotel and did some preliminary work with reference to the new state capital. The opinions at present expressed, and as embodied in resolutions adopted, are that they recommend the present site, or one within a half mile radius of the present site, provided the plans adopted should require larger grounds. It was agreed to recommend the construction of a building costing between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000.—Times,

The threshing machines are all hard at work but they are having a sorry time of it, It takes them fully one half of the time to move. It is estimated by those who ought to know that there is not over forty per cent of the grain in this vicinity threshed. If it would only freeze up without any snow falling work would progress rapidly, At the best it will take several weeks of steady work to finish and if we have a heavy fall of snow a large amount of threshing must be left over until spring.

Col. R. D. Bingham, of Chicago, the general travelling agent for the celebrated humorous paper, the "Arkansaw Traveler," was here a couple of days last week soliciting subscriptions. He succeeded in forming a club here of nearly every business man in town, As an inducement to obtain subscribers he made arrangements for a general write up of the town and country which the paper will publish free of charge, The Great Northern will also use the matter for a spring boom edition which they are preparing.

It would be rather peculiar if the Chilian affair should be the signal for the long talked of great European war, yet that is what is now predicted. Should the United States and Chili actually engage in conflict, it is almost certain that England would interfere, on the ground that she must protect her own interests in South America. This would be the application of the match to the powder magazines of the world and universal war would result. Such is the exciting picture drawn by some prophets. but is it not possible that the commercial interests of the nations may even yet avert the war that seems imminent?—St, Paul Dispatch.

The New York Herald sets about with calm deliberation to demonstrate that the election of Mr. Flower is a rather bad thing for the Democratic party after all. It will set people to thinking. Tammany Hall has extended its zone of influence as far as the boundaries of New York State extend and has a tigerish eye on Washington. As surely as Tammany puts its dirty finger into national politics in a dictatorial way, just so surely will the nation at large give Tammany a slap on the jaw louder, harder, more effectual than the one which sent it staggering out of the Chicago convention in 1884 with a black eye. The danger to the democracy lies on the fact that the blow may not come in the convention but at the polls.—Press.

Le Mars, Iowa, Sentenal: The verdict shows that reformers have lain down or changed their views. Practically it makes no difference which. This is galling to the men and women who have hoped and still hope to benefit the people of Iowa by abolishing the saloon The verdict of the people this fall is another argument in favor of the position that the prohibitory law has come before its time and should wait for a more advanced condition of public sentiment. There can be no enforcement for the next two years with Boies as governor, Time alone can tell what effect two more years of Boies rule will have on public sentiment in Iowa. The effect of the past two years, as shown by the vote, has not been such as was expected by the Republicans.

The three boys who undertook to wreck a train near Ada last June, by piling ties on the track, were indicted by the grand jury of Norman county this week. Their names are Fred Schumaker, Henry Knusen an, and Albert Schlenz. The first indictment, however, was invalid, owing to an illegal action by the jury and the indictment was quashed, but the boys were at the same time put under $500 bonds to appear at the next grand jury. These were the boys who placed five piles of green oak ties within a distance of 700 feet, and also put some ties in a culvert bridge with the ends sticking up above the bridge making a wreck perfectly positive when the train arrived. The train did not reach that far, however, so that their aims were not accomplished. —Crookston Daily Tribune.

Grand Forks Herald: A shooting scrape occurred somewhere in East Grand Forks at an early hour yesterday morning. The matter was kept very quiet all day and it was not until last evening that the affair leaked out. The victim is a young man, a railroad brakeman, whose name is withheld at his request. He stubbornly refuses to give any information as to who fired the shot. He made his way alone across the point bridge about six o'clock He went to Dr. Logan's residence and informed him that he had been shot. The doctor took him to his office and an examination showed that the ball had entered the right shoulder, making quite a painful though not serious wound. The young man then went to the Windsor hotel in East Grand Forks where he is now stopping. The place where the shooting was done is kept an entire secret, but as the police is quietly investigating the matter, the mystery will soon be unravelled.

The situation in Chili does not seem half so grave as the English and Democratic press would try to make it appear.

It is possible that minister Egan has not been as discreet or as wise as he might have been, but his short comings have been greatly magnified by the English papers because they desire to discourage the developing trade relations between the Latin American Republics and the United States, and Democratic papers because they are only glad to have an opportunity for a thrust at Secretary Blaine upon whom they look instinctly as the standard bearer of the Republican party in 1892. From both these sources whatever disposition there may be on the part of Chili to act ugly receives substantial encouragement. From present indications it would seem that the little unpleasantness between the two nations will be amicably settled —West St. Paul Times.

THE ELECTIONS.

The election last week was hardly a triumph for either party, both getting a share of the spoils. In Ohio the Republicans make a clean sweep of everything carrying the state by about twenty thousand plurality and electing a large majority of the legislature. In New York the Democrats took nearly everything in sight, electing their state ticket be over forty thousand plurality. The legislature is Democratic on joint ballot but the Republicans have a majority in the senate. In Iowa the Democrats elect their state ticket and the Republicans carry the legislature. The result there is certainly due to the prohibition question. In Massachusetts the Democrats elect their governor and the Republicans the ballance of the state ticket and the legislature. In Pennsylvania the Republicans carry everything in sight by a large majority. Nebraska South Dakota and Colorado go Republican and New Jersey and Mississippi go Democratic.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: In discussing the pravelent prejudice against the owners of western farm mortgages, the Northwestern Agriculturist gives some very pertinent suggestions: "It is natural for a debtor to dislike a man he owes, but the hostility to the owner of farm mortgages now being cultivated for political purposes is worse than absurd, The people who lend money on farm mortgages are not "money kings" or "gold bugs." Men of great wealth do not deal in mortgages on lands, They can make larger profits on speculations and combinations. The money which goes into farm mortgages is the carefully accumulated savings of other farmers, of teachers and preachers, and small properties inherited by widows and orphans, and trust funds of various kinds. In fact, most of the eastern talk about farm mortgages is made for the purpose of frightening small investors from sending money away from home and inducing them to to deposite it in savings banks, where these same rich speculators can command the use of it when they need it to send up or bring down prices. A moment's reflection would convince anyone that rich men are not the ones who invest in such securities as farm securities, as farm mortgages. Nearly all the fortunes accumulated in recent years have come out of speculation, a game in which what one gains some other man must lose.

DESOLATION.

"At last we are alone!"

It was the man who spoke.

The woman trembled and lifted her eyes to his face.

They were beautiful eyes, but they were tremulous eyes; eyes which look out from a heart which is irresolute, fearful.

He stamped his heavy foot upon the floor of the room.

The echoes brought back in their invisible arms the sound. and let it ripple out again until it struck the walls once more and fell into the vast void of silence.

A bat, disturbed by the unusual activity, darted from a corner and blindly dashed in eccentric convolutions about the dusty building.

Great ropes of cobwebs hung down from the ceiling and across the corner of the room dead flies swung lightly in the hammocks the spiders had fastened there.

The dust rose in listless clouds from the shock of the heavy footfall, and sank again overcome by its own merits

Even the air was resting.

The spirit of desolation seemed to pervade the place.

The woman looked furtively around upon her dim surroundings and shivered,

The man laughed harshly,

"Alone, I said" he growled.

"Yes," she murmered.

A faint light struggled in through the great windows in front, thick with dust.

"Where are we?" she whispered and shivered as the bat dashed into her hair.

"Listen," he replied hoarsely; "we are in a store which does not advertise." —Detroit Free Press.

A Canine Treadmill.

"Churn dog" stories are always in order. A city man who used to live on a farm, as so many city men did when they were boys, sends us this: "At home on the farm we had a number of cows, so many that churning was too heavy a task for even the men folks, so Mr. L. rigged up a dog churn, an inclined wheel, a sort of canine treadmill. It became the duty of Ponto, a large white mastiff, to tread that monotonous cycle, and notwithstanding the toothsome bit of meat that was fastened on a lath within four inches of his nose, he was not at all proud of his position and responsibility. He made several attempts to shirk his task, and twice succeeded. He got to know when churning day came around as well as any one in the house.

"On the morning of that day he would loiter about the kitchen door until he was fed, and as soon as he heard the note of preparation—the bringing of the cream jugs, preparing the churn, etc.—he would put for the woods and would not be seen again until night. The day of churning was changed, and next morning a more crestfallen and astonished dog was never seen when he was collared and harnessed to the beam which set the dash in motion; he looked positively foolish. He did his work, but with lowered head, and in cogitation evidently.

"On another occasion he tried another dodge. When they were about to put him on the wheel he ran up to his mistress, holding up one paw, affecting to be lame. She thought much of the dog, and was inclined to let him off that day. The next instant he was seen charging over a high fence after a neighbor's cat. 'Well,' said the old lady, 'if he can go after a cat like that he is able to churn.' And he did, and never tried to shirk his work again."—Forest and Stream.

Finely Bred Horses Are Nervous.

Finely bred, intelligent horses are often very nervous. They are quick to notice, quick to take alarm, quick to do what seems to them, in moments of sudden terror, necessary to escape from possible harm, from something they do not understand. That is what makes them shy, bolt and run away. We cannot tell what awful suggestions strange things offer to their minds. For aught we can tell, a sheet of white paper in the road may seem to the nervous horse a yawning chasm; the open front of a baby carriage, the jaws of a dragon ready to devour him, and a man on a bicycle some terrifying sort of a flying devil without wings. But we find that the moment he becomes familiar with those things, or any other that affright him, and knows what they are, he grows indifferent to them.

Therefore, when your horse shies at anything make him acquainted with it, let him smell it, touch it with his sensitive upper lip and look closely at it. Remember, too, that you must familiarize both sides of him with the dreaded object. If he only examines it with the near nostril and eye he will be very likely to scare at it when it appears on his off side. So, then, rattle your paper, beat your bass drum, flutter your umbrella, run your baby carriage and your bicycle, fire your pistol and rattle your tinware on both sides of him and all around him until he comes to regard the noise simply as a nuisance and material objects only as trivial things liable to get hurt if they are in his way. He may not learn all that in one lesson, but continue the lesson, and you will cure all his nervousness.—Exchange.

The Word "Cash."

The word "cash" is understood to be derived from the Italian "cassa," the chest where Italian merchants kept their money, as do at the present time the Spaniards in their "caja," the Portuguese in their "caza" and the French in their "caisse." The application of the word "cash" to money is English, it not having a corresponding term in any other European language. "Cash" having been so inconsiderably adopted instead of "cassa" (chest), entries to the cash book (it should be chest book) are made in American and English counting houses in this unmeaning way, "Cash Dr." and "Cash Cr.," whereas the chest, and not the money, is debtor to what is put into it and creditor for what is taken out.

Great mischief has too often arisen, as is well known, in bankrupt trials from misuse of the word "cash," in which large deficiencies often appear, and which would not be the case if the word chest were used, as it ought to be. Instead of the cash account in the ledger it should be the "chest" account.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Natural Ornaments and Playthings.

The seeds known as Nicker beans and Bonduc nuts, species of Guilandina, are often used for bracelets, necklets and rosaries, and are very ornamental when capped and set. Baskets and other fancy articles made of them are very common in most museums. There are two species, G. Bonducella, the seeds of which are of a gray leaden color or a slaty olive green; and G. Bonduc, which are pale yellow or orange colored. In the Malay Archipelago these seeds are used as counters and playthings by children in place of marbles, and on the Gambia in playing a game called warree-warree. In Bombay, strung upon red silk, they are worn by women as a charm, and also in Egypt by women and children as amulets against witchcraft and sorcery.—Chambers' Journal.

Why He Took Down the Fire Escape.

A local hotel keeper gives a queer excuse for not having a fire escape from a bedroom in the second story. He says that he had one placed there a year ago, but the first two weeks three boarders skipped their bills by its means and then he had it taken out.—Springfield Republican.

It is said that Alexander Rankin, the Scotchman who succeeded John Brown as Highland servant to the queen, has obtained almost as marked an influence in the royal household as Brown possessed. He is the personal attendant of the queen on every journey.

Just Out of Great Men.

The country is always "just out" of great men. The death of the poet Lowell, the perpetual invalidism of Whitman and the great age of Whittier have led many papers of late to lament the decay of American poetry. These great masters of their art, we are told, will leave no successors behind them. But great men, from the standpoint of their contemporaries, never leave any successors behind. This is due to the fact that a great man is not visible until he has receded to a great distance. He is usually measured pretty accurately after he is dead. After Washington, Hamilton, Jay and Jefferson died the lament was raised that the age of statesmen had passed. The great heroic figures of our history had passed off the stage of action and left no successors. This lament was raised, too, when Webster, Clay, Calhoun and Jackson were in the full flush of their remarkable powers.

After these great men had left the stage of action the lament was again raised that the age of great men had passed. To be sure, the presidential chair was occupied by an awkward backwoodsman from Illinois. But Lincoln was called a vulgar story teller, an irresolute, vacillating, good natured man, well meaning enough, but with no executive ability. Charles Sumner was in the United States senate, but he was called a visionary bookworm, full of fanatical theories, but possessing no practical statesmanship. Now we look back to the time of Lincoln and Sumner and say, "There were giants on the earth in those days." So the world is always "just out" of great men, simply because it does not appreciate a good thing when it sees it—or it must see a good thing a long while before it can properly estimate its qualities.—Yankee Blade.

The Last Days of King Ja Ja.

A tourist, who has just returned from the Canary islands, had an interview with King Ja Ja a few days before his death. The exiled king was at that time staying at a hotel in Santa Cruz, and was in very low spirits, doubting whether he would ever see his native land again, though he had made all the necessary arrangements for his departure. His journey was delayed by the British vice consul, who told him he must wait till the arrival of Major McDonald, the commissioner of the Oil rivers.

The colonial office had exacted from him as a condition of his being allowed to return, a promise to create no disturbances. He was suffering severely at the time from dysentery, and being convinced that he was the victim of a conspiracy against his life, he refused to take medicines, hiding himself on the roof or in the cellar of the hotel at the hour the doctor was expected. Three days before his death he was to have gone to a village on the hills for change of air, but he refused to leave, saying: "I no go. I had a dream from my fadder. He say I be with him in tree day."

The Psychical society will be interested to know that this presentiment proved true. The ex-king's dress was a suit of white flannels and a long dust coat. He had been deserted at St. Vincent by his wives and servants; they had sent their luggage on board the steamer that was to carry them to Teneriffe, but staid on shore themselves. When, after the steamer had started, the boxes were opened, they were found to contain only rubbish.—London News.

Hair Not Protected.

The Berlin courts have decided that a lover may cut off his sweetheart's tresses and yet escape with a light sentence, even if it be proved that the act was inspired by malice and with a view of spoiling the young lady's outward appearance. This decision has been arrived at in the case of a girl who sued her ex-lover for "conspiracy," alleging that he robbed her of her blond locks with the object of injuring her personal attractiveness to such a degree that she would be glad to accept his offer of marriage. The case, it appears, has been before several courts and finally reached the supreme court of the Prussian realm, which decreed that 'Arry might cut off 'Arriet's hair, but could only be punished for assault and sentenced to a month's imprisonment.—Ladies' Pictorial.

Why They Cheer.

It is not so often that the band which plays at the ocean promenade of Asbury Park treats the seaside pilgrims to the "Star Spangled Banner," but when it does the applause is furious. Strangers are surprised at the outburst until they learn that it was this band which was on the United States ship Trenton when she was driven ashore in the cyclone at Samoa, and which struck up the national anthem in the moment of danger, eliciting cheers from the British frigate that was drifting by. The band is composed chiefly of Italians, and its members are an unusually modest as well as melodious set of heroes.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Buying Her Own Truck.

"I believe in the thrift of the rural citizen," admits a woman who has been a suburban resident with a taste for raising vegetables. "As my lima bean plants, though well grown, showed a reluctance to yield any harvest, I have been buying this vegetable, of which we are all fond, of a man who lives near and who came to offer me some one day. By the merest chance, a day or two ago, I discovered that his source of supply was our garden—that I have been paying during a fortnight for my own beans."—New York Times.

Walked Eighteen Miles in His Sleep.

The champion sleepwalker story comes from Fort Dodge, Ia. Here it is: "Henry Lynn, a Livermore farmer, arose in a somnambulistic trance at an early hour yesterday, and walked eighteen miles before he awoke. It was nearly noon when the sleeper came to his senses and found that he was plodding along the highway near Algona. Several neighbors met the man during his long tramp and exchanged greetings with him, nevertheless he was not aroused."

It seems there was one incident of the recent attack on Fisher's island not down on the bill. It had been arranged that the invading force should in due season capture the island, and directions had been given accordingly, but no one had thought to mention the fact to the great bull that lords it over the pasture where the struggle occurred. When he saw that there was danger of losing the island, he lowered his horns and raised his tail and charged upon the combatants, routing the hospital corps and threatening to clean out the whole army.—Hartford Courant.

A Wedding and a Honeymoon.

Rev. Henry Wunder was marrying Dr. L. P. Ehrman and Miss Adelaide Crafton at the Leland when the groom exclaimed:

"Stop the deal!"

"What's the matter?" asked the preacher.

"We will have to postpone this for a while—I hate that blue dress that Adelaide is wearing. If she can't be married in her steel gray I will disturb the peace."

The minister was led out of the room by the eccentric physician, and the bride changed her dress. When she was ready a knock was heard on the door, and the men entered. The doctor wanted to go on just where the minister left off, but the latter objected. Then the entire wedding ceremony was performed again. When the last word was spoken the doctor offered to match the minister to determine whether he should give him fifty dollars or nothing. This Rev Henry Wunder did not do.

Soon after the ceremony the newly married man rushed down stairs and asked for the register. Seeing the name of Miss Crafton on the book he grabbed a pen and scratched it out. Then he blotted his own name, and asking for a new pen, wrote, "Dr. Ehrman and his wife."

"That's better?" he asked of Clerk Squires.

"Certainly."

"Please call a cab. We will now take our honeymoon."

Dr. Ehrman rode about ten blocks and returned. He said that the cabman overheard him making love and that made him angry. To a number of reporters who called he asked:

"You want to kiss the bride?"

"Delighted."

The doctor was very kind though. He introduced the reporters.—Chicago Herald.

A Lively Buzzard.

Harry Walter and Benjamin Talbot, of Morgantown, caught a large turkey buzzard in a steel trap. They took the bird home, and after keeping it a few days by means of fine wire, attached a sleigh bell to one of its legs and set it at liberty. They never heard of the bird until a few days ago, when they read in one of the newspapers of the capture of a buzzard with a bell fastened to its leg in Bolivia, South America. From the description of the bell and the manner of fastening, they have no doubt that it is the identical buzzard that was liberated by them.—Harleysville (Pa.) News.

More Stamps to Collect.

Philatelists should note that at last the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg can boast stamps of its own. Hitherto the ordinary Dutch stamps have been in use there, but now Grand Duke Adolph, who has always possessed his fair share of vanity, has had a new stamp issued that shows his own illustrious visage in profile.—London Star.

An amusing story is told of Sir William Thompson, the great physician, who has been ill. His medical attendants declare that they never had a worse patient in the matter of obstinacy. He would not take his medicine for days together, and it was only by the doctors threatening to abandon him altogether that he reluctantly consented to swallow the prescribed drafts.

WANTED--A BURGLAR.

THE STRANGE STORY OF A CURIOUS ADVERTISEMENT.

BY J. WEBSTER BAYNES.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Paul Duncan was missing. He had started on a trip to London and had not been heard of afterwards, although the best detectives in the country had joined in the search they were unable to discover any clue to his whereabouts. No cause could be assigned for his disappearance; he was a man of good morals and had a good wife with whom he was deeply in love, and he never lived up to his income. So the usual hints about money or women as the cause of his trouble were out of the question. Elmsfold Hall, the home of Paul Duncan, had at one time belonged to the Capesthornes, but the last owner, by that name, had been obliged on account of gambling debts to sell it and emigrate to the West Indies, where he or some of his descendants had retrieved their fortunes, and a Capesthorne, possessed of great wealth, appeared in London society about 1850. He had a beautiful Creole wife and one son. He tried to regain the old home of Elmsfold, but Paul's father would not sell, so he had to be satisfied with the adjoining property known as Oakwood. The boy, Mortimer, and Paul Duncan saw much of each other, being schoolmates. Their fathers died within a few months of each other leaving them heirs to neighboring estates. In the course of time they became rivals for the hand of Ellen Corbielle and Mortimer went into a great passion and uttered dire threats when he was rejected and Paul gained the prize.

CHAPTER—II CONTINUED.

When Paul Duncan robbed him, as he bitterly expressed it, of Ellen Corbeille, this feeling was greatly intensified. For a time he would not acknowledge, even to himself, that he had been defeated, for that he was madly, blindly, passionately in love, there could be no doubt. Even after the engagement of Duncan and Ellen became publicly known, he forced his attentions upon her, pleading hard that she would reconsider the matter, would withdraw her plighted word, would wait only for a little time. When the girl in her indignation turned upon him, and upraided him with his baseness, called him a coward for speaking thus to her and threatened him with the vengeance of Paul—her Paul—who would chastise him as he deserved, he flew into a whirlwind of passion, cursing her as she stood before him, and vowing that a time should come when both she and his rival should feel his power in a way they little dreamed of.

Ellen Corbeille never told Paul Duncan of this last outrageous scene; she dared not, knowing well that if she did the horse whip now would be no idle threat, even if it stopped at that; and she was glad she did not, for just before her wedding, Mortimer Capesthorne sold Oakwood and left Draftshire giving out that he was going to live permanently abroad. From that time afterward neither Mrs. Duncan nor any of her friends had heard anything of him; but now, in her lonely retirement, his threatening words spoken so cruelly, so meaningly, so vindictively, sometimes recurred to her, and she wondered if even such hatred as his would not be satisfied, did he but know of her great heartbreaking trouble. She had abundance of time and leisure for such thoughts at Elmsfold. Mabel was a good deal out when the weather was at all fine, and when she was not with her Mrs. Duncan lived mostly in the past. Mabel was growing fast, too fast almost for her age, but she was well and carefully tended; and though without companions of her own age and position, made a companion of her maid, a daughter of her father's old nurse. Mary Mosscrop was a pleasant-looking, simple-minded country girl, come of that stock, still common in country districts, which has grown up, sheltered under the shadow of some old county family, to whom it clings as the ivy does to the oak. She was a sensible girl, too, and a favorite both with her mistress and in the servant's hall. To her Mabel confided all her girlish secrets and childish hopes and fears, and many were the happy days the two spent together, wandering about the grounds and woods at Elmsfold; they were more like foster-sisters than mistrees and maid. Mary Mosscrop's parents, old people now, lived at Glyn Ogwen, a beautiful village on the Welsh border, a few miles from Oswestry; and twice a year she used to visit them for a short holiday. Her description of the place, its scenery and people, its rugged mountain beauty, and tumbling burns or streams, its birds and wild flowers, and the quiet old-world life of its humble inhabitants, were constant themes of conversation between the girls, and Mabel's desire to see it all had grown to be quiet irreprssible. It was after a long ramble in the woodlands, during which Glyn Ogwen and its beauties had formed the chief subject of conversation, that Mabel burst into her mother's room, and throwing her arms round her, cried eagerly:

"Oh, mamma, do let me go with Mary to Glyn Owgen some time soon, now do, mamma. We could go by the early train in the morning, and be back quite early at night, and I'd be very good and very careful; and Mrs. Mosscrop would look after me, you know, as she looked after papa when he was a little boy, and everything would be so nice, and we should enjoy ourselves so much; and oh, mamma, do let us go now, do;" and at last the little lady had to stop for want of breath.

Mrs. Duncan looked down lovingly into the fair, flushed face, and said, laughingly, "Why, Mabel, dear, whatever has put you into such a wild state of excitement, child?"

"Well, it's this way you see, mamma," was the reply, "I've been keeping it so long, and at last I could wait no longer, and so it has all come out at once; and you'll let me go, won't you, mamma, dear?"

"I will see, dear," said Mrs. Duncan, kissing the eager face tenderly; "I don't like the idea of your going a journey without me, even with Mary, though I know she will be careful of you; then, again, leaving me alone for a whole day, whatever should I do? Well, dear, I'll think about the matter, and see what can be done."

Of course the result of the thinking could have but one result; Mabel had her way. Mrs. Mosscrop was written to, and prepared for the coming visit. The day fixed, all was arranged that could be; and Mabel, living on the tiptoe of expectation, had only one fear—that the weather might be unfavorable.

CHAPTER III.

A DISTINGUISHED VISITOR.

What a day for a pleasure trip that was on which Mabel Duncan was to journey to Glyn Ogwen. It was not necessary for Mary Mosscrop to call her. Soon after daybreak two little hands drew aside the long window curtains and peeped anxiously forth into the cool morning air. Such a morning! The heavy dew glistened on the grass and amongst the roses which hung with heavy-laden petals round the windows and clustered in great bunches of crimson and white fragrance over the low walls which separated the terraced slopes of the hall gardens. Elmsfold was noted for its roses. Not the modern varieties with fancy foreign names, but the old-fashioned, sweet-scented roses to be seen in cottage gardens, which grow in some districts in such untrammeled, untended profusion. The soft morning sunlight flooded everything with a glorious brightness peculiar to early day. A few blackbirds and thrushes hopped about on the emerald lawn; some restless starlings chattered and whistled in an old cherry tree at the lodge gate, while down by the plantation side half a dozen rabbits frisked in and out through the old hedge, untroubled by thought of ferret or weasel, dog or gun. It was just one of those summer mornings upon which a child who has the prospect of spending the day in the open air goes wild with delight at the freshness of nature and the beauty of the world.

It was not long before Mabel had the house roused, and after an early breakfast, which she was almost too excited to eat, and a farewell to her mother, who had gentle words of caution and advice to bestow, short though the parting was to be, she started along with Mary Moscrop, who looked radiant and happy, and almost as excited as her little mistress to catch the early morning train for Oswestry, which left North Thorne at 6:30. The drive in the pretty little phaeton was in itself a delight. How merrily the cobs trotted along over the cool roads on which the dust had not as yet had time to dry after the heavy night dew. How leafy the trees were, and how fragrant the hay in the meadows, and the flowers in the hedgerows and cottage gardens which they passed. Blue smoke was curling up from farm chimneys and thatched cottages; cows already milked were returning to their pastures, cropping at the wayside herbage as they passed; haymakers with forks and rakes over their shoulders were already on the move; and at the station a group of farm lads and porters were busy lifting from the carts the great shining cans of milk, ready for dispatch to the distant manufacturing towns.

"Whoever would stay in bed in the morning, Mary, who was well and able to get up," said Mabel, as they took their seats in the train which was punctual to the minute.

"Well, miss, not many I daresay on mornings like this, if they went to bed in good time; but it's very different in winter when the mornings are dark, and there is frost and snow and rain. Still, you see, the farm hands have to be up and at work just the same, and get the cows milked, and the milk loaded, and drive perhaps three or four miles to the station, as they have done this morning. It's very different then, miss."

But Mabel would not at that moment think of such things as cold or rain or darkness. The present was all sufficient for her, and her thoughts and feelings were as bright and summer-like as the day. Arrived at the end of their railway journey, they found Mary's father waiting for them. He had borrowed the best conveyance the village could procure—a low arrangement on two wheels, not unlike an old fishing punt in shape; but easy running, and capable of holding four comfortably. In this he sat, looking supremely contented with himself and the world in general; and that the old man was delighted to receive his daughter and her little mistress could not be doubted by any one who saw his beaming face as he helped them into the pony trap. John Mosscrop was one among the few thrifty ones who had put by sufficient in the days of his strength to keep him free from monetary care in his old age. As a market gardener, he had led a healthy life, and even now though work was not necessary, he spent most of his time in his fruitful little cottage garden, supplying with its produce such of his neighbors as were in want of flowers or vegetables. When he married Paul Duncan's nurse he did a good thing for himself, for she was a model housekeeper, a good wife and mother, and a helpmeet in every way. Mr. Duncan, to whom during his early childhood she had been almost a mother, always kept a warm corner in his heart for her, and never a Christmas came but brought her some substantial evidence of his regard for her. His wife had kept the practice up, so there was little wonder that Mabel's visit was looked upon as an event of no little importance.

To Mabel herself it was a day of supreme enjoyment. The curious conveyance, the shaggy coated, long-tailed chestnut pony which drew it, the pretty road by the swift and sparkling Ogwen, the narrow valley, hemmed in on either side by steep fir-clad hills, the higher mountain ranges at the head of the vale, blue and cloudlike in the distance, were all so new to her. Mrs. Mosscrop heartily welcomed Master Paul's child, as she called Mabel, and again and again drew her husband's attention to the strong likeness she bore to her poor lost father. The old folks had a little grandchild staying with them, a Mosscrop too, called Annie, and she with her aunt Mary and Mabel, wandered through the village street, and down the shady lanes to the sparkling Ogwen's side, and then through the cool fir woods, which they made merry with laughter and chatter. And through it all they were accompanied by Annie's tame jackdaw, a wise and mischievous bird which her grandfather had found at the foot of the old church tower, to which it had fluttered down in a helpless way from the paternal nest, up amongst the dark rafters of the loft. Jack's youthful precocity which had led to his capture whilst only half fledged, had not diminished with age; in fact, it had increased, and along with it he had developed the impudence which seems inherent in his race; he followed little Annie all day long, flying from tree to tree, from fence to fence, occasionally perching on her shoulder, when he would amuse himself by pulling the ribbon from her hat, or trying to wrench the buttons from her pinafore. Mabel was charmed with his ways, though several times during their ramble he startled her by his sharp, harsh cry of "Jack's here," as he flew past them suddenly. This was the only speech he had properly mastered, and as he generally uttered it at the most unexpected times, often when his vicinity was not even suspected, the effect upon his auditors was frequently startling in the extreme.

That Paul Duncan's only child was made a fuss over by the Mosscrops was not to be wondered at. She was naturally a lovable child, very winning in her manner, and she soon won the hearts of her humble entertainers. For such a privileged visitor the best entertainment of all kinds must be provided; and after a midday meal, served in the little green summer house at the end of the garden, of which fresh eggs and butter, pies and puddings, strawberries and cream, and fresh fruit formed the chief part so far as the children went, old John Mosscrop declared that Miss Mabel must be taken through Nant Gwern Hall. Nant Gwern had at one time been the show place of the neighborhood, but it had fallen into the hands of a stranger, who, after one or two short periods of residence, closed it altogether, leaving it in charge of an old couple as caretakers, with strict injunctions not to take visitors through on any pretence. Mosscrop, however, had been intimate with Owen Williams, who with his wife looked after the old hall since boyhood, and he knew it would be a matter of no difficulty for him to take his daughter and children over the place.

Nant Gwern, which stood within half a mile of Glyn Ogwen village, was a rose-looking mansion of great size, built in the Elizabethan style. It stood at the head of a narrow ravine or glen, which branched off from the main valley of the Ogwen, and its situation was gloomly and lonely. The Alwyn, a rugged mountain stream, roared past the back of the house as it forced its way over the great boulders which impeded its course; tall Scotch firs like sombre sentinels surrounded it on three sides; while the hills, abruptly on either hand. Belonging originally to an old Welsh family, it had, through various vicissitudes of fortune, passed into other hands; but of all its numerous proprietors during its later history, none seemed to care to make a permanent residence of it. The house was good, the climate magnificent, and in fine weather the situation was romatic enough, but somehow there seemed a settled gloom about the place which the choicest of spirits, surrounded by the gayest of company, could not after a time throw off. Its present owner had stayed at it for six months or more after he purchased it, then he left for some years, to return for a few weeks only, after which he had dismissed what few servants there were, with the exception of old Williams and his wife, and gone abroad.

He was a young unmarried man with plenty of money, evidently, but no one seemed to know much about him, though many wondered what should have possessed him to buy such a place as Nant Gwern, as also, having bought it and tired of it, he should refuse to allow his agent to dispose of or let it, and his caretakers to show it to strangers or even to dwellers in the neighborhood. John Mosscrop, however, had no difficulty in getting the children through; and after a caution from old Williams not to get into mischief, they were left under the care of Mary Mosscrop to wander over the house at will, and they did. Mabel, knowing no fear, was everywhere peeping into vacant rooms, the furniture in which was all covered up in linen wrappers, and tripping upstairs and down, and wandering through echoing galleries and dim passages, went the happy feet of the children, too full of the glorious sunshine of youth, to feel in so short a time the depressing shadows of the empty mansion.

"Oh, Mary, come here," cried Mabel, who always managed to lead the trio; "see, here's a room that has not been covered up at all. It looks as though some one lived in it everyday; but how awfully dusty it is; why everything's spoilt."

It was a very low room to which they had found their way. Two mullioned windows, now thick with dirt, overlooked the torrent of the Alwyn. The ceiling and panels were all of dark oak, and the large fireplace, in the grate of which were a pile of ashes, was richly carved, and black with age and smoke. From the numerous heavily laden bookshelves the room had evidently been used as a library, but the furniture had been all pushed to one side, and the floor was littered with sand and scraps of mortar.

While Mabel and little Annie were prying about, as inquisitive children naturally will, a harsh cry of "Jack's here" made them start. Mary Mosscrop herself turned pale, the voice came so suddenly from the depth of shadow over a large bookcase. However their fears were soon removed, for almost simultaneously with his cry the jackdaw, who had evidently found his way through a broken pane in the window, fluttered down from his perch, and began a close inspection of the cinders on the hearth. Something there had evidently attracted his attention, for after a moment's sideway look, his head held knowingly on one side, picked something out of the ashes, and flying upon a chair took it in his claw, and proceeded leisurely to examine it.

Saved by a Dog.

A rather curious anecdote is related of Rouget de l'Isle, the composer of the "Marseillaise," who was the son of a lawyer at Lons-le-Saunier. When a mere boy, about 2 years of age, he one day left the house unobserved by anyone except Cæsar, the old house-dog. One of the gypsy women, who were passing at the time, struck by his beauty and elegance of his attire, suddenly seized him, and wrapping him in her apron hurried away as fast as she could. The dog recognized the cries of the child, rushed after the woman and seized her by the leg and compelled her to drop the burden. By this time the whole house had been aroused, and young Rouget's parents and the servants came up, delivered the boy and had the woman arrested.—Brandon Bucksaw.

How to Succeed.

Many years ago a prominent clergyman was consulted by ladies of his congregation about certain clerical work in which they were interested. Smiling at their earnestness, he said: "That's right, ladies, make a fuss—make a fuss! That's the only way to get work done in this world! Set about it yourself and make a fuss while you do!" And so it is. Thinking about wrongs and sighing over them never mended one. But the people who exert themselves to right the wrong, making a good stir about it while they do, and worrying at other people to exert themselves too, will often force the other people into activity in sheer self-defence.—Harper's Bazar.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

THE REQUISITES OF GOOD MUTTON SHEEP.

Sheep for Mutton—Ground Bone as a Fertilizer—Experience of Twelve Years With Ensilage—Notes and Home Hints.

A Good Mutton Sheep.

In choosing a mutton sheep, either to feed or breed feeding stock from, there are some principles that can be laid down as true and applicable in almost all cases, writes George McKerrow in the American Sheep Breeder. The easy feeder must be of the thick fleshed, blocky sort, for daylight that shines under a sheep, hog or steer can never be made into meat, and the possessor of long legs rarely makes a first class feeder. The ribs should be well sprung so as to give a broad, straight back from shoulder to hip, upon which good, high priced meat can be placed with judicious feeding.

The hips should be carried out on a line with the back to the tail, keeping a good width all the way, and should be well filled at the thigh or waist, while the fore leg should be well filled with meat above the knee. The shoulders must be full and muscular. In short the carcass should be plump and full throughout its whole length.

Constitution and healthy condition are all important and are shown by a bright, clear eye, one that is not yellow, bloodshot or watery. A sprightly, active step, as the animal moves along. A short, thick neck that tapers gradually from shoulder to head, and is full of muscles on top of the shoulders. A wide, deep chest and heart, girth giving room for large lungs and heart, and rich pink skin. With all these points well developed and a large abdomen to give plenty of room for the consumption and digestion of food, you have a sheep that with proper foods fed at regular times and in a proper manner will yield profitable returns to the feeder and give satisfaction to the shipper, butcher and consumer, making all better for having owned him.

All rams or ewes that have been highly fitted in small yards or sheds should not be given the preference for breeding as they often are, over sheep of equal quality that only lack the soft, flabby flesh that is a detriment to its possessor. Breeding rams should be in good muscular condition brought about by liberal feeding on muscle forming foods, such as oats, bran, clover hay and good grasses, while they have a good range where they can have sufficient exercise.

The most of American breeders still insist that the fleece is the most important part of the sheep, and generally commence their inquiry for a sire to place at the head of their flock with the question; "What will he shear?" And if this can be answered with a large number of pounds a sale is made. It is well known to experienced feeders that the heaviest fleeced sheep generally do not feed as well as those that are of lighter fleece. While I would have our mutton sheep carry good fleeces of excellent quality, yet I fear that we are striving to make the fleece a leading factor, and like the Merino breeders will wake up some day, to find that we have placed too much stress on wool and have allowed the constitution, good feeding quality, prepotency and the capacity to breed and feed well a high per centage of choice lambs to depart from our flocks. Early maturity is a necessity and such animals or breeds as develop into proper form quickly should be sought after. The Southdown, Shropshire, Oxford Down, Dorset and Leicestershire are breeds that lead off in this respect.

Ground Bone as a Fertilizer.

"In a report on experiments made at the New Jersey station with ground bones as a fertilizer, it is pointed out that ground bone is both a phosphate and a nitrogenous manure, insoluble in water, but when in the soil is decomposed and yields its constituents to the feeding plant in proportion to the fineness. It varies but little in composition and is less liable to adulteration than most fertilizers. They, in fact, are usually pure. Ground bones have a tendency to cake, and to avoid this the manufacturer may use other substances which, while aiding mechanically, reduce the chemical value of the mixture. Raw bone is most usually pure, but the fat it contains renders it less easily decomposed. Bones having served the purpose of the glue maker are low in nitrogen and very high in phosphoric acid. The method now employed of steaming the bones under pressure improves their quality without altering the amount of the plant food ingredients. As the value of ground bones depends upon composition and their fineness, a mechanical as well as a chemical analysis is required to determine their value. The farmer must determine by crop tests which grade he should buy—whether, for example, pay a dollar for ten pounds of phosphoric acid in one condition, or for eighteen and a half pounds in another form. Average wood ashes are worth $9 per ton, but the best vary considerably."

Much is being said by our exchanges (the above is from one) in regard to the use of bone meal as a fertilizer, all indicating a very general desire to see the great mass of farmers follow in the footsteps of their more favored brethren, who with more available means have been able to procure and use it for years. Perhaps no available means could be employed that would better develop worn out pastures, than 200 pounds of bone meal to the acre, and its effects would be apparent for many years. But in addition to the pasture and grass crops, it is available for and beneficial to wheat, corn, potato and many others, and has like durable effects.

The Heading of Cabbages.

It has recently been stated, as the result of an experiment in one of the United States stations, that if cabbages are slightly tilted over with the plow in the fall, it produces a tendency to make them have larger heads. We now learn, as an experiment by Prof. L. H. Bailey, of Cornell, that if the cabbages are planted shallow and earthed up, the percentage of large and heavy heads, is much greater. As a matter of physiological principles these two experiments in different directions both accord. It goes to show that whatever favors the nutritive power, is against their disposition to produce hard heads. In Mr. Bailey's experiment the plants got the benefit of abundant moisture and nutrition, when headed up. When not headed, or when not earthed up, or slightly tilted, there is an obstruction to complete nutrition. Although these experiments seem of a somewhat unimportant character, they afford very interesting lessons to the study of plant life, from a practical point of view. We think the experiment ought to be repeated in view of these valuable and suggestive lessons.—National Farmer.

Twelve Years With Ensilage.

In 1880, I built a 300 ton stone silo, in two compartments, and afterward a smaller one of wood. As a result of my experience, have reached the following conclusions: That stone, for a permanent silo, where the conditions are such that the cost is not excessive, is the more economical. That in a stone, cement-lined silo not a pound of ensilage need waste or deteriorate. That a covering of trash, closely packed, deep enough to take up the mold, i. e., as deep as the air penetrates, is better than weighting; I discontinued weighting years ago. That, be the time for growth long or short, southern white is the best corn to plant, because of its quick growth and great productiveness. That, if cut at an early stage of growth, the ensilage is more acid, but is relished by cattle and is excellent food. That the best period for cutting is the roasting-ear stage. Last year much of my corn stood until the kernel shrank and hardened, with the result that a large proportion of the kernels were voided whole, and, reasoning from analogy, I think it a fair inference that the stalk is less digestible after hardening than when in its more succulent state. That the best distances for planting are about four feet apart for the rows, and one foot for kernels in the row. This will give full-sized stalks and ears; many of the ears stand nine feet from the ground where I have been cutting. That it is dangerous to feed finely-cut cornstalks, whether dry-cured or ensiloed, to horses or mules.—A. J. Coe in the Country Gentleman.

Farm Notes.

If the parents are bad the chances are that the offsping will be worse.

You cannot develop a new quality in the next generation by a female devoid of that quality.

Cross-breeding is the pairing of animals not allied. Continued in-and-in breeding develops weak constitutions.

The form of the animal depends largely upon the breed, but the growth and development secured depend very largely upon the feed.

A cross-bred animal may under some conditions be better for feeding, but never so for breeding, and especially so with the sires.

Butchers and dealers have a partiality for choice, handy carcasses. Size is only a secondary consideration, provided the animal is fat, smooth and trim.

The difference between the weight of milk from a scrub cow and one of the best of the improved breeds is the difference between 4,000 pounds and 16,000 pounds.

It is poor economy to keep a cow and allow her to be dry six months out of the year. The treatment given the heifers largely determines the length of time they can be milked.

Partridge Cochins are a favorite among farmers keeping Cochins and who want large fowls and eggs. They are by many considered the best of the Cochin family. They are good fowls and winter layers, too.

For a piece of dried beef weighing two pounds allow two hours' steady boiling. Remove from the fire and allow the beef to stand in the water until cold. This beef, cut in thin slices, will be found very nice for luncheon or light suppers.

No fear need to be had of over-production in wool or mutton. New mills are constantly springing up for manufacturing the fibre into wears of all kinds, and the demand for choice mutton is greater than the supply by fully 100 per cent.

Whenever a farmer sends the heifer calf of a good cow to the butcher he is killing the hen that lays the golden egg. A farmer can raise his own cows far better than he can buy them, and he knows what he has got when he has them, too.

Home Hints.

Instead of swallowing nostrums observe hygienic rules.

Never leave vegetables in the water after they are cooked.

The juice of half a lemon in half a glass of water is a safe remedy for headache.

An oyster shell in the teakettle will prevent the formation of crust on the inside.

To keep salt dry for table use, mix one teaspoonful of corn starch with one cupful of salt.

Equal parts of sweet oil and vinegar and a little gum arabic make an excellent furniture polish.

Rubbed with a woolen rag saturated with kerosene, a tin kettle or coffee pot becomes as bright as new.

A gargle of salt and water before retiring at night will strengthen the throat and keep off bronchial attacks.

Thick sweet cream sweetened and flavored and thickened with a little flour or cornstarch and baked between two crusts is excellent.

A skillful cook may not be made by a book, but almost anybody can make a good pudding by observing carefully a few simple rules.

Powdered flint glass ground to an impalpable powder and mixed with the white of an egg makes one of the strongest cements known.

It is claimed by physicians that few men are killed by hard work; it is to irregularities of modern social life that high death rate is due.

Ribbons and other silks should be put away for preservation in brown paper, as the chloride of lime, used in manufacturing white paper frequently produces discoloration.

Beware of that common practice of dipping the comb in water when arranging the hair. It promotes a decomposition and rancidity of the natural oil, and so leads to "rotting."

To remove paper labels from old bottles wet the face of the label with water and hold it for an instant over any convenient flame. The steam penetrates the label at once and softens the paste.

Roasts that should be juicy come to the table as dry as pasteboard because the oven was not hot enough at first to instantly harden the outer surface and prevent theescape of its juices.

Most vegetables are better cooked fast, excepting potatoes, beans, peas, cauliflower and others which contain starch. Cabbage should be boiled rapidly in plenty of water, so should onions, young beets and turnips.

Doughs that stick to rolling pin, board and hands in a hot kitchen should be set away till thoroughly chilled, but all trouble might have been saved by using cold fat, flour and liquid at first, and the texture of the dough would have been better.

"German Syrup"

Here is an incident from the South—Mississippi, written in April, 1890, just after the Grippe had visited that country. "I am a farmer, one of those who have to rise early and work late. At the beginning of last Winter I was on a trip to the City of Vicksburg, Miss., where I got well drenched in a shower of rain. I went home and was soon after seized with a dry, hacking cough. This grew worse every day, until I had to seek relief. I consulted Dr. Dixon who has since died, and he told me to get a bottle of Boschee's German Syrup. Meantime my cough grew worse and worse and then the Grippe came along and I caught that also very severely. My condition then compelled me to do something. I got two bottles of German Syrup. I began using them, and before taking much of the second bottle, I was entirely clear of the Cough that had hung to me so long, the Grippe, and all its bad effects. I felt tip-top and have felt that way ever since." Peter J. Brials, Jr., Cayuga, Hines Co., Miss.

AROUND THE GLOBE.

A Record of the Week's Happenings That are Now Part of the World's History.

The More Important Foreign and Domestic Events Arranged for Rapid Reading.

WASHINGTON.

ONLY one point remains unsettled in the Behring sea arbitration treaty.

THE chief of the bureau of statistics at Washington reports that the total value of the exports of domestic breadstuffs during the month of October, 1891, was $21,463,-331.

WILLIAM H. CLAGGETT, who is contesting the seat of Senator Fred T. Dubois is in Washington. He intends to push the contest to a vote in the senate and maintains that he has a good case.

A WASHINGTON report says that Judge Dill, of Iowa, an ex-Assistant Secretary of State Porter, of Tennessee, are probably to be selected as the two new interstate commerce commissioners.

PERSONAL MENTION.

DON PIATT, poet and editor, dies at his home in Ohio.

STUART ROBSON, the actor, was married in New York to Miss Mary Waldron. Mr. Robson has been a widower for a year.

HIRAM CHASE, a full-blooded Indian of the Omaha tribe, was admitted to practice in the federal court at Omaha.

MISS FRANCIS E. WILLARD is chosen president of the world's W. C. T. U. in session in Boston.

BISHOP MERRILL, of the Methodist church, is seriously ill in Chicago. An abscess has formed in the abdominal region and a difficult surgical operation will be necessary to save his life.

E. W. HALFORD, the president's private secretary, who has been ill for several weeks, has resumed his official duties at the White House. He is improved in health, but is still somewhat weak.

FRANK STOCKTON dictates to a stenographer and seldom writes more than 1,000 words a day. He must be peculiarly fastidious, as he confesses that he sometimes waits an hour to select the correct word.

DIRECTOR GENERAL DAVIS, of the World's Fair, is seriously ill, with a complicated affection of the throat and lungs brought on by exposure.

IT is said that Robert F. Bratton will be appointed to succeed the late Senator Wilson of Maryland, or to serve until a successor is elected.

Marie Van Zandt made her American debut recently at the Auditorium in Chicago. She achieved a decided triumph as Anima in "La Sonnabula," fully sustaining the reputation gained by her in Europe.

MRS. MARY ANN PITCHER, of Baltimore, the wife of Philip Pitcher, inspector of brick at the Belt Line Shaft, has just come into a fortune of $300,000 through the death of her father, Nathan Pumphrey, a well known truck farmer of Ann Arundel county.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

A FAMILY of five is burned to death at Columbus, Ohio.

THE loss by the great coal fire in Duluth is expected to reach $300,000, including $100,000 expense of extinguishing the fire.

AN explosion occurred in the Loenig Ludwig pit, near Essen, Germany and eleven men were killed.

AT Buffalo, N. Y., Archibald Rosenberg, aged 23 years, killed himself by shooting himself in the head.

AT Detroit, Mich., Jacob Pfunt, of Genessee county, New York, was shot and fatally injured by officer Parry, who was trying to arrest him.

THE express car of a passenger train on the Milwaukee road is robbed by masked men at Western Union Junction, Wis., who blew open the doors with bombs and rifled a safe.

AT Salem' Ohio, Stockwell, who pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with having outraged two little girls last summer, one of whom died, and the other is insane from the effects, whose mother is also insane through grief, was sentenced to 25 years in the penitentiary.

AT Barnesville, N. C., a young man named Ray, who was angered by his father's attendance at the funeral of a Mr. Carter, a neighbor and enemy of the boy, fired several shots at his father. His arrest was ordered by Judge Bynum, then holding court. Young Ray, armed with a double-barreled shotgun defied the sheriff, but proceeding to the court house, entered, and by his threats drove the judge off the bench, dispersed the audience and walked away unmolested.

THE WICKED WORLD.

HENRY CURTISS, a negro, was hanged in Portsmouth, Va., recently.

A WOMAN is seriously wounded in a row at a wedding in St. Paul.

THE body of a murdered man is found hanging to a tree in Silver Bow canyon, near Butte, Mont.

The agent and other parties at the Cheyenne Indian agency are accused of swindling the government out of large amounts by false returns.

VICTOR LINDHOLM, a drunken tailor, committed suicide in Omaha by hanging, while a friend was trying to secure his entrance to the poor house.

DR. CHARLES N. PALMER of Raymond, Wis., once a prominent Republican politician, is sentenced to a year in the penitentiary for burglary.

A Chicago undertaker is charged with burying two in one coffin, the bodies of children who died in the asylum. The case will be investigated.

THE seventh murder to occur at San Francisco within 10 days was recorded when the body of a Chinaman named Sing Sue was found on Clay street.

AT San Francisco, the grand jury recently returned indictments against Christopher Buckley, the political boss now in Montreal and Samuel Rainey, superintendent of engines in the San Francisco fire department, who has frequently been designated by the local press as Buckley's lieutenant.

AT Omaha while the adjusting board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was in session a squad of police arrested G. H. Ranser, T. E. Breese and the chairman of the Union Pacific system for alleged participation in the hold up of the Missouri Pacific express recently.

FOREIGN FLASHES.

THE Emir of Bokhara has issued a decree prohibiting the marriage of lepers.

REPORTS of trouble in Brazil reach the Brazilian minister in Washington.

IN the French chamber of deputies a motion to expel Jewish bankers from France was defeated—431 to 32.

IT is reported that the Russian decree prohibiting the exportation of wheat will be issued.

MEXICAN regulars met Garza and his followers at Laguna Negra and routed them and are still in pursuit of the remnants of the band.

THE Masilla has arrived at London from Melbourne with 96 cases of influenza on board.

IT is reported that trichonisis has made its appearance in American bacon at Soligen, Prussia.

THE Russian department of taxation estimates that 300,000 of roubles will be required to deal with the famine.

THE peace congress opened at Rome. Signor presided. England and America were strongly represented.

SOME people sent to the czar presents of large sums of money on his wedding anniversary, which he will at once turn over to those who are charged with distributing relief in the famine-stricken provinces.

THE inhabitants of Touat have beheaded five agents of the Sultan of Morocco sent to collect tribute. France claims the Oasis and has sent troops to occupy it. A collision with the Moorish troops is feared.

THE Czar celebrated his silver wedding recently in an extremely quiet manner, the occasion being marked by no state festivities of any description. The event was the occasion for much hearty comment and congratulation throughout the empire.

TERRIBLE scenes are reported from the Russian famine districts. At one place a woman killed her three children and then hanged herself upon being refused a small loan of money by a rich neighbor in order to buy food for herself and her famishing babies.

THE RAILROADS.

REPORT has it that the Wabash and Illinois Central roads contemplate withdrawal from the Western Passenger association.

A CIRCULAR bearing upon the case of the Milwaukee against the Kansas City is issued by Chairman Finley.

THE Baltimore & Ohio directors have declared a dividend of 20 per cent on the common stock, payable Dec. 31, and decided to issue common stock of the par value of $5,096,000.

THE Newport News & Mississippi Valley, running from Huntington to Louisville will in a few days become a part of the Chesapeake & Ohio system. The deal between the Ohio River and Newport News & Mississippi Valley is off. Mr. Camden, chairman of the board of trustees of the Ohio River, would not pay the price asked.

SPORTING MATTERS.

S. N. Strambe, a breeder of thoroughbred horses at Fresno, Cal., has failed. Liabilities may reach $150,000 with assets of possibly $100,000.

"SILVER" KING, the star pitcher of the Pittsburg National league team, signed with the New Yorks. He is to receive $4,000 a year.

DAL HAWKINS, champion bantam-weight pugilist of the Pacific coast, knocked out Billy Donegan, also of San Francisco, in eight rounds at the Occidental club. The fight was a clever one, and the knockout blow was a clean left hander on the point of the chin.

LABOR CIRCLES.

THE convention of the Knights of Labor opens at Toledo.

THE strike of locomotive engineers and firemen on the Belt Line railway in East St. Louis, which is owned by the Wiggins Ferry company, came to a termination, the ferry company acceding to the men's demands.

THE Marble and Granite Workers of the United States held their second annual convention at Baltimore. Owen Loughren of New York presided, with Thomas Ryan, of New York, as secretary. Representatives were present from New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Vermont, Illinois, and Missouri.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FLAX fiber works, the only works of the kind in the United States, are soon to begin operations at Austin, Minn.

A MATTER of $14,000 is reported unaccounted for by Treasurer Turner, of the Knights of labor.

THE Couer d' Alene Silver Lead Mining company recently declared its regular monthly dividend of 2 cents per share payable Dec. 10.

MINNEAPOLIS' prospects for securing the Republican national convention are much brightened by Chicago's withdrawal from the race.

A MAJORITY of the stockholders, debenture holders and bond holders of the United States Rolling Stock Company of New York have assented to the plan for the reorganization of the company.

THE whisky trust will start up one of its largest distilleries at Peoria next week with a new plant designed for the manufacture of whiskey with the much-talked-of Takominic process.

THE Walton Architectural Iron Works of Cincinnati, one of the largest works of the kind in the West, has assigned. The assets are $90,000. It is estimated that the liabilities are about the same.

REPRESENTATIVES of 24 of the leading broom manufacturers of the county decided at a meeting in Chicago to advance the price of brooms 50 cents a dozen, to take effect at once.

THE Rankin Manufacturing Company, of Nashville, Tenn., a wholesale clothing house, made an assignment for the benefit of creditors. Assets, $103,000; liabilities, $133,000.

THE Madera, Cal., Bank failed recently, carrying down in its ruin the John Brown colony. The bank had a capital of $100,000, of which $25,000 was paid up. This failure means the complete ruin of the co-operating project.

AT Trenton, N. J., Willie, the five-year-old son of John Reading was bitten by a dog Aug. 10 last, and has just died of hydrophobia. Two of his brothers, who were bitten at the same time are ill, and the greatest fears are felt regarding their safety.

THE general missionary committee of the Methodist Church agreed upon appropriations of money for home mission fields as follows: Welsh, $2,250; Scandinavian, $57,-950; German, $50,750; French, $6,900; Spanish New Mexico, $14,000.

THE citizens' executive committee on the national encampment of the G. A. R., to be held in Washington next year, has decided to recommend the council of administration the second week of October as the date for holding the encampment.

A MORTGAGE of $6,000,000 has just been filed in Suffolk county, Mass. It covers the property of the Boston Cordage company, the Standard Cordage company, and other cordage manufacturers, and is one proceeding in the trust process by which all concerns have been made into one.

AT a meeting of the Allegheny presbytery resolutions were adopted deprecating any revision of the creed and protesting particularly against the revision of the third chapter of the confession because it is calculated to weaken the doctrine of God's sovereignty in preterition.

LEFT HER FOR DEAD

Brutal Assault on His Wife by a Farmer in Chippewa County, Wisconsin.

He Beats Her With a Club and Then Jumps on Her Body Until He Thinks Life Is Extinct.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Special Telegram, Nov. 17.—One of the most brutal assaults in the history of Chippewa county occurred in the town of Bloomer on Sunday morning.

August Amend, a farmer and blacksmith, came home drunk early Sunday morning and, armed with a club, began to beat his wife while in bed. He then dragged her over the floor and jumped upon her body with a pair of cowhide boots until he thought her dead and, dragging her into a shed, stripped her of all clothing and threw a bucket of slop upon her mangled form, when he went to bed.

The most shocking part of it all is that the poor woman, after lying for a long time unconscious and naked in the cold, rallied and, dragging herself to a clothes line, took from it a few wet and frozen garments, in which she walked to the village of Bloomer, three miles distant, to a doctor. She had on but one shoe and no stockings. She lies at the point of death.

Amend is in jail here. Mob law may rule if the woman dies.

HUNDREDS ARRESTED.

The Russian Conspirators Being Corralled at a Lively Rate.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Since the arrest at Moscow on Thursday last of about a hundred members of noble families, literators and others, charged with being concerned in the movement looking to the creation of a popular assembly of parliament similar to the Temsky labor assemblies under the early czars, it has become known that this alleged conspiracy was of much wider extent than at first supposed, and it is said that several hundred people have been taken into custody in addition to those referred to.

From the time the discovery of this "plot" became known, the correspondents in Russia of the agencies and newspapers have been doing their utmost to discover the true inwardness of these wholesale arrests; but apparently without success, for little or no news regarding this revolutionary movement can be procured. A correspondent at St. Petersburg wired last night as follows:

Strictest censorship press dispatches observed. Government contemplating severe measures against newspaper correspondents. Almost impossible get or send facts regarding arrests of nobles and others who have been planning creation of parliament elected by people. Reported extensive arrests here, as well as Moscow and other cities. All information refused. Police advise correspondents not to comment on arrests. Situation very grave. Wildest rumors circulating.

AFRAID OF WAR.

Austrians Feel a Little Shaky Over the Emperor's Speech.

VIENNA, Nov. 17.—At a meeting of the budget committee to-day Count Kalnoky assured the committee that the emperor's speech, referred to by the Tageblatt, ought to cause no uneasiness; that although the emperor drew attention to the contradiction between the preparations for war and the talk of peace, the government hoped that the problem presented by the strained situation would find a peaceful solution. Referring to Saturday's panics on the bourse, Count Kalnoky said the public did not understand how to take a reasonable view of the situation; that one serious word, exaggerated to serve private ends, was sufficient to evolve an unwarranted panic. Count Kalnoky announced that the new commercial treaty would go into operation on Feb. 1, 1892.

Notwithstanding the denials made by high officials of the statement published in the Tageblatt on Saturday that the emperor had declared that the European situation was critical, that paper to-day insists that its report was strictly correct. It was this report that was at the bottom of the panic which prevailed on the bourse Saturday. The holders of stocks and bonds, fearing that the emperor's words as reported in the Tageblatt presaged war, made wild rushes to sell, and the result was a decline in prices that has not been equaled in many years.

The words attributed to the emperor by the Tageblatt in substance were that "the famine which now prevails in Russia has greatly increased the chances of war."

Principles of Arbitration.

ROME, Nov. 17.—At to-day's session of the international peace congress discussion on the proposition that an international arbitration conference be held in Chicago in 1893, was postponed on the ground that the task of the present congress was limited to the proclamation of the principles of arbitration. The congress approved the proposition that isthmuses and straits be made neutral. The congress also adopted a resolution to invite European governments to submit international disputes to arbitration. It was decided that the next congress should be held in Berne.

Not Prohibited, at Least.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—The chamber of deputies after a long debate to-day approved the tariff of 25 francs on salted meats as fixed by the senate. M. Rochefort, minister of commerce, promised an effective surveillance over imports at the expense of the importers. M. Gruet, a member of the legislature of the department of Gironde and the noted member of the board, produce exchange, says that the 25 franc duty will permit the importation of pork only in the event of a scarcity in France, and that even a duty of 20 francs would be too high.

Inducing Rain in India.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—A dispatch from India tell of a number of private experiments in that country with dynamite explosions, made with a view to induce rain. The dispatch states that dynamite was exploded on hills of Madras, at an altitude of 500 feet, and that the explosions produced smart showers over an area of four or five miles square. It is also stated that the government will probably cause the making of systematic trials to arrest clouds before they pass over the place.

An Ore Carrier Wrecked.

SELKIRK, Ont., Nov. 17.—In last night's gale the schooner Montcalm of Toledo, loaded with iron ore, became unmanageable and was driven among the rocks within a hundred yard from shore, half a mile below Selkirk on Lake Erie, where she now lies a total wreck. Her crew was rescued.

A Lumberman Frozen to Death.

GRAND RAPIDS, Minn., Nov. 17.—Ed Whaley, a lumberman who lived in Minneapolis, was found frozen to death to-day about five miles from town. He was seen on the road badly intoxicated yesterday.

A PIONEER'S FATE.

Origin of the Scalp Legend of the Chartiers Valley, With a Few Ghostly Additions to the Story.

There is an uncanny local legend of the lower end of the Chartiers Creek Valley, near Pittsburgh, which is known to the other inhabitants of that section as the scalp legend of the Chartiers, says the Pittsburg Dispatch.

A mile or so up the creek the valley opens out, making a beautiful pastoral expanse of fertile bottom land. The view over and upon this from the hilly heights at the rear of Sheridan is lovely by day and weird by night. The last-named element in the night scene is partially caused by the flickering gas fires from the wells in the Chartiers field.

At an early date in the pioneer history of this section, and long before the days of Indian warfare had ended, an adventuresome voyager ran his canoe into the mouth of Chartiers creek. Attracted by its sylvan scenery and the prospects of finding a good location to settle upon, he paddled up a short distance and then explored further along the bank as he ascended. After particularly examining the locality he chose and marked out a "tomahawk" claim, with fine timber and water and a southern exposure. Hither the next spring he came, with his wife, a little boy and girl and a brother who was slightly his junior.

But one fateful evening in early summer the brothers returned from a long and successful day's hunt and found the cabin was a smoldering heap of ruins. Partially in the ashes were the charred, mangled and scalped forms of the young wife and children. The Indians had evidently been gone some hours. Controlling their agony as best they could, the brothers tenderly moved and sadly buried the remains of their loved ones beneath an immense sycamore tree upon the banks of a little brook that ran by their cabin and headed up in the Sherman hills. Then they left the country, starting eastward to go over the mountains, but never reached the settlements or were afterward heard of and it was supposed that they were killed by some wandering band of Indians. The only clew to this pathetic bit of pioneer history that was left was a letter upon birch bark inclosed in a rude envelope of the same texture and stuck in a split sapling by the river's edge at the mouth of the creek. This was fortunately found shortly afterward by a band of white explorers who still later conveyed the intelligence East.

But now comes the ghostly legacy of this tragedy, which goes by the name of "The Scalp Legend of the Chartiers." Concerning it it is affirmed by the country folks and earlier settlers of this little valley, that on some summer nights to this day the shrieks of those murdered innocents may be distinctly heard, and when storms arise they are blended with the blood-curd-whoops of the painted savages. And further and more awful still, that in the oppressive silence of warm summer evenings things strangely like the ignus fatuus, or jack o'lantern, may be observed to float hither and thither over the scene of the massacre, and to wander up and down the bank of the little run between the hills and the creeks.

Strange Oversight.

It is dangerous as well as wicked to do wrong in the presence of children. The Pittsburgh Dispatch says that an observant little boy was in a street-car in that city the other day, and followed every movement of the conductor with the greatest interest.

A very stout woman boarded the car and sat down next to the small boy. She took a ticket out of her purse, but when the conductor came along he somehow failed to notice her. He passed and repassed her several times, and finally, with a nervous glance around, she replaced the ticket in her purse.

This was too much for the small boy, who had all the while kept his eye on her, and the next time the conductor came along he exclaimed:

"You didn't get her money, mister. I don't see how you missed her. She's the fattest lady in the car. Anybody could see her."

This complimentary allusion to the woman's weight caused a blush to play over her broad face, and she quickly produced a ticket, while all the other passengers smiled.

Forty Years to Find Salt.

A wonderful example of patience in the Chinese is afforded by a consular report dealing with the manufacture of salt in Central China. Holes about six inches in diameter are bored in the race by means of a primitive form of iron drill, and sometimes a period of forty years elapses before the coveted brine is reached, so that the work is carried on from one generation to another. During this time the boring, as may be imagined, goes down an immense depth. When brine is found it is drawn up in bamboo tubs by a rope working over a large drum turned by bullocks. The brine is evaporated in iron caldrons, the heat being supplied by natural gas, which is generally found in the vicinity of salt wells.

WORSHIPPING THEIR FLAG.

Queer Military Customs Which the Chinese Have Great Faith In.

The viceroy or generalissimo of the Chinese army, whenever he was about to start on a war-like expedition, must worship his flag. Whenever he sends away with a detachment of soldiers any high military officers as his deputy, and generally, when any high military officers is about to proceed into battle, the flag of his division of brigade must be worshipped. The worship is often performed on the public parade ground.

The viceroy sometimes chooses to sacrifice to the flag on his own parade ground connected with his yamun. The time selected is often about daylight or a little later. Often times the high officials, both cicic and military, connected with the government, are present!

It is necessary that all the officers who are to accompany the expedition should not only witness the ceremony, but take a part in it. The same remark is true of the soldiers who are to be sent away or engage in the fight. In the centre of the arena is placed a table having upon it two candles, one censer and several cups of wine.

The candles are lighted at the proper time. Some officers, kneeling down, hold the large flag by means of its staff near the table.

The viceroy, or the officer who is to command the expedition, standing before the table and the flag, receives three sticks of lighted incense from a professor of ceremony, which he reverently places in the censer arranged between the candles.

He now kneels on the ground and bows his head down three times. Some of the wine taken from the table is handed to him while on his knees, which he pours out on the ground. Then a cup of wine is dashed upon the flag, the professor of ceremony crying out: "Unfurling the flag victory is obtained: the cavalry advancing, merit is perfected."

The whole company of officers and soldiers, who had previously knelt down and bowed their heads in the prescribed manner, now simultaneously rise up with a shout and commence their march at once for the scene of the appointed rendezvous.—Overland Monthly.

Aid to Memory.

"Tod" Walters is a ten-year-old boy in whom the spirit of mischief and the spirit of investigation are developed to an unusual degree; at least, his suffering grandparents entertain that opinion. Tod made them a short visit a few months ago, and although they are fond and proud of their grandson, it cannot be denied that their principal feeling when they said good-by to him was one of relief.

Neither of the old people had very sharp eyesight, and they seldom used their spectacles except for reading, so it was not surprising that they failed to discover some peculiar indentations which marked the top rail of the polished balusters on the first morning after Tod's arrival, and which grew deeper with each succeeding morning.

To all appearance Tod did not notice them, either, until the last day of his visit. Then he announced in confidence to his grandmother:

"I'm afraid, grandma, that I've made some marks on the baluster-rails with my Waterbury, but you see I've always run down so fast that I never noticed them till this morning!"

"With your Waterbury, Tod!" echoed his grandmother in amazement.

"Why, yes'm. I've wound it by pressing the winder on the rail, you know, every morning since I came. It was such a splendid place, and saved such a lot of time, because I could do it as I ran down to breakfast. And always doing it that way, of course it kept me from forgetting to wind it, you see!"

By Another Name.

Delicacy of feeling is not confined to gentle people, commonly so-called. It is well known, for example, by those who have to do with men confined in prison, that such convicts never speak the hated word "prison," but invariably use some euphemistic substitute, "this institution" being perhaps the one oftenest used.

In my girlhood, wrote Mrs. Andrew Lang, the favorite housemaid of a friend of mine "gave warning," as she was going to be married.

"Indeed," said the lady, "and what is your future husband?"

"Please, ma'am, he's an asker."

"A what?"

"An asker."

"I don't understand. What does he do?"

"Well, ma'am, he—he goes about the streets, and if he sees any one coming along that looks kind he—well, he just stops 'em and asks 'em to give him a trifle, and he makes quite a comfortable living that way."

"Do you mean a beggar?"

"Well, ma'am, some people do call it that; we call it 'asker.'"

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Pure, Healthful, of Highest Strength and Character.

[Fac-simile of their original Report.]

We, the members of The Board of Health of the City and County of San Francisco, cordially approve and recommend the Royal Baking Powder. It is absolutely pure and healthful, composed of the best ingredients of the highest strength and character.

In our judgment, it is impossible to make a purer or stronger Baking Powder than the "Royal".

BREVITIES.

Wheat is 77 cents.

The train was over an hour late to-day as usual.

A few cords of wood on subscription would be acceptable at this office.

Miss Mary Qvande made a short visit to friends in Becker county last week.

Look over your stove pipes and chimneys before cold weather sets in.

Mr. Meehan, the Red Lake Falls lumberman was in town yesterday on business.

John Kupor, the Thief River Falls tonsorial artist is in town today on business.

Several of the boys here went up to Thief River Falls last Saturday evening to attend a dance.

J. E. Morrissey, the Crookston foundry man, was in town last Friday on business,

Fred Ames, of Fisher, is here this week attending to his uncle who was hurt last Thursday.

Business has been brisk the past week and our merchants are wearing a more contented smile.

Holmes Bros. have just received a fine line of heating stoves. Call and examine their stock,

Don't forget the Thanksgiving ball, to be given at Red Lake Falls by the St Hilaire String Band.

J. L. Johnson returned last Friday from Otter Tail county where he had been visiting relatives a week past,

The train was several hours late last Monday. The crew was busy switching and the passengers had to wait.

About five or six inches of snow fell last Sunday but it has drifted considerable and sleighing is not good.

Mrs. C. G. Rapp entertained a number of the young folks of the village last evening in her usual pleasant way.

Wheat has been coming in more rapidly this week, about two thousand bushels being marketed here yesterday

Drop in on E. M. Hoff and look at that clothing stock of his. He has some big bargains and the way he sells clothing everyone should be well dressed.

Mrs. R. K. Chapman returned last Monday from England where she had been visiting with her husband's relativees the past six months.

Frank Gravel "the dead sure thing man" from Crookston, was in town between acts last Friday with his paraphernalia. He did a nice business.

Dr, Lankaster and Mr. Irwin, of Fisher, were in town a short time last Monday. They came up to see Lucius Ames who was hurt in the boiler explosion.

Henry, Nolan, the Crookston bridge builder, was in town the first of the week with Commissioner De Mers making repairs on the bridge. Mr. Nolan is a competent man for the work, Willmar County Pioneer: There is considerable discussion going on of late in the state press in regard to the improvement of the country roads. This is a thing that cannot be agitated too much, and there is always a chance for improvement in the country roads of any county.

Springfield Republican: The mustache was a failure in this year's politics Each of the defeated candidates for governor in the four leading contests wore a mustache while their successful competitors kept a clean stiff upper lip

Fire was discovered in the rear of the second story of C. G. Rapp's store building last evening about five o'clock, but a few pails of water quenched the flames before much damage was done The fire caught from a defective chimney. Had it not been seen immediately it would have caused a serious fire. It caused considerable excitement as the wind was from the south and had the building burned it would have taken the whole block. The chimney was found to be very defective and a new one will be immediately built,

The citizens of Crookston entertained the Duluth Board of Trade in a royal manner last Friday. An elegant banquet was given in the evening and the visitors very favorably impressed with Crookston's hospitality. Crookston citizens are certainly entitled to congratulations for the manner in which they conducted the entertainment.

Special agents of the United States treasury department report that a vast amount of smuggling is being indulged in on the boundary between Minnesota and North Dakota and Canada. The force is too meager to protect Uncle Sam's interest, and it is proposed to place a portion of our large standing army along our frontier. The fellows on our side of the line seem to be very fond of Canadian whiskey.

Threshers and others estimate that fully if not more than half the threshing in this vicinity is yet to be done, As near as we can learn there are fourteen rigs at work on wheat tributary here but they have been able to do but very little heretofore. They are all hard at work now however, ans are doing good work. Most of the machine owners have announced that they will keep at work all winter if necessary so the work will probably be done before spring.

Our County Commissioner C. P. De Mers was in town a couple of days this week on official business, Mr. De Mers is proving to be a pains-taking and efficient Commissioner and evidently intends to deal fairly with this part of the district. He has secured a liberal appropriation from the county for the road in Sanders township and will try and secure more if possible. He is also trying to secure an appropriation for a bridge at Thief River Falls, and other smaller matters in this part of the district.

Minneapolis Journal: There is a wholesome lesson to be learned in many of the school districts of the state this year in the dissappointment as to the apportionment of the public school fund. Districts which voted a meager amount for schools will only receive from the state according to the measure of their voting, Every district which has been liberal will receive a liberal apportionment. The law of last winter is a good one and it is apt to stimulate the people to vote larger local school taxes.

A very curious claim has been filed with the assistant attorney general for for the adjudication of Indial depredation claims. It came from Alabama and is for a slave carried away by the Indians in 1836. The law of that time recognized slaves as property, and the Indian depredation law says that claimants may recover for property taken or destyoyed. It will be a curious thing if the United States government, in the latter half of the nineteenth century, pays for the loss of a slave. The case has not been adjudged and it will be interesting to know what view the attorney general will take of the matter.

The engine of the threshing rig owned by Lucius Ames exploded with terrific violence last Thursday morning. They were moving to the farm of Henry Cuno when the accident occured and it is thought that the cause of the explosion was due to lack of water, The owner of the rig Lucius Ames, was blown seventeen yards and sustained several very serious injuries, It was thought at first that he could not live but the doctors now have hopes of his recovery.

The engineer A. Barker was also frightfully injured but will, we understand recover. Steve Ford sustained a slight but not dangerous cut on the head and Charley Hagglund was slightly hurt. It is almost miraculous that all were not instantly killed as the engine and boiler was literally blown to pieces it being scattered over about forty acres of ground. A team of horses were hitched to the engine but only one was killed the other being slightly wounded, The wounded men are under the care of Dr, Wattson, of Red Lake Falls and are doing well,

Red Lake Falls News: At the meeting of the village council Monday night the railroad and right-of-way situation which has been troubling the minds of our people for the past month were discussed. A resolution was introduced and carried, requesting the village attorney to file a written opinion as to the power of the village to vote additional bonds, and as to the amount. This method will prove the most equitable and satisfactory way of settling the right of way difficulty if it can be done. It is to be hoped, now, that the individual property owners will if again called upon, act in a public spirited, reasonable manner, not foolishly expecting to reap a two fold benefit from the advent of the road at the peril of reaping none. The council has now taken hold of the matter in the proper way and we, predict if an election is called, there will be few dissenting votes—and we assume that, before such steps are taken, the proper authorities will see that the conditions under which the bonds are voted will be such as to assure the permanent location of the depot at least within the present city limits, or better, in a position as nearly central as would be combinable with the best common interests.

St. Paul News: The police in Chicago have been doing some good work during the last two or three days in suppressing anarchist meetings and movements.

This is a country of freedom and free speech, but when it comes to lawless freedom, and freedom inciting to riot and bloodshed, it is time to call a halt.

Chicago seems to be cursed with a supply of people from the scum of Europe, who have largely been outlawed in their own countries owing to their dangerous characters. It is important that this class of people should be taught a severe lesson and if the hanging of the four anarchists in Chicago was not sufficient it would be well to continue the object lesson and hang a few more.

Because our government is not despotic like the governments from which they have fled from Europe, they imagine it is not strong, but that there is nothing so strong in a form of government as a loyal and resolute people, that is the class of which American citizens are composed,

In the past a mistaken leniency has been exercised toward the red flag assassins, but it is high time that any charity or mildness toward them should cease. The action of the Chicago authorities in breaking up these lawless gatherings is commendable, and the severest punishments within the bounds of law that it is possible to inflict upon the participants in these gatherings should be summarily applied by the courts.

Minneapolis Tribune: There will go from Ohio to the next congress two Republican United States Senators: One to fill Senator Sherman's seat, and the other to hold the position alleged to have been fraudulently obtained by Cal. S. Brice of New York.

The charges against Brice are two. first that he bought his election; second that he is a resident of New York: The New York World, a leading Democratic organ has published pages of testimony for the establishment of the first charge. It produces as the principal witness John H. Thomas, whose accounts show that he spent $60,000 for the place which Brice secured by outbidding him and buying up his supporters. The second charge is supported by the fact of Brice's residence and business location in New York.

On the strength of these charges Foraker and Sherman, bearing credentials of election signed by Governor McKinley will present themselves in Washington for Ohio's two senatorial seats. The question remains, will Brice be able to buy off the witnesses of his election bribery, and has he forestalled the charge as to his New York residence by rearing a second residence in Ohio?

Employer of convict labor in his Tennessee mines and purchaser of senatorial seats in Ohio, Calvin S, Brice of New York makes a fitting chairman of the national Democratic committee,

I TEACH
$3000 A YEAR
YOU LEARN

Have you written me yet? If you haven't, wisdom and intelligent ambition suggest write to-day. I promise you my special, personal attention. I undertake to briefly teach any fairly intelligent person of either sex, who can read and write, and who, after instruction, will work industriously, how to earn Three Thousand Dollars a year in their own localities, wherever they live. I will also furnish the situation or employment, at which you can earn that amount. I charge nothing and receive nothing unless successful, as above. Nothing difficult to learn, or that requires much time. I desire but one person from each district or county. I have already taught and provided with employment a large number who are making over Three Thousand Dollars a Year, each. All is new, solid, sure. Full particulars free. After you know all, if you conclude to go no farther, why, no harm is done. Address, E. C. ALLEN, Box 420, Augusta, Maine.

The Girl Who Teaches.

Sound health is a prime necessity for any worker in the world, no matter what the line of work may be, but it becomes of the greatest importance if the work is to be carried on in the schoolroom There not only the physical, but the nervous and mental forces are taxed to their utmost. The young graduate has hitherto gone to school to sit comfortably at her desk; to stand occasionally for recitations, to use her voice but little, to have constant variety in her work, to enjoy her recess with perfect freedom and in congenial companionship. As a teacher she goes to school to stand upon her feet all day long, to use her voice incessantly, perhaps, too, in a large room filled with the tumult of the street, to keep noisy, and very likely, rebellious and disobedient children not only quiet, but interested, and to spend the recess in care of them in the halls and the yard

Besides this she is to stimulate their brains, and a certain amount of time—usually prescribed by a board of education, the members of which know little of the capacity and possibilities of the youthful mind—is allotted her, in which she must, somehow or other, succeed in teaching them a certain number of facts—no allowance being made for the slowness, stupidity or disorder, which increases the friction of the work and delays the doing No matter how complete the education or how enthusiastic the spirit, the power for physical endurance is absolutely necessary.—Caroline B. Le Row in Ladies' Home Journal.

Hard and Soft Water.

The difference between "hard" and "soft" water is that the former contains in greater or less degree earthy salts while the latter is nearly free from them and in a greater state of purity The earth most frequently occurring in natural waters is lime The quantity of earthy salts varies considerably in different instances. It is observed that when they exist in the proportion of five grains to a pint such water will be hard, and will be unfit for washing and many other household uses and manufactures. The solvent properties of water are the true causes why we never obtain this universal and important fluid in a state of absolute purity It constantly participates in the properties of the manifold sources whence it is derived or through which we obtain it.

Whenever water is in contact with the soil it invariably dissolves the soluble constituents, and hence it follows that water springing from rocks which are only slightly soluble, as sandstone and granite, is very pure and is called soft water, while that which is derived from calcareous formations is termed hard water, and contains lime, which produces an incrustation on the sides and bottom of the vessel wherein it is boiled —Brooklyn Eagle.

A Law Case That Has Cost $50,000.

The Cathcart case has been one of the longest trials of our time, and, when everything has been "totted up," will prove to have been one of the most expensive. Sir C Russell had 150 guineas marked on his brief, besides a special fee of 100 guineas, and fifty guineas a day during the sixteen days the inquiry has lasted Sir Henry James fees have been on the same scale Each of the learned leaders has, therefore, taken 1,850 guineas in fees for court work Apart from this, Sir Charles has had two guineas for each consultation and he has attended one at least every day. Mr. Bucknill, Q. C., and Mr. Inderwick, Q. C., have had fifty guineas marked on their briefs and nearly seventeen guineas a day Two grants of £1,000 each have already been made out of the estate by the order of Lord Justice Lopes, sitting in chambers, for the conduct of the case, and every farthing of these sums has been spent. Fortunately Mrs Cathcart is a rich woman Ten thousand pounds will probably have been swallowed up in the course of this inquiry.—London Tit-Bits

Invention of the Typewriter.

The typewriter was invented as long ago as 1714 by one Henry Mills, who in that year obtained a patent in this country for a device that "would write printed characters one at a time, or one after the other." There is no description of this device to be had now, but there is no doubt that Mills invention was the parent of the present typewriter In 1833 a French patent was granted to M. Progrin (Xavier), of Marseilles, for a typewriter, which is called a typographical machine The account of the machine is somewhat obscure, but enough is given to show that it was an operative one by which typewriting could be fairly well executed M Foucalt sent to the Paris exposition in 1855 a writing machine for the blind, and several typewriters were invented by Wheatstone After successive improvements a manufacturer in America contracted to construct 25,000 -New York Press.

Fooled the Clergyman.

There is a minister in Brooklyn who told the writer a harrowing tale of deception of which he was the victim After he had performed the marriage ceremony to a young couple at the parsonage, the bridegroom slipped a fat envelope between the leaves of the family Bible, nodding pleasantly, as if to say "You've well earned it." The clergyman nodded thankfully

"When I opened that envelope," he said, "what do you suppose I found in it?"—

"A goodly sum in bills?"

"No, sir! No sir! Twenty sheets of copy paper such as reporters use And on the last sheet was written 'Economy is wealth Please don't squander this. Wipe your razor on it.'"

"I think," said the dominie, "that ministers should be empowered to declare some marriages void."—New York World

The treatment owls receive from man evinces a recognition of their value, no gratitude for their services. Large and small, they are shot wherever found, to serve as ornaments to the parlor or to do brief duty for a season on a fashionable hat, then to be cast aside and forgotten.

A Petrified Horse Found.

There was recently taken from a small creek near Springtown, I. T., a genuine curiosity in the shape of a petrified horse, which had beyond doubt been lying in the bed of the stream for many years. The creek, which is known as Mason's Ford, has been dwindling away for some time, owing to the failure of the springs by which it is fed, and it is now but a shallow rivulet, and a number of Indian relics, human bones, etc., have been taken from its bed.

The horse was nearly covered by a deposit of sand and loose limestone, and was discovered only by chance, some boys wading in the creek catching sight of a portion of one leg. Examining this, it was found to have turned entirely to stone, which led to the whole being dug out and carried to shore. The horse, a large, white one, seems to be the work of a cunning sculptor, so completely has the petrifaction been, even the hairs of the mane and tail being converted into stone.

In the neck and piercing one of the largest veins is an arrow, in all probability the cause of its death, and which probably struck it as it stood on the banks of the creek, into which it rolled in its death agony. Its sides still show the marks of a saddle and its flanks are cut as by spurs used with desperation, but no brand or other mark gives a clew to its rider.

In removing it from the stream one hoof was unfortunately broken off, but with this exception it is perfect. It is now on exhibition in Stringtown, but is shortly to be presented to the Smithsonian institution, though several agents for dime museums have endeavored to secure it for their enterprises.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Smuggled Chinese Strangely Caught.

Wednesday evening a furious thunderstorm prevailed in Montana, accompanied by heavy rain and hail. Sam Herron was coming into Benton from his ranch with a team and was caught in the shower about four miles from town. A blinding flash of lightning lit up the prairie, and Herron was appalled to see a thunderbolt strike a wagon at some distance ahead of him on the trail. He rode up to the spot, where he found the driver of the vehicle dead and nine Chinamen crouching down in the wagon.

Taking in the situation at a glance, Herron rode rapidly into Benton and notified Collector Sullivan, who immediately summoned assistance, and went out in the storm and took the Chinamen prisoners. They left the dead body of the teamster on the range and brought the Chinamen into town, where they were secured. Under a recent decision all Chinamen captured by the officers must be returned to China, and the nine now in custody at Benton will undoubtedly be sent direct to San Francisco in charge of officers, and be sent thence to Hong Kong.—Cor. St. Paul Globe.

The Artist and the Child.

Mr. Burne-Jones has so far recovered from the effects of his recent fall that he has been able to paint for several hours during the last few weeks. One of the earliest exercises of his art after his recovery was characteristic. Being at the house of a friend he found himself in the nursery, and there the child daughter of the house was for some nursery crime undergoing solitary confinement in a corner. When the authorities came to release the tiny prisoner they found the walls of her cell covered with beautiful pencil drawings of flights of birds and all sorts of scenes of "faery lands forlorn." Half frightened and half proud, the little one exclaimed, perhaps unnecessarily, "Please, it wasn't I; 'twas Mr. Burne-Jones that did it."—Vanity Fair.

The Singular Fate of a Rat.

In the warehouse of Tilton & Co., rice dealers, is stored a quantity of rice in bags and barrels and in bulk. The rat family is numerous there. On a shelf near the door are placed conveniently a dozen ordinary iron paper files for filing dray tickets. On opening the doors of the warehouse a morning or two ago a fine, sleek and fat rat was found impaled on one of the files, pierced through and through, resting on the dray tickets, wriggling head and feet and tail in endeavors to free himself. It was believed that in attempting to walk along the projecting ledge of bricks near the ceiling to get under the floor the rat missed his footing and fell, and trying, catlike, to alight on his feet, struck on the file.—Savannah News.

In Memory of Halliwell-Phillips.

A memorial to the devoted Shakespearean scholar and biographer, the late Mr Halliwell-Phillips, has been raised in the chancel of the Collegiate church of Stratford-on-Avon in the form of a stained glass window. The subject is, "Elijah's Sacrifice on Mount Carmel." The window is situated immediately behind Shakespeare's monument and within a few feet of the poet's grave.—London Telegraph.

Delay in a Florida Sawmill.

A negro mill hand at Inwood ran his head against the cut-off saw Thursday afternoon while the saw was in full motion Result: The teeth of the saw will have to be rounded up and the saw hammered before the latter may be used again The negro only stopped work long enough to dress an inch long cut in his scalp, the result of the collision on his side.—Pensacola News.

Tidal Wave.

It is reported that the tidal wave caused by earthquakes in the Cocopah region, Arizona, reached a height of 100 feet Near Lerdo the Colorado river bed was divided by a chasm over ten feet wide into which the waters poured with thundering noise, and many fissures of less width and twenty to thirty feet long were suddenly made in the sun dried earth.—Exchange.

Dr. Collins' Bad and Good Luck.

Dr. S. A. Collins, a Connecticut physician, had an encounter with a wildcat in the northeastern part of the state which is rarely equaled in these days. He was called to attend a patient in Sunel Corners, and the road lay through a wild wood known as the "Devil's Hop Yard."

When about half way through the canyon the doctor's horse gave a snort of fear and refused to go ahead. Wondering at the cause of the animal's fright, the doctor leaned out of the carriage and peered into the bushes. He had hardly done so when two wildcats sprang from the boughs of a hemlock tree. One landed on the haunches of the horse and the other dropped into the bottom of the carriage and fastened its teeth in the flesh of the doctor's legs.

A desperate struggle ensued, in which the doctor, from loss of blood and strength, became unconscious. In an inside pocket of his coat the doctor carried a small medicine case. During the struggle this fell out and attracted the attention of the cat, which began to claw it and tear it with its teeth. In doing so it broke a bottle of chloroform and the contents seem to have stupefied it. A farmer passing over the road some time later found the doctor unconscious and the wildcat among a lot of broken bottles in the bottom of the carriage in a deep stupor.

The cat weighed fifty-two pounds, and was one of the largest ever killed in Connecticut.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Engineer Seery Strangely Hurt.

William H. Seery, engineer of the fast express which leaves New York in the afternoon at 4 o'clock and is due here at 6:05, met with a strange and probably fatal accident the other day near Monmouth Junction. While he was leaning out of the window of the cab, looking back at the train, a loose bolt flew up from the track, striking him in the head and fracturing his skull. He fell unconscious, with his body hanging out of the cab window.

The fireman, W. Harry Bowers, was in the tender at the time attending to the scoop, which takes up water from the track tank, and his attention was attracted by the blood which spurted on him from the engineer's head. He applied the airbrakes and brought the train to a stop. The unconscious engineer was lifted into the baggage car, and the fireman took the train through to Trenton. It is doubtful if Seery recovers.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Bullets Went Three Men at a Time.

Army and navy officers have been watching closely the military features of the insurrection in Chili, and the arms have been carefully examined by the authorities in this country. It appears that it was the Mannlicher gun, loaded with cartridges the size of cigarettes charged with a first cousin to gun cotton, and sending a ball nearly two inches long and three-tenths of an inch thick against Balmaceda's troops at the rate of from forty to sixty per minute from each gun, that did the business for the insurgent troops. The long, slender, hard pointed bullets were of steel, covered with a thin coat of copper, the soft metal being designed to follow the rifling of the barrel more accurately and with less wear to the gun than the naked steel would make. Single bullets went through two or three men at a time.—Washington Cor. Boston Journal.

THE STRANGE STORY OF A CURIOUS ADVERTISEMENT.

BY J. WEBSTER BAYNES.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Paul Duncan was missing. No cause could be assigned for his absence nor clue discovered as to his whereabouts. Elmsfold the home of Paul Duncan had at one time belonged to the Capesthornes, but the last owner, by that name, had been obliged on account of gambling debts to sell it and emigrate to the West Indies where some of his decendants had retrieved their fortunes, and one of them returned accompanied by a beautiful Creole wife and one son. He tried to regain the old home of Elmsfold, but Paul's father would not sell, so he had to be satisfied with the adjoining property known as Oakwood. The boy, Mortimer, and Paul Duncan saw much o each other, being schoolmates. Their fathers died within a few months of each other leaving them heirs to neighboring estates. In the course of time they became rivals for the hand of Ellen Corbielle and Mortimer went into a great passion and uttered dire threats when he was rejected and Paul gained the prize. Mortimer Capesthorne, felt that the Duncans had done him an irreparable injury in not reselling the property to himself or his father and when Paul won Ellen from him, this feeling was greatly intensified. He cursed Ellen and told her the time would come when they would both feel his power. Shortly afterwards he sold Oakwood and moved away, saying he intended to live abroad. Mabel Duncan was without companions of her own age and station, so she made a companion of her maid, Mary Mosscrop, a daughter of Paul Duncan's old nurse. Mary's parents lived at Glynn Ogwen. She had talked so much to Mabel about the beauties of the place, that Mabel finally secured permission from her mother to pay the old folks a visit. Nant Gwern was an old mansion near where Mary's folks lived. It belonged to a gentleman, nobody seemed to know anything about him as he had only lived there a few months when he departed, discharging all the servants, and leaving it in the care of an old couple named Williams. Nobody was allowed to see the inside of it, but Mary's father had no trouble in getting permission for the two girls to explore the interior of the queer old mansion, and they roamed about the place at will. They were in a room when they were frightened by a jack-daw, who flew in at the open window and proceeded to inspect the cinders on the hearth, when he found some object which he proceeded to examine leisurely.

CHAPTER IV.

WHAT JACK FOUND.

Jack's find evidently puzzled him much. He eyed it closely, turned this way and that, poked at it inquiringly, and in his endeavors to understand it, lost his hold of it, and falling off the chair, it rolled to Mabel's feet.

"Whatever is this queer-looking thing which Jack has found?" cried the child, as she picked it up. "It looks like a button, does it not; but what pretty blue stones these are, just like those mamma has in her brooch and earrings—turquoises, I think, she calls them."

Mary Mosscrop, taking the article in her hand, said quickly, "No Miss Mabel, it's not a button, but one of these things a gentleman fastens his cuffs with, solitaires I think they are called. It looks valuable, too, though the setting is tarnished and black as if it had been in the fire. You had better put it in your pocket, miss, and give it to Owens Williams when you get down, he may know who it belongs to. There are some letters on it, but I cannot very well make them out; perhaps some name."

"Well, now, is it not funny that Jack should find it? What sharp eyes he must have," said Mabel, as she put the treasure-trove away, as advised. "But see what he's doing now, admiring himself in the mirror in the other room," she added, and the three followed the bird, who seemed quite at home in this rumbling old mansion, and constituted himself the leader of the party, flying ahead of them, and uttering from time to time his curious cry of "Jack's here."

How long they would have spent wandering about the place, peeping into closets and cupboards still filled with articles of everyday use, as in the times when Nant Gwern was full of life and bustle, but now smelling damp and musty, playing hide and seek in the long picture gallery and armory, and following with childish glee the mischievous jackdaw, which seemed in the height of his glory, it would be hard to say; but the voice of old John Mosscrop called them to come at once, if they wanted to catch their return train at Oswestry, put a sudden stop to their merriment, reminding them that the best of good times must have an end.

It was with regret that Mabel parted with her new friends. She had had such a splendid day, she said. "Glyn Ogwen was so pretty, and Nant Gwern was so like a place in a story book, and everybody was so kind and good, she must come again if mamma would let her."

Mrs. Mosscrop kissed her good-bye with tears in her eyes; blessing her bonny face, and stroking her sunny hair, thinking meanwhile how proud the child's father would have been of her; her Master Paul, than whom no finer, more honest, manly gentleman ever lived, she often said, believing it, doubtless, as women often will when speaking or thinking of those they have helped to rear and nourish.

So came an end to Mabel's day at Glyn Ogwen. Little Annie cried when they left, the jackdaw followed the pony trap more than a mile on the road to Oswestry, and Mr. Mosscrop promised to send her the first young bird he could procure, so that she might have a pet Jack of her own.

It was the soft summer hour of gloaming, when wearied, but happy, they reached Elmsfold. Of course Mabel had a great budget of news to give to her mother, but Mrs. Duncan, seeing how tired the child was with her long days outing, packed her off to bed, saying—"You must keep all the story of the journey for another time." It was not for long that she kept it, however, for the next morning before her mother was dressed she was in her room chattering away, at double pressure, about Glyn Ogwen and its beauties. Whilst dilating with childish enthusiasm about Nant Gwern and its desolation, she suddenly withdrew her hand from her frock pocket with the exclamation, "Oh! mamma, what shall I do, I've brought away what Jack found in one of the rooms, and it will look as though I had stolen it? I did not tell you, but Jack found it among the ashes in one of the rooms at Nant Gwern, and I put it in my pocket intending to give it to Mr. Williams before we left, and I forgot all about it. See, mamma, here it is, Mary said it was valuable;" and Mabel held out her hand with the turquoise solitaire towards her mother.

Mrs. Duncan paid but little attention to the story, being busy fastening a small brooch in the simple creamy lace ruffle she wore round her neck; but when at length she took up the solitaire to examine it, her manner changed so suddenly that the child was startled. She turned very pale, clutched the stud convulsively for a second or two, and then stepping to the window eyed it with close attention. There was lettering on the plain gold which surrounded the delicate blue stones. The gold was tarnished and dirty, but she could make the wording out; as she read it her memory was carried back over a period of ten years to sunny Florence, where she had spent a month of such supreme happiness that it now looked like a dream. The words were but three followed by the date, "Ellen to Paul," but they conjured up a volume to Mrs. Duncan's mental vision. The solitaire was one of a pair she had made for her husband as a birthday present whilst spending the first few weeks of their married life at Florence. There could be no doubt on the point, the date settled that; how well she remembered it. But there were other memories connected with that small piece of jewellery of a more painful nature. Paul had worn them when he started on that fateful London journey from which he had never returned. This, too, was sure, for she had fastened them in his shirt cuffs herself on the morning of his departure. What more probable then that he wore them at the moment of his death, if he were dead; or if not when he formed that mysterious decision to absent himself from his home and friends, if ever such a decision had been formed by him.

"Tell me all about this Nant Gwern, what kind of a place is it, who owns it, where did you find this, who was with you; tell me all, all you know, all you saw there, every little detail you may have learned about it.

Poor Mabel was alarmed by her mother's strange outburst; but she set herself to go over her story again, trying to forget nothing of all that had occurred; but one question she could not answer, and that was as to who owned Nant Gwern. She had been told, but could not remember now; and Mrs. Duncan, who seemed strangely agitated, rang the bell for Mary Mosscrop, who was interrogated at length as to her knowledge of the subject.

"Yes, she knew the name of the proprietor of Nant Gwern. He was a Mr. Capesthorne. He had bought the place soon after she, Mary, had come to Elmsfold from Glyn Ogwen; she had never seen him and knew very little about him; except that he was unmarried, and his Christian name was something she could not remember, but it was a queer one."

"Was it Mortimer!" queried Mrs. Duncan, speaking very slowly.

"Yes, ma'am, that's the name," replied the girl; "do you know the gentleman, ma'am."
